James Davis has just completed the producing of a release for Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" series in which the most dangerous of all the hazardous stunts that have been performed for this series was photographed. Helen Gibson, to whom fear seems an unknown quantity, rides at breakneck speed to a drawbridge which is just being swung by crooks she is pursuing, and throwing a rope from the saddle to the superstructure of the bridge as it swings hangs to the rope and is swung out over the stream below to a height of one hundred feet. The Kalem Company is now building at Hollywood for these scenes a large and most substantial railway station. It will be of the same proportions as the elaborate Grand Hotel lobby and Stingaree sets.

George Bronson Howard, author of "The Love Pirates," the series of pictures now in preparation by James Horne at Kalem's Glendale studio, is in Los Angeles. Mr. Howard visited the Glendale studios and saw several scenes photographed for the series. He was pleased with the manner in which the series are being filmed for the screen and the elaborate settings used in its production.

Riverside to Be Filmed.

The Chamber of Commerce of Riverside, a thriving citrus city sixty miles to the east of Los Angeles, at its annual meeting and election decided to enter "pictures." Secretary Dudley presented a plan for getting a motion picture made of the city for use at the San Diego Panama Exposition this year and by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and others as opportunity afforded. The suggestion was adopted. R. H. Mauser, vice-president and producer of the Banner Company of San Mateo, will bring his company here and get out a thousand-foot reel showing characteristic Riverside scenes, with his company members putting on comedy high lights. Secretary Dudley said he believed he could finance the plan among the merchants and was instructed to go ahead.

Several other nearer cities are using films to advertise their advantages.

FIRE AT FINE ARTS STUDIO.

Entire Interior of Laboratory Damaged—Production Will Be Delayed Several Weeks.

Damage to the extent of perhaps twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars was done on the afternoon of Thursday, January 20, when a fire broke out in the printing room of the Fine Arts studios at Hollywood. The building was totally damaged. Several thousand feet of positive film was destroyed, and a small amount of negative film was lost. In the conflagration no one was injured. Every member of the studio force fought the blaze. D. W. Griffith and other prominent persons entered the burning frame building and rescued reels and cans of negative, valuable film which had just been finished. The entire interior of the laboratory where the film is printed was damaged. It will delay production for several weeks. The place will be rebuilt immediately. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Cast Selected for "Macbeth."

Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's cast for his Triangle film version of "Macbeth" has been announced. Constance Collier will be seen as Lady Macbeth. She has played this part with Sir Herbert in his London seasons and was secured by arrangement with Oliver Morosco. The remainder of the company as selected by John Emerson, assigned by David W. Griffith to make the production, includes twelve players who have appeared in Shakespearean roles, all but two having had parts in "Macbeth." The entire support is drawn from the Griffith permanent forces at the Fine Arts studios. Wilfred Lucas will be Macduff; Mary Elden, Lady Macduff; Spottiswoode Aitken, Duncan; Ralph Lewis, Banquo; Olga Grey, Lady Agnes, and I. Nowskowski, Malcolm. Miss Alden and Mr. Aitken will be remembered as having had prominent roles in "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Lucas has already been seen in several Triangle plays. The Tree production will be released in the early spring.

Mary Anderson Now Mrs. Goodfriend.

When Miss Mary Anderson left the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn she was entirely unaware of what fate had laid out for her in the west. No more is she Miss Mary, but Mrs. Pliny Goodfriend. Her husband is on the photographic staff under Rollin S. Sturgeon at the new Hollywood studios of the Vitagraph.

The couple have just returned from a several week's trip to Truckee.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Henry McRae has begun the production of his first film since his return to the producing staff of the Universal City studios. It will be "The Strife of the Iron Trails," a two-reel railroad story written by Frank M. Wiltermood. Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill are playing leads, with a supporting cast of well-known Big U players. One of the scenes was filmed this week down at a well-known cafe on Spring street, where a truckload of lights and various other props had been brought for the occasion. In addition to the cast, some seventy-five or more diners took a part in the picture and remained for several hours making atmosphere for the scenes.

Otis Turner this week began the production of "The Gay Lord Waring," a five-reel adaptation from Houghton Townley's novel prepared for the screen by F. McGrew Willis and featuring J. Warren Kerrigan. Lee Hill, the leading man in Henry McRae's new "101 Bison" company, is well known in local photoplay circles. He was for some time with the New York and then with the Crown Hill, Essanay and Vogue.

Blanche Sweet under the direction of William C. De Mille is at the Lasky ranch on locations filming exterior scenes of "The Blacklist," a feature production written especially for her by William C. De Mille and Marion Fairfax.

Mae Murray, the latest Lasky star, badly frightened George Melford, her director, and the rest of the company, one day last week, when she became lost in the sand dunes while on location for a picture. Miss Murray strolled away from the party and promptly lost her way.

Leo, the ferociously tame nine-year-old lion, who chases De Wolf Hopper and Fay Tichner through a number of scenes in "Sunshine Dad," is the studio pet of Fine Arts Film Company. When Leo is not playing animal leads he is kept in a substantial cage, where, to the amusement of the studio folks, he is fed once a day. Leo is the particular pet of Sir Beerbohm-Tree, the distinguished English actor.

At the Vitagraph, R. S. Sturgeon had recovered from the snow trip and was closeted with his secretary, scenarioist, and manager, doping out stuff for his newest Blue Ribboner, "God's Country and the Woman." Everyone was busy, and carpenters and laborers were toiling to finish the new laboratories.

We are informed that the National Film Company is contemplating moving to Tampa, Fla., having been offered financial inducements by that city to locate there. F. L. Porter, in charge of the Los Angeles plant of the National, stated he had received the information this week from William Parsons, president of the company. Mr. Parsons is now in New York and will return to Los Angeles about February 5.

When calling at the Morosco studios, this week, Manager Charles Eyton greeted us with a broad smile and said: "Come up on the stage and I'll show you a real set." He exhibited a large hallway set for "The Code of Marcia Gray," the Constance Collier story. This piece of stagecraft deserves credit. Instead of showing only the bannister and the first few steps the whole stairway was represented by good strong timbers and trimmings. The hangings, pictures and furniture were of the best, having been taken from a prominent Los Angeles home exclusively for this one picture.

The Norbig Company has put out its first cartoon picture, a one-reel comic, made by a new process, invented by Joseph Cammer, who also does the drawing. The first picture is called "Professor Wiseguy's Trip to the Moon," and is amusing. Much trick drawing and photography make this a startling picture. Mr. Norton, who heads the concern, says more of these funny films will be made and released on one of the big programs.

Eddie Foy and the Keystone Film Company, who were recently advised by Judge Jackson to get together with a view to compromising Mr. Foy's suit for salary, were not able to report an amicable adjustment of their troubles this week. The case was set for trial April 25, and information was vouchsafed that at that time Mr. Foy will be made a cross-defendant in a suit for damages. The company expects to charge that Mr. Foy would not follow the instructions of the director; that he argued and killed time, keeping a high-priced company of actors and actress waiting. In yesterday's preliminary stage Judge Jackson sustained the demurrer to Mr. Foy's complaint. A supplementary complaint was filed, and the film company will file its answer.

Moving pictures to teach the proper care and best uses of forest reserves are to be shown in cities in Southern California by Forest Supervisor J. R. Hall. Mr. Hall will arrange with a theater to have the pictures shown and will probably supply a lecturer to explain them. One of the subjects will be entitled "Fire Dangers," and will show how carelessness with matches and all other forms of fire each year cause thousands of dollars' worth of damage and destroy the beauty of thousands of acres of fine mountain country. Other pictures will show lumbering camps, cattle grazing and camp life and recreation in the forest.

An effort will be made by officials of the state labor bureau this week to amicably settle the controversy regarding salaries which arose between nearly 100 extras, an employment agency and a local film company a few days ago. At that time the extras stormed the labor office, declaring 50 cents had been offered them by the film company for two days' engagement in lieu of a promised $3 a day.

From San Diego papers we learn that E. Wilson Farr, of the Maya Film Company, has recently returned from a photographic expedition in the wilds of Central America. Mr. Farr went on his expedition in the early part of 1915. With native guides he penetrated the most remote portions of the jungle districts. The explorer was well received by the Indians, some of whom had never seen a white man, was invited to their lizard and monkey feasts, and was offered more than one blushing belle for his bride. The Misskito Indians were particularly hospitable. Many scenes also taken of the ruins and monuments of old Indian villages, reproductions of which are seen in the California building at the San Diego Exposition. The Maya Film Company was organized in the fall of 1914 to make educational motion pictures.

The ball and benefit entertainment of the American Film employes at Santa Barbara was a success. About 500 couples enjoyed dancing on the big floor of the new glass studio, which was gayly decorated with colored lights. The dance opened with the "Flying an American Rag," composed for the occasion by James Campilia and George Clancy. The grand march was led by Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Lynch and Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Laggley. A number of film players from Los Angeles were present, including Tom Mix, leading man and director for Selig; Gus Inglis, of Willis and Inglis; Hal Cooley, of the Signal Company; Miss Ella Hall, of the Universal, and Miss Mabel Condon.

New York Cafe in Kalem Series

Furnishings from Defunct Cafe de la Paris Purchased for Motion Picture Settings.

A CARLOAD of costly properties that left New York last week for the Kalem Glendale studios included many dazzling furnishings that will give persons outside New York their first glimpse of the splendor of the Cafe de la Paris, later Martin's. This resort of Bohemian New York, considered the most ornately furnished lobster palace that ever glittered on the White Way, recently passed under the auctioneer's hammer after an eventful career of brilliance and brevity. Kalem was fortunate in securing a carload of the furnishings from a dealer who bought heavily at the auction and the material is being shipped to Director Horne's company staging the new George Bronson-Howard series.

The Cafe de la Paris furnishings will be used in a restaurant set that is promised to surpass even the same company's famous Grand Hotel set in completeness and beauty. The size of the set may be imagined when it is said that over three hundred fashionably dressed extras will be necessary for the scenes of gayety that have the restaurant for their background.

With the shipment of special properties for the new Bronson-Howard series there also went a number of gowns for Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby which the two stars ordered from Fifth avenue modistes as soon as the production of the series was decided on and the players had learned from the early stories that they would be given an opportunity to display fashionable frills in the production.

Under the direction of James W. Horne, work is now progressing on the second episode of the series at the Glendale, California, studios. It is expected that by the time the release date for the first episode is settled the company will be far enough ahead on productions that come up to the high standard set for the series to make unnecessary any neckbreaking haste later to meet the weekly release dates. Kalem's expectations for the Bronson-Howard series may be readily seen from these elaborate preparations.

Opening of the Biltmore

Hammerstein's Lexington Avenue Opera House Rechristened and Dedicated to Pictures.

THE Biltmore theater, formerly the Lexington Avenue Opera House, at Lexington avenue and Fifty-first street, New York City, opened last Sunday as a motion picture theater devoted to the showing of the Paramount program. The bill will be changed twice a week and will consist of a Paramount feature and six other numbers, two vocal solos being included. A symphony orchestra of thirty pieces, under the direction of M. C. Rumsey, is a feature of the entertainment. Fannie Ward in "The Cheat" was the Paramount feature the first half of the opening week, and Geraldine Farrar in "Temptation" headlined the latter half. The vocal soloists were Miss Elsa May and Emerson Williams.

Next week's Paramount offerings consists of Mary Pickford in "The Foundling," and Constance Collier in "Tongues of Men."

The stage of the Biltmore has been given a special setting and equipped with the latest devices for the showing of moving pictures; the spacious auditorium is equally well supplied with the means of insuring the pleasure and comfort of the spectator. The house has been leased by the Biltmore Theater Corporation. Clinton W. Moffatt is the manager and Willard D. Coxey, the press representative.

FRITZI BRUNETTE IN SELIG FEATURE.

Miss Fritzi Brunette, the Selig star actress, who makes her initial debut in V-L-S-E productions in the Selig Red Seal play, "Unto Those Who Sin," released March 6, is one of the most popular of screen favorites. Her remarkable beauty and charming personality have endeared her to the hearts of picture theater patrons throughout this country and Europe, and the versatility she has displayed in playing anything from light comedy roles to leads in big productions has caused most favorable comment by critics of film subjects. She has appeared in many of the Selig one, two and three-reel photoplays. Her enaction of the role of "Nadia," a working girl, who becomes enamored with gold and ultimately becomes a scheming woman, is a character study in heredity and environment. That the wages of sin are death is clearly proven in this wonderful story. Miss Brunette wears eighteen costly and beautiful gowns during the course of the Selig drama, "Unto Those Who Sin," which was written by James Oliver Curwood.

Working On the "Movie Civic Ball"

Trigger, has appointed the following members of the Screen Club and New York Exhibitors' Association on the working committees: Tickets, J. H. Anna Q. Nilsson

ANNA Q. NILSSON, the charming motion picture actress who has recently been cast for the leading role with Robert Warwick in "To Him That Hath" for the Premo Company, was born in Sweden, and came to this country only nine years ago.

Miss Nilsson has light brown hair, delicate and refined features, blue eyes and a gracious and charming bearing which comes of old country training. She is a talented linguist, speaking French and German, besides her native Scandinavian tongue and English. Her aptitude for learning languages is shown by her ready adoption of the English tongue.

Anna Q. Nilsson.

Anna Q. Nilsson had no idea of becoming an actress for the motion pictures. She was so beautiful that she had been asked by Stanlaw, the artist, to pose for him. She did, and her face became the subject of most of his poster and illustrating work. She became known as the "Stanlaw Girl."

The Kalem Company became interested in the pretty artist's model and sent for her, offering her a position in the company. Miss Nilsson went to the Kalem Company and stayed with it until somewhat over a year ago.

Perhaps her best-known work since leaving the Kalem Company was "Regeneration," produced by Fox, in which she starred.

In her new picture, "To Him That Hath," the pretty light-haired actress is cast in the role of a society girl who becomes tired of a life of luxury and decides that she wants to do some good in the world. In her work she comes across a man of high ideals who is struggling for the good of humanity and who works a great change in her own life.

AVIATOR PETERS WITH METRO.

George W. Peters, who is as well known as a professional aviator as he is an expert motion picture camera man, has been engaged by the Popular Plays and Players, and is now at work under Director Francis J. Grandon, doing the camera work on the new Petrova feature, "The Soul Market." Until recently Mr. Peters was employed by the Keystone Company, making their principal comedy films. Before that he worked for the Biograph, Famous Players and Selig companies.

Mr. Peters, who is known as "the flying photographer," was the first man to make motion pictures from an aeroplane.

"Hazards" in Two Reels

Popular Single Reel Railroad Series Featuring Helen Gibson to Be Extended in Near Future.

IN confirmation of the news in The Moving Picture World of two weeks ago, concerning expansion and increased activity at the Kalem Pacific Coast studio, producing railroad pictures, comes the announcement that the "Hazards of Helen" after over a year of success as a single reel series would in the near future become a two-reel subject. In connection with the recent purchase of a considerable quantity of railroad equipment this latest announcement indicates a strong belief in the future of the pictures which already hold the record for longevity in the series field.

In explaining the decision to increase the length of the railroad pictures a Kalem official said that it was made after serious discussion with exhibitors in all parts of the country and because of a desire to do the railroad pictures full justice. "A number of exhibitors," says the official, "have written us declaring that they find the 'Hazards' among the most popular offerings on their programmes, and that while they feature them strongly now, the series would offer even greater advertising possibilities if produced in two reels. This has had considerable to do with our decision to make the change. Then again, as we increased the equipment and otherwise strengthened the company, and secured better and better stories we found it becoming more difficult to do the subjects justice in the single reel length. For instance, Helen Gibson, who was well known as a daring circus rider before we enticed her to pictures, has been continually urging us to allow her to show some thrilling feats on horseback in the pictures. At different times we have introduced some scenes of this kind in the single reel pictures, but with the series produced in two reels, Helen, who is as reckless on horseback as she is in railroad stunts will have full opportunity to prove the claim that she is 'the most daring actress in pictures.' I wish that I were at liberty to tell you some of the thrilling exploits that she has suggested in letters to us and others that the authors have laid out for her. It is perhaps sufficient to say that they will be original—there's a surprise as well as a thrill in each one. And the best part of it is that the railroad atmosphere in all of our pictures is authentic, for in addition to having the stories written by railroad men, we have always had the hearty co-operation of the railroad companies in staging the pictures."

The date of the change and the release of the first two reel "Hazard" has not been announced. It is understood that the company began work this week on the intial two-reel story and that no rush will be made to make the change, as is it thought best to have a number of releases ready and thus relieve the company from the necessity of meeting a regular release date. Meanwhile, Helen Gibson goes through life smilingly, as shown in the accompanying photograph, apparently not worrying in the slightest over the perilous course that has been mapped out for her by the scenarios for the forthcoming "Hazards."

Colin Campbell, Selig director, has returned to Los Angeles after a sojourn in Chicago, where he discussed plans for filming "The Crisis," with William N. Selig.

The activities of the closing year of the Hepworth Co. have been centralized upon a two-reeler entitled "The Recalling of John Gray"; a four-part feature on the song, "Annie Laurie," and a romantic picture with a strong flavor of H. G. Wells' story of Acpyomis Island, entitled "As the Sun Went Down."

Charles Urban, the patentee of the color process known as Kinemacolor, presented this week at a vaudeville house in town in conjunction with Will Jury and the Gaumont Company, a new anthology of naval and military pictures in monochrome and color. Since the revocation of its patent the company controlling "Kinemacolor" in Britain has been practically inoperative, but a strong attempt is moving for its reconstruction.

Motion picture color photography shows every prospect of being one of the toughest scientific problems of the century and it is not as new an idea as many experimenters seem to think. Friese-Greene, of Brighton, one of the pre-Edison pioneers of monochrome films, has spent many years and a small fortune in researches for the motographic millenium and his observations were not distantly connected with the cause of the Kinemacolor litigation. Unfortunately for Friese-Greene—who is a man British kinema science can ill afford to lose—his inventions were never properly commercialized and his present position has become somewhat precarious. So much indeed that a trade fund already substantially augmented has been formulated for his benefit.

The successor to "The Jockey of Death," by the Italian producer, A. Vay, entitled "The Circus of Death," has been purchased for America and this country by Jury's. Like its predecessor, its mainspring is a hair-raising thrill with a fight on a factory chimney between a woman and a huge ape.

The London County Council has now withdrawn its proposal to allow only those films to be exhibited that have been certified by Redford & Co.

Mr. Wagner, of the Edison Company, this week amplifies the firm's policy in regard to Edison releases in Great Britain, which, as hitherto, are to continue upon the open-market principle. One drawback to this option has been that exhibitors must order five weeks ahead of release date, but this will shortly be reduced to as many days.

NASHVILLE MAN WINS TRADE MARK CONTEST.

Bluebird Features in Full Swing

Four Releases of Widely Varying Nature Introduce the New Program of Classics.

FOLLOWING a preliminary release in Greater New York, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., this week make the nation-wide distribution of "Jeanne Dore," in which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt presents the last play in which she appeared on the stage of her own theater in Paris. "Jeanne Dore" made a fine start for the new feature program, and the releases promised for the immediate future bid fair to equal in general excellence and importance the Bernhardt introduction, is the belief of the Bluebird management. And it believes further that in building largely upon achievement rather than florid and unfulfilled promises the Bluebird program is bound to attract more than ordinary attention from the exhibitor and through him the general public. The release for January 31 is Helen Ware in "Secret Love," converted to the screen from Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's very widely read novel, "That Lass O' Lowries," with Harry Carey in Miss Ware's chief support.

Totally different in theme from the introductory Bluebirds will be "Undine," set for release February 7, and still further diversified will be "Hop, the Devil's Brew," announced for February 14. There is a quota of other features ready for distribution, but their titles and the order of release is an announcement still in reserve. But it is known that they will mark a further diversity in Bluebird service, plus excellence in all details.

"Undine" promises to uncover possibilities for a sensational vogue—and "uncover" is a word well chosen. Ida Schnall, who is the featured one, is an athlete and swimmer of renown, bearing upon her chest numerous medals won in aquatic contests and possessor of numerous cups and trophies for swimming and feats of high diving.

De La Motte Foquet's fairy tale has not been followed literally by Henry Otto in producing "Undine," as the sequence of the story was not adaptable to pictures; but the theme has been employed with considerable faithfulness. Picturesque atmosphere was found on the Catalina Islands, coast of California, with the Pacific in which the nymphs and mermaids might disport themselves and the tropical forest to provide landscape.

"Hop, the Devil's Brew," fourth in the Bluebird series, tells an exciting story of opium smuggling along the west coast, its basis being fact and its details authentic. Many of its most sensational passages were worked out under the direct supervision of the Customs authorities in San Francisco.

General Manager M. H. Hoffman believes with apparent good reason that Bluebird photoplays have arrived at a time when the feature field was in need of presentations evenly high class, with star, scenario and production carried along on an even balance. He claims for Bluebird that well-adjusted details, so long as they make for excellence, mean more than a "name" that carries an inferior play or shoddy production.

Those who have witnessed the early showings of "Secret Love" declare the Helen Ware film to be right up to high standard as a "follow-up"; and when "Undine" is shown there is sure to be an equal, if not greater, public interest in the fairy tale and its sensational environment.

Florence Lawrence at Washington

Director Stuart Paton Secures Scenes for Screen Adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's Story, "The Elusive Isabel."

CONTRARY to first reports, we understand that Florence Lawrence's first picture is to be an adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's novel, "The Elusive Isabel." For the purpose of getting necessary scenes for several productions Miss Lawrence and her company, among whom is Inez Marcel, wife of the late William V. Ranous, and formerly of the Vitagraph Company, spent several days in Washington, D. C., where they secured some excellent scenes taken in the senate chamber, and at other points in and about the Capitol.

An amusing incident happened on the arrival of Miss Lawrence at the Washington depot. It was seven-thirty in the morning, quite too early for an artistic temperament to be aroused; so little Flo, still in her pajamas, failing in an attempt to make a proper exit, was obliged to back down two miles and a half into the car yards. A smile that brought a special engine and coach to the rescue forgot a little watch that slumbered under a pillow. Report has it that the watch was sent by special messenger to her hotel next day.

Other members of Miss Lawrence's company are Paul Panzer, Sidney Bracy, Wallis Clark, William Welsh, Curtis Benton and Paul Crampton.

"Claridge" for Quality

New State Rights Organization Enters the Field with Agnes Egan Cobb As General Manager.

IN the Long Acre Building, Forty-second street and Broadway, New York City, are situated the offices of the newly formed film organization, Claridge Films, Inc., of which Mrs. Agnes Egan Cobb is the vice-president and general manager.

Those familiar with the growth and development of the film business during the past seven years will have no difficulty in identifying Mrs. Cobb as one of the most industrious and successful personalities in the business. She has held secretarial and selling positions in about ten of the leading film companies of the United States, a circumstance which has brought her into relations with exchange men, state right buyers and motion picture exhibitors all over the country. The result is that Mrs. Cobb enjoys a very large measure of trust and esteem.

Claridge Films, Inc., is at present an expert buying and selling organization, composed of financially well supported film men, of whom Mrs. Cobb is the active head. The policy of the company is to offer to state right buyers and exhibitors none but clean and strongly dramatic pictures with well known stars and good stories that have a universal appeal.

The first release is "The Heart of New York," directed by Walter McNamara of "Traffic in Souls" fame. Robert T. Haines is the star of this picture.

RUTH STONEHOUSE.

MISS RUTH STONEHOUSE, an Essanay leading woman, was the hit of the evening at a benefit performance given recently by the Chicago Examiner. She interpreted several of her well-known dances, including one which she originated herself, "The Storm." This is a beautiful dance showing the spirit of the storm from its inception through its turbulent mood to its death. In this she wears a wonderful diamond headpiece which reflects the various lights, representing lightning. The dress is of white chiffon blending into a deep blue, giving a startling cloud effect. She also interpreted Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" and "Salome."

Ruth Stonehouse.

Miss Stonehouse was born in Victor, Colorado, September 28, 1895. After graduating from a Chicago high school, she took up aesthetic dancing. She appeared in amateur entertainments and was so successful that she soon went on the professional stage. The attention of an Essanay director was attracted to her grace and charm and he engaged her to play with Essanay in 1913. Since then she has played leading roles in scores of photoplays, her success being marked from the beginning. Among the notable features in which she has appeared are "The Slim Princess," "The Crimson Wing," "The Alster Case," "When My Lady Smiles" and "The Wood Nymph." She has beautiful light brown hair and brown eyes.

NEW PICTURE THEATER IN KARACHI, INDIA.

Consul James Oliver Laing, Karachi, India, writes in "Commerce Reports" that the Emperor Cinema, new and very complete, has been opened in Karachi. This gives the city two large up-to-date motion picture theaters. There is also a small house in the bazar for natives. The two modern theaters are doing a good business as there is practically no other amusement here in the evening. Two performances are given, the first at 7 p. m., the second about 10 o'clock. No shows are given in the daytime.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IT is strange. So many people have become interested in the moving picture business! "Film men answer an editorial"; the next is "Declares Sunday Pictures Illegal"; the next, "Wish Theatres Open to Minors"; the next is, "First Blow Struck at Censorship Bill."

If a real friend of the moving picture business, why tumble blocks in the way?

Why ask, "Why the National Board of Censorship" at this time? Why was the question not asked four years ago?

Some one said some years ago, "O, Lord, save me from my friends?" So the appeal goes forward today. There are friends in the moving picture business today who would help us, but unfortunately they either do not know their way, or they are misled.

In the argument before the Congressional Committee—the Educational Committee—on the Federal censorship bill—the Rev. Dr. Crafts was put upon the stand. He is the chief in the movement for universal reform. How he escaped the vacation trip on the "Freelunch II" is for himself to explain. However, he felt it was his duty to remain on this side and fight the "devil's own." He is a crafty worker. He is the embodiment of his Brooklyn predecessor.

Representative Platt, of New York, asks him: "Why is there any more reason that films should be censored than the stage or the press?"

The crafty clergyman replies: "I have been working for years for a censorship of the stage."

Will Rev. Wilbur Crafts present today a copy of a bill that he has presented against the stage?

Rev. Wilbur Crafts is entitled to everything that was said against him before the committee. He is not fair. He said before that committee: "There are four murders in 'Hamlet' that never affected me. But every time I go to see a murder in a wild west picture show I want to kill somebody."

* * *

Mr. (or Rev.) Crafts does not tell the truth. When Cain swung the club that killed his brother, did the reverend gentleman have the same feeling?

I felt some satisfaction in the attention that the opponents to the Federal censorship bill gave to its promoter. Because I feel he is one of the men of the world who is seeking undeserved notoriety. He is at the head of international reform, yet he has not figured as a mere unit in the work of salvation of peace. He would rather "lobby" with Georgia, Alabama and Virginia for that which is giving him his salary than he would to go back into the pulpit and do honest, save souls work.

Who is the representative head of the international reform work? Why is he lobbying about Washington instead of being in the pulpit and trying to save souls? Motion pictures have closed saloons. Has he done as well?

Why the introduction of this censorship bill by a Southerner? Why the exclusive public endorsement of it by the State School Superintendent of Virginia and the Society of Friends of Baltimore? Is all morality absorbed by the south? For goodness sake, give the north a chance to prove that a little morality exists north of the Dixie line. If obscure pulpit pounders and Senate Satellites are to control them, let us drop a blank screen.

Understand me, I do not wish to say that the "bloody flag" shall be floated, but I do maintain that there shall be equal recognition. Hoke Smith's name has been mentioned in connection with the Federal censorship bill. Hughes is the father of the bill. It is up to Hughes to say whether or not Hoke Smith has anything to do with it. It is but a fair challenge. Hoke or Hughes? It makes no difference which is behind the bill. It is simply a question as to how to handle the promoter. We've handled this man, Hoke, before, but this man Hughes (we think he is a Welshman) is a comparatively new proposition. This man Crafts is also a keen one. He goes to the superintendent of Virginia schools for endorsement. He also goes to the Society of Friends. He has seen Booth and Barrett stab each other—he has seen the "Black Crook," but he has never seen anything to equal the pictures. Tell the truth, Crafts, what did you see in your student days? Did you ever see what Pankhurst saw? Do you see today, in the motion pictures, what you saw in your student days?

Don't quibble. You are trying to earn your salary, and I don't blame you. But don't oppress. I am willing to respect you as a clergyman, but you must sustain your pulpit. When you come out for notoriety, you must expect to get it. There is no such thing as "international reform," and you know it. You are a clergyman. Your work is to save souls. Your place is the pulpit. If you become a politician and a lobbyist, you must expect to be treated as such, and such you are in the public eye.

The writer cannot see how a man of such apparent ability can have the "brass" to come to the front in the halls of Congress and present bills with such a limited backing. And he has the "brass" to go and speak before the committee and say he has been trying to reform the stage for years. Where is the bill he had prepared?

How is that the murders that you saw in "Hamlet" never helped you in your work "for years for a censorship of the stage," and yet within the past two years you have been twice before Congress against motion pictures? Your very words condemn you. You are not fair. Personally, I feel you are but a figure-head for others.

Now, that I have paid my respects to the chief reformer, I want to say a few words to the men within the ranks. A superabundance of bravado has perhaps misled some of your most prominent and distinguished producers into an over-abundance of expression. Technically, no one connected with the motion picture business desires the operation of censorship. I say technically. Space will not permit a discussion of voluntary censorship at this time. But people who do not know how and why the National Board of Censorship was established should not be too promiscuous in their comments until they know what they are talking about. The existing Board of National Censorship can be endorsed by everyone without surrendering, in the least detail, their argument as to the constitutionality of official censorship. Even though that board, as has been claimed, was under the pay of the producers whose pictures were passed upon, there is abundant reason for its existence. The writer feels that he knows why the board was established. He knows the good it has done. If those less acquainted with the pioneer days of the business consistently differ with him he will be satisfied. But when the writer fills these columns again he will attempt to show that the inauguration of the National Board of Censorship was a movement entirely devoid of any intention to surrender constitutional rights, but for the betterment of the trade. Few of the men who are now writing and commenting upon the existence of the National Board of Censorship know of the conditions of the time. If they did, and knew the true conditions, they would not at this time precipitate a discussion which may have an important bearing upon the issue at Washington.

UNIVERSAL GETS AUGUSTUS PHILLIPS.

Augustus Phillips, late Edison star and director, has joined Universal. Manager Julius Stern has assigned him to a strong part in "Why Mrs. Kentworth Lied," which Director Matt Moore is producing and also appearing in, making two directors in the acting cast of one picture. Since Ben Wilson and Charles Ogle left the Edison studio, Mr. Phillips has been considered their most popular male player. He was with that studio for almost four years, has the legions of admirers that continued appearance in one firm's film gives the actor, and was really for this reason engaged by Mr. Stern, who is ever seeking actors whom the picture audiences know. "Why Mrs. Kenworth Lied," which is a comedy in two reels, finds the popular Jane Gail as leading woman.

The McGabbs Enjoy a War Drama.

(Stout, red-faced Mrs. McGabb leading; short, thin, submissive-looking Henry, her husband, following, and red-haired, pug-nosed Willie fetching up in the rear, the McGabb family trails down the aisle in search of a seat; house in darkness, last hundred feet of a comedy flickering on the screen.)

Mrs. McG.—Here's three seats, Henry. You and Willie go in first so's I can have the aisle.

Willie—Aw, Ma! C'm on down front more! I wanna go down front where I c'n watch the pianna feller wiggle his ears!

Mrs. McG.—We'll sit HERE, young man! The pictures is easier to watch a little ways off.

Willie—But I wanna see the soldiers die, Ma!

Mrs. McG.—You can see 'em die just as dead here as you can nearer. There! It's a comfort to get off my feet.

Willie—Oh, goody! This is the war pitcher, now, Ma! "The Union Spy!" Tommy Jones says it's great! Oh, lookit, Pa—lookit the sojers on horseback! Are them real sojers, Pa, or just actors? Hey, ain't the horses fat! Is that what makes the sojers legs stick out and makes 'em bounce so? Lookit 'em gallop. What makes 'em look so scared, Pa, is the enemy comin'?

Mrs. McG.—Not yet, I guess. I guess they're afraid they'll fall off.

Willie—Oh, lookit, Pa, there's gonna be a battle! Zowie! Lookit the sojers gettin' shot. Hey Pa, when they fall over dead, ain't they supposed to stay dead? Didja see that feller die and then open his eyes when the horse almost stepped on him?

Mr. McG.—He didn't want to get hurt. He's got to fight again in the next battle.

Willie—Aw, Pa, them ain't real sojers. Why, they shoot without aimin' or nothin'. That skinny one shot way over the head of the one with whiskers and the one with whiskers fell right off his horse! Oh, lookit, they're gettin' licked. They're runnin' away. The general told 'em all to beat it! Say, Pa, I thought generals had armies of thousands and thousands of men and this one ain't got but forty—I counted 'em. And some of them is dead!

Mrs. McG.—I think it was a shame to make them actors fight battles in such a pourin' rain! The poor things might get pneumony and die in real earnest.

Willie—Aw, Ma, that aint rain! That's scratches on the filum—it's been used so many times it's got all scratched up. Gee, I'd like to've seen it when it was new! Say, Pa, I wonder what makes 'em wheel their horses like that every time. Didja ever notice how every time the sojers get on their horses instead of ridin' right off, they wheel' em around on their hind legs and then go off lickety-larrup?

Mr. McG.—It ain't the soldiers, Willie, it's the horses themselves. Probably the camera man hasn't shaved for a week and the horses don't recognize him. They think his face is a bunch of hay and then when they see it ain't they're scared to death!

TWO "VIM" COMEDIES A WEEK HEREAFTER.

The growing demand for Vim comedies has made it necessary to increase their output. Hereafter two Vims will be released each week, on Thursday and Friday, on the General Film Program.

Two added features on the Vim staff have been made in Fernandez Perez, a world-renowned comedian, who has made a remarkable record in Europe, as a star of the Ambrosia Film Company of Italy, and Elsie MacLeod, who was secured by the Vim Company, in competition with a number of other companies who made her very attractive offers. Miss MacLeod will support "Bungles" in a series of startling and decidedly unique slapstick comedies.

Burns and Stull, as "Pokes and Jabbs," and Babe Hardy and Billy Ruge, as "Plump and Runt," will continue to turn out their amazingly funny comedies.

LAEMMLE SENDS OTTO TO NEW YORK.

Henry Otto, Universal director who recently completed the beautiful photoplay "Undine," has been sent to New York by President Laemmle, where he is to direct feature productions for the Big U organization.

Otto will proceed directly to the new studios of the Universal Company at Leonia, N. J., which have just been completed at a cost of half a million dollars and which are known as "Universal City Junior."

Orrall Humphrey, who scored a hit as "Marmaduke Smythe" in "The Diamond From the Sky," will head another American (Mutual) company. This will be a comedy company.

Mary Fuller has just completed "Madame Cubist," an eccentric play of two reels. It was eccentric in many ways, being an eccentric drama, with eccentric settings and Miss Fuller wore very eccentric and sensational gowns.

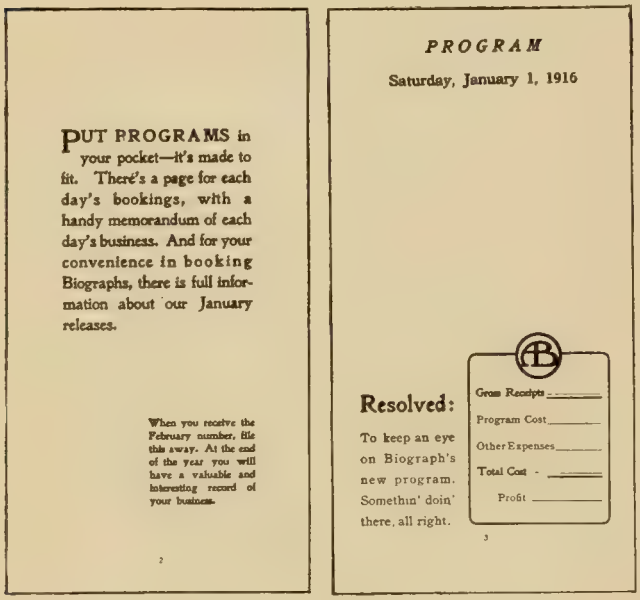
Harry Dunkinson, comedian of the Essanay Company, is recovering from injuries sustained by a fall from the second floor of the new studio last week. Dunkinson, while working in an Ade fable, climbed to the second floor in pursuit of an imaginary thief. There was no floor slipped between them. Luckily the ground was soft and he escaped serious injury.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Bully for A. B.

PERHAPS you have been the happy recipient of a safety razor and you with a luxuriant whisker on your face it took years to raise. Perhaps it was not that, but merely that you have been given something you do not want. Then hand it to whoever it was up at the Biograph who gave birth to the idea of the Program. If you are a G. F. exhibitor probably you have one, but if you are not, see if you cannot coax one out of the company, anyhow. In the



PUT PROGRAMS in your pocket—it's made to fit. There's a page for each day's bookings, with a handy memorandum of each day's business. And for your convenience in booking Biographs, there is full information about our January releases.
When you receive the February number, file this away. At the end of the year you will have a valuable and interesting record of your business.

PROGRAM
Saturday, January 1, 1916
Resolved:
To keep an eye on Biograph's new program. Somethin' doin' there, all right.
Gross Receipts
Program Cost
Other Expenses

first place it is handier than the traditional pocket in the shirt, for you have to send the shirt to the laundry. In the second place, it works about as hard as any piece of advertising we know of. The first, the January issue, consists of 64 pages and stiff cover 3¼ by six inches. It runs for one month. The first inside cover page gives the releases for January. The last white page and inside back cover give the lists for November and December; a three months' calendar that covers all you need to know. The handiness is shown by the two pages reproduced. They are facing pages, for the scheme of the book is two pages to a day, one carrying a blank space for your program, no matter what it is, and the other to advertise Biographs, though we have selected for reproduction the explanatory page.

It's chief appeal to this department, however, is not its utility, though it is useful in the extreme. It points an object lesson in making space work. It does not obtrude, but it works every minute. Take, for example, the first release, which comes on a Monday. Here the text for the Sunday sheet says "Tomorrow, the Lesser Evil." Then on Tuesday the advertising sheet takes the cast and synopsis and the record sheet reminds again of the release. You cannot overlook it. When there is no release immediate or impending, then the space to the left of the financial statement reads something similar to the entry for January 7th, which states that "Biograph posters bring people into the house and Biograph pictures bring them back again." In the same way there are such lines as "If you are getting a thirty-day service on the Three Reel Biograph, you ought to be putting up your paper for that wonderful picture, 'A Poor Relation with Thomas Jefferson.'"

In brief the Biograph starts out to give you a page a day for your program and financial record in a book that will go into the vest pocket easily. It never interferes with that space for its own talks, but it prints a lot of its own matter on each page, without interfering with the purpose for which the booklet is issued.

Can you say the same thing about your own house program? If you can, you belong, for that is just what you should do—talk all the time and yet never get in the way.

We do not know who started this Biograph stunt and we are not particularly interested, but we do rise to remark that it is about as fine an example of good advertising of any sort as we have seen in a long time. It's a hundred percent good from front to back. And write it down that it is good merely because it is mutually useful.

House Organs.

Editors of house organs should remember that their papers are to be used in advertising their own business and not the other man's. If the rival house is ramshackle and dangerous, you keep still about it. Let the building authorities and the local papers take notice. It does not look pretty in your own sheet and it will not be believed. It will naturally be supposed that you have other reasons than a kindly desire to be helpful to the community and the most certain way of helping the other man along is to create a feeling of sympathy for him. This is the most elementary proposition in showmanship, and yet we have three examples of attacks. Don't let your temper get the best of you. The other man may be all you say and think he is, but don't tell your thoughts. Swallow them, even though they do choke you. It doesn't help any to have a lot of people go around laughing and saying that Dash must be hurting you a lot to make you froth at the mouth the way you do. A house organ is to advertise your house and it is run on wind, but not on hot air.

Contest Schemes.

Here is a letter from a correspondent down South. The writer is not in any way connected with the exhibiting end, but is interested through her script work. It should make interesting reading for showmen:

> The Blank manager is running a prize scheme which I believe is handled by a company working this idea, in other parts of the state. The Dash man told me that his advice was for everyone to keep out of contests and that his business never recovered from the contest he ran last fall. He says there are people still mad with him who refuse to enter his place and that he has lost more in regular patrons quitting him than he made from the temporary interest in the contest.

Of course the contest was thrown off the track through bad outside management, but unless you can control every phase of a contest and can have the backing of business men who will assure a clean bill of health, keep out.

Real Money.

Startling indeed is the advertising of the Strand, Hoboken, N. J. It is odd in every way. In the first place the outside is a sheet of blue stock heavy weight 7½ by 12. This is folded twice to get a page 3¾ by 6 inches. From a slit in the front page extends part of a perfectly good one dollar bill with the legend in reproduced handwriting "There's Money in it—really." Inside is the announcement that the folder will be accepted as ten cents toward the purchase of any reserved seat, and pasted to the facing page is a folded form letter going more fully into details, this on white paper and in imitation typewriting. The only touch lacking is the printed head for the letter sheet.

Using portions of a dollar bill is a most novel touch. Presumably the answer is found in that fact that the Treasury will redeem at face two-thirds of a bill, but a few thousand of these cut up for advertising purposes is apt to result in a visit from the Secret Service men. The ruling is to provide against accident; not to encourage it. Apart from that the device is one of the most startling we have seen.

Mr. Chenoweth Changes.

H. A. Chenoweth has moved over to the Opera House, New Milford, Mass. He sends in an announcement of a potato and onion matinee, a potato or onion and one cent admitting a child to a morning matinee. The money and vegetables are to be turned over to the Salvation Army. The children have to be under twelve years of age. There is no reason why this scheme should not prove popular everywhere.

You Have To.

One of the Universal exchanges in the gulf section turns out a sheet to exhibitors. After five and a half inches of unleaded six point it breaks in with a boxed "Read the above over carefully, men." It must be read carefully if it is to be read at all. In addition to the tiny size it is all messed up with capitalized lines. And there is not just the five inches, but fourteen inches. It is too much of a job for the eyes. It would pay them to set in eight point and lead with two point. Then it would be read. As it is they set a bad example to the houses they serve.

Another Old-Timer.

It beats all how the old timers drop out for a time and then bob up again. Now it's William Barie, Jr., who comes to the surface. A year or so ago he was just getting away from Wichita, Kansas, and that's a good place to get away from in hot weather. Now he gives the high sign from Dallas, Texas, where he is doing the advertising film stuff. He writes:

> Have been working for the Feature Film concerns since I left the show, travelling through Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas, and came down here two months ago, after making arrangements in Chicago to handle this territory, on the Advertising Film, and have been very successful so far, both in getting into the best theaters and dealing with the largest and most reliable firms, I show in the Hulsey houses here, which, by the way, never before used an ad of any kind or description, so that in itself lends a great deal of merit to our film.
> Marty Williams, the oldest film man in Kansas City, recently resigned his position as manager with the Metro and will join me here after the holidays, he being my partner.

The advertising films seem to be getting hold of things. We are sorry to see it, but it seems to be here. Anyhow we are glad to see Mr. Barie back and hope that he will be more regular in his reports in future.

Chips from Carpenter.

George Editor Carpenter, in the latest Real Reels, complains that some people including trade journals swipe his ideas without credit. It didn't happen here. We would rather quit than steal because we can think of plenty new ideas of our own, which is why we and George E. remain friends. Just to help along note this from the Real Reels:

> A valued correspondent writes us that at first his mailing list worked fine, but now he fears it is losing its effectiveness.
> We imagine that he has been working along the same lines. Even roast turkey palls after two or three meals. Try something else, Mr. Exhibitor. Use your mailing list all the time, but dish something else on it.

That's the idea. If you have boiled eggs for breakfast every day in the year, they have to be bad to gain your notice. Try a steak or a finnan haddie for a change.

From the same source we draw this:

> A Heinecke, the live wire who operates the Judith Theatre, Lewistown, Montana, we opine, likes a modicum of praise as well as the rest of us, nevertheless he is out with a printed announcement wherein he solicits a few brickbats from the hands of his patrons. He says on a neatly printed card:
> "We feel that there is no theatre that can really be run in such a manner but there is a cause for complaint some time. The first of each month we will give away a $5.00 Judith Theatre coupon book to the party submitting the worst complaint. Our patrons need not hesitate to sign their names, as we assure you our friendship will continue just the same, although signature is not necessary."

We don't like it. "Most helpful suggestion" sounds better than "worst complaint," even if you subsequently show that the worst complaint is not very bad. Take it for granted that your house is good but that you want all the help you can have to make it better. Ask for suggestions, not kicks. It's all the same, but there is more in a name than Shakspeare seems to think. Be like Llewellyn and teach them to think in negative and not in positive roasts.

And you should see the nicely engraved card the Notable Feature Film Company sent out to its patrons for the New Year. It is more than self-respecting.

Right.

Tom North, of the Seattle Branch of the V-L-S-E, offered a gold watch to the exhibitor having the greatest number of votes in the contest for the most enterprising "Pal," which is what V-L-S-E exhibitors are called. The prize went to F. L. Stannard, of the Gem, Wenatchee, Wash., who offered a number of clever window displays, some of which we shall be glad to publish if he will send the photos. In commenting on the award Mr. North writes that the best features that the interest displayed in the contest brought out were stunts that made better business for the exhibitors. It is one of those things where even the losers cannot help but win.

From the same issue we take a new form of commutation ticket which may help others. It was devised by "Pal" McKee, of Everett, Wash., for the Orpheum. The text gives the matter on both sides.

	THE ECONOMY TICKET	10	5	5
	A Chance to Save at the	10	5	5
	ORPHEUM THEATRE	10	5	5
$1.20	Everett, Wash.	10	5	5
for		10	5	5
$1.00		10	5	5

This "Economy Ticket" will not alter the policy of this theater in any respect, but the holder of "The Economy Ticket" "Sees the show for less." This is to interest more people in photoplay entertainment and that the holder of this ticket may be kept in touch with what is happening every week at the Orpheum. The management requests the holder to write his or her name and address on this card. Programs will be issued at frequent intervals, and this co-operation will eliminate the difficulty of forming a desirable and appreciative mailing list. Do this.

This is a slightly different arrangement from the usual meal-ticket idea of bordering the text with the figures, and it particularly commends itself on that account. The tickets are disposed of through various church societies. Perhaps Mr. McKee has been reading his copy of Picture Theatre Advertising.

Part Of It.

B. B. Vivian, of the Pastime, Eureka, Cal., sends in this interesting post card and writes on the back "You ought to see these boys drill. They were some ad." Drill be darned. How was the scheme worked?

We can imagine that such a fine bunch of kiddies in working suits and with the title of "Neal of the Navy" on their cap ribbons could be worked to good advantage in may ways, but what is Mr. Vivian's way? Are they a Boy Scouts troop, local cadets or an improvised corps? With a long serial such as "Neal," it would be possible to organize a corps and parade them each time the film is shown. If they are boy scouts or cadets a donation to the troop would be better than individual payment, with a free admission thrown in, or a troop could be formed and paid, being given their uniforms at the close of the run of the series. By that time they could be changed over to a Pastime Drill Team or some such organization, and perpetuated to the credit of themselves and the theater. We should like to hear just what Mr. Vivian did.

Scott's Clansman.

The issues of the Clansman, sent in by L. J. Scott, have arrived. As stated in Mr. Scott's recent letter, this is issued in the interest of the V-L-S-E exchange in Kansas City. The sheet is six by nine, twelve pages, yellow paper, done in black. There is at least one page of reproduced advertising in each issue. It is issued monthly. In the first issue is a request for samples of advertising and the addition:

> The scrap book is open for your inspection at any time. It is loose leaf, so we can mail you the portion pertaining to any feature desired.

This is a valuable feature if the sheets are returned, and promptly. Another issue tells how a traveling representative of the exchange dropped into town to find the exhibitor decamped, a feature in the express office and the owner of the house afraid to open up. He took out the film, advertised it, made a profit of $50 on the day and did the same thing with the subject of another company to get the show going so it would keep going. That is what is called salesmanship.

The last issue has grown to twenty pages, but much cannot be done with a monthly issue. Better a smaller weekly sheet. We think Mr. Scott will if the boss will let him, and the boss should let him because it is good work.

Grew.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., cut down to a four-pager because it was too much trouble to bother with the advertising, but when the Christmas season came around they just had to to the extent of double the size of any previous issue.

Summer in Winter.

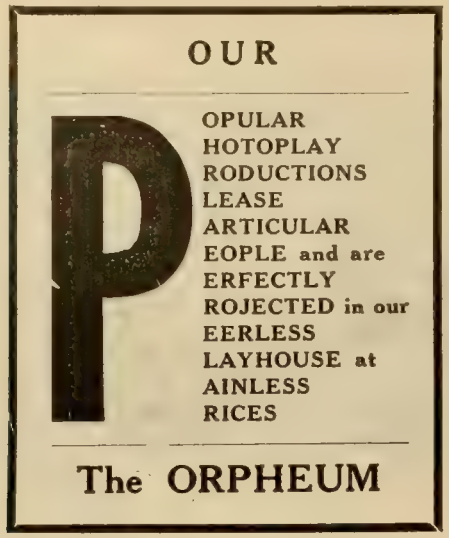
Philip Reich, of the Auditorium Summer Garden, Mayerdale, Pa., sends in a Christmas folder, which is a funny thing for a summer garden to have. He states that he wrote the copy and superintended the setting and ornamentation. With the exception of Mutual and Metro cuts the matter is all stock, but nicely put together, green and red on heavy cream color. The first page carries a greeting, the second a tabulated program, the third the underline and the fourth the special Christmas program. A better arrangement would have been the program on page three and the underline on two. The third or right-hand page is always better than the left-hand pages. The program should always appear on the important side since it is of greater immediate value than the underline, which later is to be taken up and featured. The days are not dated, but apart from this the layout is well planned and it makes a neat and pleasant issue, something that conveys the Christmas idea without overloading with holly and Santa Claus figures.

Free and—

The Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, not only gave a free matinee for the kiddies Christmas, but offered souvenirs, as well, a nice touch that made the event doubly memorable. Lots of exhibitors would have considered the free performance sufficient. It was, and yet the slight additional cost of souvenirs will mean so much to the youngsters. It means more than twice as much as either alone.

Running Down the Line.

We are all familiar with "Pictures Perfectly Projected," all set to use one capital, but what do you think of this from A. E. Walker, of the Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. D.?



The Orpheum ran a free matinee for the children the Saturday before Christmas when all kiddies were invited to be the guests of the management, but at a morning performance by the regular two o'clock show, throwing away a holiday show but making many friends.

Mr. Walker says he localizes all of his clip stuff, which is a good plan, but he wastes a couple of columns on clipped jokes that might be put to better use.

How It Happened.

A. W. Walker, of the Walker Circuit, whose house organ for the Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. D., explains that the jokes run in a recent issue were put in to fill a hole caused by the removal of matter relating to a program which had been replaced by another. There was no time to prepare new copy so the hole was filled with jokes. His Christmas issue is notably good and meaty.

Getting Wise.

John F. Davied of the Cinema, Cynthiana, Ky., is finding out something that others have had to learn when he writes:

> Am enclosing my latest advertising effort, and my only late advertising. Have been too busy with my other business to give much time to the picture show—and while we are on the subject, running a moving picture show is a man-size job. You can't really manage a picture business and half a dozen others at the same time and do any of them justice, as yours truly is just finding out.
> But about the enclosed. Got these out for "Via Wireless." Had them filled out on typewriter, enclosed them in small manila envelopes like the Western Union telegrams with RUSH —By Messenger on one corner of the envelope and had them delivered by messenger. I rigged up a wireless sending station in the lobby, and the returns were very satisfactory.
> The idea might be adapted to some of those sensational rescue pictures and can probably be improved upon. However, I think it is a one-time stunt.

If you have a theater and want to keep on having it, you must watch it like a sick child. You cannot just run it nights. The advertisement Mr. Davied speaks of is reproduced here, but the color values of the black and the manila stock are too much alike. The sending of a telegram is a just once stunt, but making it a wireless when you have "Via Wireless" for an attraction gives it an aptness that makes it better than the usual fake wire. Worked in connection with the fake installation in the lobby, the underline to the effect that it is received at the only wireless station in the town becomes doubly apt. It would be better to call it an aerogram in case you use the idea. Marconigram may infringe the Marconi company's rights, and while they may not care, you cannot always tell.

Wants Copy.

J. W. Larned, the Victoria Theatre, Bloomsburg, Pa., says he will appreciate copy from brother exhibitors. Now that we have three pages instead of two we hope to use more copy in the departments as well as more cuts. How did you like your New Year's present, by the way? Anyhow, Mr. Larned sends in two of his own programs for comment. They are Hennegan covers printed to a Hennegan scheme, and as we have repeatedly said we like the layout suggested by the Hennegans, we do not see what more we can do. We will remark, however, that the time will never come when a program printed in red ink will be as easy to read or as appealing to the eye as one in black. It is not the use of color, but the judicious use of two colors in combination that makes for effect and for white stock you simply cannot beat a black ink. Of the two the red inked sample is the better because it carries more house information. As it is the second of the two issues, it would seem that Mr. Larned knows how to improve his text without assistance.

Being the Goat.

George Editor Carpenter, in his Real Reels, writes of an exhibitor in his territory and says:

> For the benefit of the small exhibitor who believes that everybody knows where his theater is hence "what's the use of spending money for advertising?" we submit that Pocatello, Idaho, is not a large town. Pocatello is the home of Alec Murray who operates the Auditorium and Princess theaters. Here is what Mr. Murray did along advertising lines last week and does practically every week:
> Posted in the business district, 40 one sheets, four three and three six sheets; ran 130 inches of display advertising in the two local papers; received over 200 inches of reading notices and cuts; gave out 2,000 Theater News Letters (house organ) and did some telephoning, and at that the newspaper ads often run to 300 inches weekly as in the case of "Carmen," "Madame Butterfly" and other big attractions.
> Does it pay to advertise?
> Ask Mr. Murray.

All right. We'll be the goat. Does it? We would like to hear from Mr. Murray. On general principles it should. Posted paper lays all over a lobby display of lithographs. Photographs for the lobby and posters where you can't show the lobby. That is what posters were designed for, and it is no longer necessary to brag about just one poster. Seventy sheets is more like it, however. Mr. Carpenter has done much to boom advertising in the inter-mountain district. He knows its value and he makes the Notable's clients see it.

Yes, But.

R. B. Wilby sends in a couple of pages on storing cuts. It was taken from a trade circular. The essential is that if you write in blue pencil on a cut and then shellac the pencil mark, it will not be covered by printing ink. The idea is good, but we like better our own scheme which has been explained in the System magazine. In this the markings are stamped into the wood with a steel die. It is better than marking and shellacking, as you do not number cuts very often and it is a nuisance to clean the brush after each use. If you do use shellac, try out scheme of sticking the brush through the cork of a wide-mouthed bottle, first soaking the cork in oil for a time. This keeps the cork from sticking and is better and cheaper than using the mimeograph varnish with its rubber stopper. A set of steel punch dies can be had for a dollar or so, and the mark is better than indelible if stamped into the end wood. We have used the scheme for a number of years, pulling an impression of the cut and numbering the proof with the same number, then wrapping the cut dust proof and filing by number. When we want to dig up a cut we look over the proofs and not the cuts.

If you buy some special stuff from the film company and put your imprint on it, don't send it in to the department for criticism. We are interested in what you are doing, all by yourself.

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Mechanics.

QUESTIONS seem to run in series, and just now inquirers are showing a feverish eagerness to discover how things are done. Not meaning it the way it sounds—it's none of your business how things are done. It is for you to devise effects and for the director to obtain these. On the other hand, of course, it must be admitted that a knowledge of how things are done is valuable in that it permits you to avoid those expensive effects that will affect injuriously your chances of a sale.

If you really want to know, obtain some book on the mechanical side of the art, such as the Talbot book. Study to know, but do not write the information into the script. You may irritate the editor and you certainly cannot aid him.

In the early days scripts used to be loaded down with fool directions. We remember one script in which a dozen men were to appear from a single box, large enough to contain but one. The author wrote:

> This can be done by having a box with no bottom and digging a hole in the ground large enough to contain twelve men. Then you put the men in the hole, cover it with the box, and they come out one by one.

That was all right as far as it went, but the cheaper way is to stop the camera after each appearance until another man gets in the box. It involves a cut in the film for the appearance of each man after the first, but this is far less trouble than digging a cellar. This is one of the worst examples, of course, but there are still not lacking scripts with such involved explanations that no one in the studio will bother over them.

Most trick effects are based either upon stop camera dissolve or double exposure work. In the first the camera is stopped while all action on the stage is arrested to be resumed at command. During the wait changes are made in the setting, objects or characters are introduced or withdrawn or other alterations made. Then the action is started from the point of its arrest. In the cutting room the action before and after the stop is matched up and is made to appear as continuous. In this way apparitions are introduced, things are vanished or abrupt substitutions made, as when the villain seeks to grasp the heroine and she suddenly changes into the corpse of her murdered father.

Dissolve brings the same result, but more gradually through the slow diminution of light in the camera that fades the film from full illumination to darkness. Then the film is turned back and the action recommenced, but now the actor playing the father will stand in place of the girl. At first his image on the film will be just as weak as was the girl's image at the end of the dissolve, but now the diaphram is opened at the same speed at which it was closed and gradually the image of the man grows stronger as the image of the girl disappears.

Straight double exposure is done either by exposing half of the film to the lens at one time and the other half on the second run through the camera or else the full scene is made and then a ghost is shown against a black ground, only the figure of the spirit registering on the film.

With these three devices almost any effect can be gained, but all extra manipulation of the camera means delay and generally an uncertainty as to result that increases the expense, so that any departure from straight photography represents an increase in cost that must be balanced by an increase in effect.

One common effect seems to be a demand that the picture on the screen shall be shown while characters view the film in the theater. This can, and has been, done, generally by double exposure, since the illumination of the screen is not so strong as the illumination of the stage itself, even in the supposedly darkened auditorium. The picture will be projected on the screen by the light from a single electric arc. Four to eight times as much light may be needed for the darkened stage. The better way is to show the screen and the auditorium alternately, flashing from one to the other. Then the action takes place behind a painted frame which is shown as part of the picture.

There are a lot of little tricks that can be worked in the same way, but it is seldom possible for the amateur to hit upon a new and cheaper way. The best plan is to leave intricate effects out of stories. Where they must be shown, then tell the effect you wish to obtain and leave the rest to the man who will produce the picture, if it is made.

Changing Over.

Several times we have spoken of brain fag as a cause of a slowing down in photoplay writing, but here is something with a new angle. The other day an author dropped in to announce that he had changed his work. It was still the same line of work but a new connection, and we told him not to worry if he found that for a time his plotting ability suffered. Now he writes:

> You told me to look out for a shock in changing positions and your dope was correct. I find my mind entirely upset and I am out of stride badly. I haven't had an idea in three weeks, but I feel now that I am coming back.

The mind is a very delicate piece of mechanism and any slight shock is apt to produce a commotion that is hurtful to imaginative work. But once an equilibrium is restored, the mind goes on as before and may even hustle to catch up, so do not be alarmed at an apparent stoppage in the flow of ideas. It will be but temporary.

A New Club.

Roy McCardell always starts something when he writes, because he always manages to shoot in something about the few editors who are on the level with authors; mostly meaning the ones who take his own stuff, though he does not realize that.

His latest is bringing in a lot of suggestions that the authors form a society for the prevention of cruelty to authors. It is a good idea, and we will form one if permitted to do so on needed lines, but the thickest plank in the platform will be a petition for a legislative enactment that will prevent authors from trying to sell their wares until they really are authors. That is what is needed more than any one thing. For the sake of the general good of the craft a person should not be permitted even to think himself an author until he has a real foundation of knowledge equivalent to the knowledge an apprentice is supposed to possess before he can become a journeyman in a trade. Most authors want protection only from themselves and their fool notions.

Definitions.

Hundreds of words are given popular definitions that are at variance with the late Mr. Webster, or Funk and Wagnalls. Perhaps you have seen a play with some such title as "His Lurid Past." That suggests a vivid and colorful past, doesn't it. Look it up.

We speak of the bosky dell, but what is a bosky dell? Get the book.

It does not matter in the script and perhaps not very much in the leaders, but look at a dictionary now and then and pick up a few words.

Details.

One of the strangest tales the newspapers have recently offered was the young woman who not only fabled a courtship and engagement, but actually brought home the supposed corpse of the man whom she had said she would marry. For months she had maintained the fiction of a surgeon who had saved her life through an operation. She sent herself flowers and candy by telegraph, arranging to have the telegrams sent from a Canadian city, and when, at last, she had to end the romance, either in a marriage or in some other manner, she sprang a tragic climax by bringing home the body of a man who had been killed in a railroad wreck. It was actually a body she had secured for the purpose, but the deception might have passed but for one thing. The family physician declared that the man never had been a surgeon as his hands were too coarse. At once other discrepancies were noticed, and the story was exploded.

Another, and much older, story tells of a man presumed to be a clergyman, who was being shown through a factory where a rubber preparation was made. He was given permission to take home a sample of the partly finished composition, but he wet the knife with which he sought to cut off the piece, and was exposed as a trade spy.

It is just the same with stories. You may be able to build up an elaborate and interesting structure, but if you are not careful you may make just one mistake that will kill the conviction of the entire plot. It will not longer interest because it is so palpably unreal. Be careful and look to the small things. They are as important as the great.

Names.

In planning your cast, avoid a similarity of names. A Universal was released last spring in which the heroine was named Nan, and the villain, an East Indian, was Nana. In the play the situation was not so bad, but merely reading the synopsis was confusing. Do not have Harry and Harriet, John and Joan, Ernest and Ernestine, or similar combinations. There are lots of names. Some careful authors will not even use two names with the same initial unless one name is long and one short.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 122.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

In your opinion is the long solid tension shoe, the long sectional tension shoe, or the limber tension spring best? Give reasons for your answer.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 116.

The Roll of Honor on Question No. 116 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; M. E. Larmour, Waco, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; Wilson Hays, Barton, Maryland; Walter E. Bryner, Springfield, Illinois; Edward Marshall, Vancouver, British Columbia; Bert Carlson, Minneapolis, Minnesota, and M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida.

None of these replies, however, were sufficiently complete to be suitable for publication. I have therefore concluded to answer Question 116 myself.

Reply to Question No. 116.

By F. H. Richardson, New York, N. Y.

The Question:

Assuming the shutter to be just right, would there be any difference in the outside shutter dimensions where an 18-foot picture is being projected 50 feet, and where a 12-foot picture is being projected 100 feet? Assuming the same conditions, what difference would there be, if any, if the shutter be an inside one?

The Answer:

An 18-foot picture at 50 feet would call for a very short focal length lens—a lens the front factor of which would set far back in the lens barrel, therefore the light beam will have spread very appreciably before it emerges from the barrel. This means that a 50/50 shutter would not be possible, with the ordinary intermittent movement, and that the main blade would of necessity have a width which would throw the shutter out of proportion. And right here is a point which all those answering Question 116 entirely overlooked, viz: question 116 is not complete in that nothing is said about the speed of the intermittent. It would be theoretically possible to have just as well proportioned a shutter with a short focal length lens and very rapid intermittent movement as with a long focal length lens and a slow intermittent. Still another point that was overlooked by every one of those answering the question is that with a very long focal length lens the ideal point at which to set the shutter becomes lost in the spread of the light ray, so that you run into practically the same difficulty, in reverse, that you have with the short focal length lens.

Given the same intermittent movement, there would be a very considerable difference in the outside shutter under the two conditions named.

As to the second part of the question, assuming the same intermittent movement to be used in both cases, there would be absolutely no difference in the shutter requirement, because of the fact that the light beam would have precisely the same area of cross section in both cases.

Publicity Clock.

Some time ago we described the "Publicity Clock," which is a device which projects the hands and face of a clock upon the wall at any convenient point of the auditorium, and at the same time projects advertisements, These "ads" may either be one advertisement showing conconstantly, or may be twelve advertisements which change automatically about twice a minute.

At the time we described this clock, the editor recommended it. Since that time he has talked with several theater managers who have installed them, and has watched the operation of the clock, and is more than ever convinced that where the theater manager desires to show advertisements of local merchants this is the way to do it. The placing of an illuminated clock face in the auditorium is a convenience to the patron, and the advertisements do not detract to any appreciable extent from the picture on the screen; nor are advertisements placed in this way particularly objectionable, whereas, on the other hand, when thrown on the screen they are distinctly so. We again commend the Publicity Clock to the favorable consideration of theater managers.

A New Union.

The Gadsden, Alabama, stage employes and operators have organized. On December 19th they formed a local of thirty-five members, presumably under the I. A. T. S. E., though the secretary forgot to mention that fact. The roster of officers will be published at the head of the department in due time.

We wish the new local every success, and as has been our custom, we would voice a word of warning against expecting to accomplish anything very startling at least during the first year. Take it slowly, gentlemen, and first get your organization into thoroughly good working order before attempting to make any considerable demands on the managers. I would also suggest that you proceed with all possible speed to make membership in your union the synonym for competency, and that all necessary steps be taken to bring the entire membership up to the top notch, both in competency and efficiency. Having done this, you won't have nearly so much trouble in securing better conditions and better salaries.

Resistance.

Massachusetts says:

> How many amperes would you get at the arc if you connect two 3 ohm rheostats in multiple on a 55 volt supply? This may sound elementary, but if you can possibly send a carbon copy of your reply so that I may have it before next Tuesday, you will oblige me and the rest of our members who go to the union school. In closing I wish you a Happy New Year.

The problem is a simple one. You have a 55 volt supply, and will understand that the voltage of the D. C. projection arc may be anywhere from 45 to 60. Remembering that amperes equal voltage divided by ohms, let us first take 48 as the average arc voltage, and subtracting 48 from 55, we have 6 volts left. The problem, therefore, resolves itself into the question: how many amperes will 6 volts force through 3 ohms—always supposing that there is actually 3 ohms resistance in the rheostat—not 3 ohms in the combined rheostat and arc. Voltage divided by ohms would in this case mean $6 \div 3 = 2$ amperes for each rheostat, or 4 amperes for the two. In practice, however, it is more than doubtful that you could maintain an arc with that kind of a combination. It is in the nature of a freak connection, and I don't believe that ordinary rules would apply. The arc would necessarily be very very short, hence its resistance would be quite low. I think there would be only one way to answer your question correctly, and that would be by using an ammeter. If some of our electrician correspondents care to take issue with me on that statement I will be glad to have their views.

He Don't Knock.

Harry Bowman, Jr., Greensboro, North Carolina, writes:

> Once more I am coming in without knocking at the door, though I have no excuse for so doing, except to tell you that I am about as disappointed as a fellow can be at not meeting you while in the Big Village. Really, old man, you seem to be about as easy to find as snow in Hades. I called twice at your office and the nice, pleasant, little lady at the "word mill" told me you were out. Are you ever in? Saw some swell projection up your way, but comparing the size of the towns, they have nothing on us, for we have the real goods here in Greensboro. We have closed our road show, and are in winter quarters again. Expect to cut the vaudeville out next season, and use straight pictures. Can you give me a little dope on storage batteries through the department? We have a musical instrument, using a storage battery, and I have had but little experience with them.

Very sorry, Brother Bowman, that I didn't meet you, but I want to again tell all you boys you should write at least two days in advance and make an appointment, because I have many things to look after and my office hours are uncertain. I like to meet the boys when they visit Gotham, and will always make it a point to be present if they will tell me what day, and at what hour of the day they are going to make themselves manifest.

As to the battery, I don't know very much about them, but I guess all you need to know is how to re-charge. Will some charitably inclined brother kindly supply the dope?

Union Makes Provision.

G. Betz, Osgood, Indiana, writes:

> I Just can't keep from trying to answer those darned questions. I have questions in my brain when I wake up, and go to sleep thinking about them. Osgood is just a little one-horse burg, but we, nevertheless, try to give them the best there is in the projection line, and you may take it from me my manager knows what good projection is and demands it. He says: "I supply my operator with everything he needs and if he don't produce the goods on the screen raus mit 'im—out he goes," so you see it is up to me to produce the goods or be connected to a nice, little tin can. Does the union make provision for small town men? I would like to join.

It does. According to my recollection, the Seattle convention placed every bit of territory within the jurisdiction of some union. What particular jurisdiction you are in I do not know, but will try and have you informed. More power to your manager. I like the manager who not only knows what good work is and demands it on his screen, but having received it is willing to remember that fact when pay day arrives. As to the motor generator, I cannot advise you of things of this kind in the department—that is without creating a riot—by mail, yes. See paragraph near head of department.

A Matter of Courtesy.

Some time ago this department received a copy of the three year agreement recently signed between Local Union 181, I. A. T. S. E. and the theater managers of Baltimore, Maryland. The agreement was so very excellent that we wrote and asked permission of the union to publish the same in full. Brother Kingston Howard, president of Local 181, however, speaking for the organization, asked me not to, as he thought the publication of the agreement might work injury to the local. We, of course, complied with the request, only to be informed by the local a little later that another publication had published the agreement, without showing the union the courtesy of asking its consent.

The local, in view of these facts, gave the department the privilege of publishing the agreement. We feel that it can very well serve as a model for other unions. It was signed by the managers without any modification whatever, just as it was first presented to them, and, as we before said in commenting on this particular proposition, the Baltimore managers are to be complimented on having conceded to their operators at least a portion of those things which are their right. operators at least a portion of those things which are their right. The minimum wage is too small.

Pitch in Projection.

James J. Waters, Jamestown, New York, says:

> Would it be possible to obtain a good, sharp picture with the lens 17.49 feet above the center of the screen on a 65½ foot throw? Could I, by tilting the screen, get a better picture? What size lens would be needed?

You did not tell me the width of the picture, Brother Waters, so how can I tell you what focal length lens you would require? By tilting the screen slightly (not too much or it will look bad), blocking the top of the aperture plate out slightly, and stopping down the objective lens, I think you can get a good, sharp picture under the conditions, provided the picture be not too large. You will, however, have keystone effect, which may be eliminated by filling in the aperture with solder and filing it out, but there will still be distortion. The picture will be too high for its width, and objects near the bottom of the picture will be out of proportion in size with objects near the top, though of course this will not be so excessive as to be discernible to the audience. The general effect, however, will not be so good as where a level projection is used. If you care to send me an elevation sketch of your theater, I will go into this matter fully, and see what, if anything, can be done, but in sending an elevation be sure to send a complete one; that is to say, the complete elevation along the center line of the house from screen to front (street) wall. I would refer you to page 1495 of November 20th issue, in which the effect of pitch in projection is illustrated and described.

As to lenses, I can tell you more about that when I know the width of the picture.

It Is Quite True.

J. P. Copeland writes from Detroit, Michigan, as follows:

> My home is in Boston, but am on a visit to Detroit. Recently went to Mt. Clemens, a village some distance north of Detroit, and while there started out to locate a movie shop. The location was made all right, but it was punk, so I looked for another and this time got into the Bijou. My sister and I got two seats up in heaven, close to the operating room door, and, accompanied by my nerve, I went in to see how and with what the operator was producing the splendid screen results. They have an operating room 12 x 14 x 8 feet high, with a 3-foot vent hole through the roof. There were two Power's Six B motor-driven projectors, and a new Hallberg motor generator. The man responsible for the excellence of the picture was Ben Garros. I asked him if he read the department, and with evident pride he replied: "You bet"; also he told me that he had the pleasure of meeting you personally in January, 1915, and that, together with yourself, Charles A. Strelinger, manufacturer of the Brush outfit; Charles E. Allinger, of Detroit, and A. J. Lang, of the Nicholas Power Company, he had lunch at the Prince George Inn, New York City. Maybe he was just romancing, but if he was, here is where he gets nailed to the cross.

No, I guess there is no romancing at all, because I remember the luncheon in question, in which friends Strelinger and Mr. Lang were present, though I am sorry to say I don't remember the names of the other gentlemen. However, I suppose Friend Garros was one of them, or he would not have known anything about it, therefore his reputation for veracity holds good, and I am glad to know he is producing the goods on his screen.

Pictures Not Bright Enough.

L. Kahn, South Chicago, Illinois, says:

> Have a curtainline coated screen; 75 foot throw and a Simplex machine, with plano-convex condensers. The pictures are not bright enough to satisfy me. The operator attributes the fault to dark films. I doubt this. He is using a compensarc pushed up to 60 amperes. Would the use of meniscus-biconvex condensers improve the light? Is there any fixed distance between front condenser and aperture?

Surely your operator cannot have all dense films. Possibly the coating of your curtain needs renewing. It should be pure white, and should be renewed at least once every three months. You may think the screen looks bright, but after it has been up for three months, go to a paint store and get a box of paper cleaner, price 10 cents, and after kneading it up thoroughly (the painter will show you how), down in one corner of the screen rub the cleaner lightly across the surface, and see what a difference there will be.

Yes most decidedly there is a fixed distance between the front lens and the aperture. Possibly your operator does not read the projection department. If he does, he should know just what effect the meniscus-bi-convex would have, and could answer that question himself; also he would know exactly what distance there ought to be between the apex of the front condenser and the film. The chances are you are wasting lots of light in your objective lens. Send me the following measurement, and I will tell you exactly what you should have. (a) Exact diameter of your objective lens—its opening I mean. (b) Exact distance from the surface of the rear lens of your objective to the film tracks in the aperture plate of the machine when the picture is in focus on the screen.

I cannot say whether a meniscus-bi-convex would improve matters much without the foregoing data. Probably not, except that it will give you a more evenly illuminated spot, due to reduction of spherical aberration.

I would suggest that when the new Handbook comes out (about an 800-page book) you procure a copy from the Moving Picture World, and KEEP IT AS A PART OF THE REGULAR HOUSE EQUIPMENT. It will be worth many times its price to you.

In Appreciation.

The editor is in receipt of a very great number of Christmas postcards and letters containing their prototype in more costly engraved cards of various kinds and sizes. These remembrances came from a number of local unions, from theater managers, and from individual operators, and I trust you will understand that such marks of friendly feeling are duly appreciated. I was rather surprised at the number of greetings from local unions—about twenty-five.

How Utterly Foolish.

Recently there was a very pretty moving picture theater erected at the corner of 18th Avenue and West 6th or 7th Street, Brooklyn. This is not very far from the editor's wigwam, so one evening, accompanied by his own wife, he set forth on a tour of investigation, hoping that the new house would prove to be the real thing.

The outside and the lobby were neat and pretty, also the interior was, so far as architecture went, not subject to criticism, but, taken as a whole, this little house was a living example of the great number of blunders which can be perpetrated in one poor, little, lonesome theater. First, while the interior decoration was very pretty, it was totally and absolutely unfitted to a moving picture theater, being altogether too light, the trimming, in fact, being white. The picture would have been very materially improved by being reduced at least one, if not two, feet in width, and instead of being surrounded by a black band at least two or three feet wide, it had a little, narrow black strip which looked to be about six inches, but may have been as much as a foot. It was better than nothing; that is all that could be said of it. The light was quite dim part of the time and part of the time fairly good, but shadows were on the screen all too frequently. I am told the theater advertised that it had invested in a motor generator set, but if I did not hear an alternating current arc humming up in that operating room I am sadly mistaken, and if they had a motor generator set, there was absolutely no excuse under heaven for the poor illumination of the screen. In addition to this, every time the doors were swung open the white light from the lobby streamed in and murdered the picture in cold blood. Nor was this all. In fact, the worst is yet to come, so cheer up. At no time was the picture in sharp focus on the screen. This may have been due to dirty lenses, but I have a suspicion the fault lay in the screen.

Now here is a man who has invested quite a little money in building a theater and equipping it. Why in the name of Heaven didn't he go to some one who possesses the knowledge which he evidently lacks, and invest, fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five dollars in a little information? For the sum of twenty-five dollars he could have received advice as to all these various things, which, without any additional expense, would have enabled him to put a good picture on the screen instead of the out-of-focus, dim, shadowy imitation we looked at. Why is it, why, why, why is it that supposedly smart men will do such things as this?

On Saturday night the house was not more than half filled, if it was even that. Why? Well the answer is clear. The price was 10 cents, and the picture—well, I guess you know what it was from what I have already set forth, and in addition to that, they projected a five or six-reel production which was by no possible stretch of the imagination good. It was called "In the Hands of London Crooks," or something like that, but my view was that the audience was in the hands of—well, they were not getting very good value received for the money they had paid.

In addition to all this, the "operator" ran the tail-piece clear through each time and flashed the white light on the screen—crude work; also none too clean advertising slides were displayed on the screen.

Probably on Back Focus.

L Stinnitt, Waterloo, Iowa, says:

> Am using an Edison Exhibition Model on a 55-foot throw with a 6½ and a 7½-inch condenser. Cannot get a nice, round spot on the machine, and am up a stump to know where the trouble lies. What make of motor generator would you advise for our theater? I enclose patches received from the Universal Exchange, Des Moines, Iowa.

Why, Brother Stinnitt, according to the drawings you send, you have got your lamp pulled away back from the lens, and are working on the back focus. If the sketch is correct, your lamp ought to be shoved up towards the lens at least an inch. I would suggest that you line up your optical system as per Table No. 1, October 16th issue, or, if you will tell me the diameter of your objective, and the exact distance from its back factor to the film tracks on the aperture plate when the picture is in focus on the screen, I will tell you what you need. As to the patches, they will be sent to the headquarters of the Universal. See advertising pages of the Moving Picture World for information regarding motor generators. I cannot answer questions of this kind through the department.

Half and Quarter Size Lenses.

George F. Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, New York, writes at considerable length upon several topics, and criticises my reply to question 110. He says:

> I believe you are in error when you say that these terms were used with relation to the diameter of lenses. I think they were used to express the size of photographic plate covered by the lens. A quarter plate is 3¼ x 4¼ in size and at one time was the smallest plate made. Lenses for these plates had a circle of illumination just covering the plate. The half size lens was made to cover half a 6½ x 8½ plate, and the full size was made to cover the full size of a 6½-8½ plate. The word "plate" was eventually dropped. These lenses were made for tintype work, and now, since tintypes have disappeared, so also have the terms. How they entered the moving picture field I cannot understand.* * * One extremely important matter is "depth of focus." In strict projection (lens central with center of screen) depth of focus is unnecessary, as it is merely focusing from one plane to another, the conjugate points all over being balanced. As we introduce a pitch, however, depth of focus becomes necessary, and this is somewhat compensated or aided by tipping the top of the aperture out slightly. Stopping down the lens also increases the depth of focus, and right here I might say that it does not matter what type or what make the lens may be, depth of focus is governed by relative lens aperture and focal length. Stopping down increases depth of focus; also the shorter the focal length, the greater the depth of focus. A 2-inch M. P. camera lens at F 3.5 has a greater depth than a 5 at F 3.5. The swing-back of the aperture is provided for on every make of professional camera, and is especially necessary in banquet work in order to avoid a too great stopping down of the lens, which would otherwise be necessary to obtain depth of focus. The stopping down of a lens should, I think, be done somewhere between the elements thereof, when it is done at all. The careful worker might saw a slot in the barrel, and insert a metal stop flush with the barrel so as to be insertable in the focusing jacket. The lens tube should fit comfortably tight in its jacket, so as not to "walk," this "walking" being one of the reasons for necessity of refocusing. If the machine sets on an angle the lens will often "walk" through vibration. If the picture is out of focus in the taking, no amount of focusing of the projection lens will sharpen it. A lens tube which fits too loose in the jacket may be tightened by laying it across the edge of a piece of board and hitting it lightly across its back with the edge of another board, in order to throw the barrel slightly out of round.

Brother Deutsch we presume is correct as to the original meaning of the terms "quarter," "half" and "full" size, as applied to lenses, but the fact remains that, so far as projection be concerned, the application of these terms had wholly, and entirely to do with diameter. His remarks with regard to depth of focus are very good. I have not personally had the opportunity to experiment with the limit of practicability in tipping the aperture. It is quite possible that there is something that ought to receive attention by projection machine manufacturers. If it is practicable to entirely compensate for pitch by tipping the aperture, then that fact should be taken into consideration and incorporated into projection machines, because, no matter what we may do, we are always going to have the evil, pitch in projection, with us. I would certainly recommend that machine manufacturers investigate this matter, and see to what extent the scheme is practicable. I am not sure as to the advantage to be gained in stopping the lens between its factors. Frankly, I don't see what would be gained by that course as against stopping at the front, outside lens, and in any event it is not a practical thing for the average operator to attempt. As to bending the lens tube, well, I dunno. I think I would prefer pasting a thin piece of paper around the tube. It strikes me that bending the tube would make it difficult to remove and replace the combinations; also there would be danger of cracking one of the lenses, as flint (or is it crown) glass is very fragile.

More About Film Abuse.

The department is in receipt of the following self-explanatory communication:

> Mr. F. H. Richardson, Editor Projection Department, Moving Picture World, New York City.
> Dear Sir:—
> We have taken note of the discussion in the Projection Department concerning the condition of films, particularly as relates to poor inspection.
> This company would ask space to voice its approval of your attitude in this matter, and to call pointed attention to both operators and managers to the amazing amount of what can only be termed pure, unadulterated carelessness. We would like to ask the theater manager who does not take proper care of the film while in his possession, by what process of reasoning he is led to suppose that other managers and operators will take care of it. We would also, in this connection, like to impress upon both theater managers and operators, in the strongest possible manner, the fact that there is and must be a strong community of interest in the handling of films; that each must necessarily suffer for every bit of damage done by the other, and that, while it is not to be expected that damage to the film will be entirely eliminated, still operators and managers will simply be serving their own interest by doing their share to reduce it to the least possible proportion.
> Please understand that the foregoing is NOT in any way designed or intended to excuse or condone the failure of exchanges to properly inspect and repair films. This company is prepared to, and is literally "going the limit" to impress upon its exchange managers the necessity for thorough inspection and repair of films. But it must be carefully remembered that conditions are such that it is sometimes impractical to either inspect or repair a film when it comes in from a theater; also under present conditions it is often necessary to "circuit" films. By this we do not make the claim that it is impossible to thoroughly inspect and repair a film every time it is returned from a theater, or that it is impossible to, by the concerted action of all film exchanges, stop circuiting, but most certainly, if these things were done, it would compel exchanges to purchase more copies of each subject, and this, in turn, would, of necessity, mean such a large advance in expense that the exchanges would be compelled to very materially raise the price of service. You will, therefore, understand that these things can only be accomplished through the concerted action of all exchanges.

We feel, however, that you will agree with us that even with the conditions as at present, if we all worked together, the exchanges doing the best possible under the circumstances, the operator doing his full duty in careful handling of the film, and proper repairing of damage occurring while the film is in his possession, conditions will be vastly improved, and if, in addition to this, the theater manager do HIS full duty in providing necessary repair parts for projection machines, and the placing of skill and ability on a plane of at least equal importance with cheapness when it comes to the employment of an operator, the complaints of poor condition of films, now so numerous, would dwindle rapidly to a comparatively insignificant number.

We fully realize that the product of our underlying producers depends to a very great extent for its favor with the public upon the manner in which it is presented on the screen—meaning, by this, the manner of its projection, and we fully realize that if the film be in poor condition the projection must of necessity suffer, therefore, we are vitally interested in your campaign for better inspection and repair of film; also, we will do anything within reason to help in the elimination of the faults complained of. Yours for Universal Success,

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

It is indeed encouraging to know that the really big film manufacturers are at last waking up to the importance of placing their films in the hands of the operator in the best possible condition. This department has been having a personally-conducted hair-pulling match with operators, theater managers, and exchange managers concerning this particular thing for almost six years. Problem. If it has taken that length of time to awaken two big manufacturers to the importance of backing us up in this work, how long is it going to take to wake up the rest of them? However, now that the Universal and the World Film Corporation have shied their hats into the ring on the film abuse proposition, I believe it won't be long before the exchange manager will wake up to the fact that the old shop-worn, slip-shod methods of the past are becoming unfashionable, and the operator and theater manager, on their part, will come to a realization of the importance—the vital importance—of taking the best possible care of the films while in their possession.

Shies His Hat Into the Ring.

L. J. Pratt, Geneseo, Illinois, says:

Have answered all the questions and then compared my answers with the one published, but this is the first time I've sent one in. Here goes, however, starting with 115. Am enclosing a few clippings from the film, "The Street Fakir," an Essanay comedy, received from the ——— exchange, Chicago, today, December 17th. One you will note was patched with either the son or daughter of the ten penny nail—a common pin. That certainly shows excellence in inspection—I don't think. You can send them where they will do the most good, if you will. In closing, I send my best wishes both to yourself and the department. May that helpful institution and its editor live long and prosper. I am enclosing "two bits." You don't smoke, I know, but—Oh, well, buy a Ford and take a joy ride on me!

Have bought the Ford, but you sent too much dough. What will I do with the extra seven cents? Send it back, or use it to buy gasoline? Glad to see you have come in with the bunch. The water, you will discover, is fine. Incidentally, you got yourself on the Roll of Honor the very first clatter.

Operators and Managers Read This—By All Means.

Allan F. Sparrow, manager Ideal Theater, Springfield, Vermont, writes:

Comparatively a new comer in the great game—only a little more than a year's experience—it seems incredible that there should be so many absurd statements made about the condition of operating rooms, the difficulties operators have, and the inability of theaters to pay for sufficient current to produce a good picture. How does the manager figure that it pays to attempt to save an inch of carbon, with the ever present danger of having to stop in the middle of a picture, and put in a new one. If even so much as one patron is disgusted by this sort of performance, is there any real saving accomplished? How many more dimes will come into the box office from pleased patrons if you use 60 amperes than if you "economize" (?) by using only 30 or 40? How much oftener will Mr. and Mrs. Jones, and their friends come if you have the proper lens combination, and the lenses be of high quality? Will not their increased patronage pay good interest on the investment? Are the people who run theaters where such improvements are lacking really to be pitied if they do go to the wall, and are forced to turn to ditch digging for a livelihood?

And there is a matter which is beyond my comprehension. Why do cities demand an examination as to the operator's fitness, and then allow the manager to force him to run two machines? Of course, he can run but one at a time, but he cannot even run one properly if he must rewind, patch and repair and thread up while the show is going on. I cannot understand the philosophy of attempting to run a two-machine operating room with a single operator. We would not do that even in this country town; also we would not even dream of trying to save on current at the expense of the picture, nor burn the carbons down to the least possible fraction of an inch, nor use lenses of any other than the best obtainable grade. The majority of lenses in use are so poor that the picture on the screen is very far from perfect. Is it not all rather silly?

One of your correspondents recently complained that he had to make patches almost by the hundreds in first run. We don't get many such reels. Had seven reels of first run this week, and do not recall where a single one of them has had to be patched during the entire past year. Take the reels as they come, we do not have a break once in a fortnight. Most of our pictures are twenty to forty days, and a great majority come from the Boston office of the General Film Company. (Will the manager of the Boston General Film Exchange kindly step forward and shake hands?—Ed.) The most trouble we encounter comes from elliptical hubs on reels, or those that are bent so that the film will bind in unwinding. (Will the manager of the B. G. F. E. kindly step forward and learn that reels as well as films ought to be in good condition?—Ed.) This we have taken up with the Boston office and firmly expect it will be corrected. We had a pin patch from the Kleine Boston office this week, and on running it received the thanks of the manager, who will, without doubt, see that there is no frequent reoccurence of the trouble. If managers would learn a little more about the operating end of the game, and look into the operating room frequently, allowing the operator such new parts as will keep the machine in first-class shape, and not try to make an operator do the work of two men, I believe it would be productive of largely increased receipts at the box office—more than enough to many times repay the outlay.

The foregoing letter is recommended to the careful and prayerful consideration of quite some several thousand theater managers. Beyond this I am not going to comment, except that my hat is removed in the presence of this progressive, up-to-date manager, who evidently possesses the faculty of reasoning from cause to effect. What Friend Sparrow says about the fake economies practised in all too many theaters is absolutely correct.

An Interesting Point.

R. W. Middlecamp, Allentown, Pennsylvania, says:

Why don't producers start sending out film on 2,000-foot reels? I gamble that films sent out on large reels would last longer than will those on small ones.

This opens up a topic for interesting discussion, and I would be glad to hear from operators as to their views with reference to the relative advisability of 2,000 and 1,000-foot reels.

Liars Do "Figger."

A. F. Stilson, Galesburg, Illinois, relieves himself of the following:

Noted in 12-11-15 issue that Mr. Dilley, Akron, Ohio, wanted an answer to the following brain exerciser. Well, here it is. Single-phase, 70-volt converter, 50-ampere capacity; two 110-volt rheostats at 45 amps., in multiple. What is the arc voltage?

Referring to the "pitchur," A is the said converter, B and B' the two rheostats, which are 110-volt, 45-ampere capacity each. By ohms law $110 \div 45 = 2.4$ ohms, which is approximately the resistance of one rheostat, and this, divided by two rheostats, equals 1.2 ohms resistance added to the arc circuit. The resistance of the wire from the converter to the arc is negligible, if of size to carry the current required. The output of the outfit is 50 amperes, then by ohms law E equals CR, or voltage equal current times resistance, therefore, $50 \times 1.2 = 60$, or the approximate number of volts at the arc.

I suppose the son-of-a-gun will go and test with a voltmeter and call me a liar, but "figgers" don't lie, although liars do figger.

Well, my brother, I don't know that the other fellow will call you a liar, particularly in view of the fact that you have not told us how much you weigh. If it is 110—mebby; if it is 180, well, that is something else again. However, I'm going to take the chance and call you a mistakener, because you are full of stewed prunes on one point. The voltage of a 45-ampere rheostat is not equal to 110 divided by 45, because of the fact that moving picture rheostats are made to work in series with an arc, and the resistance of a 45-ampere rheostat designed for motion picture work, instead of being equal to 110 divided by 45, is equal to approximately $110 - 48 = 62 \div 45$. Get me, Steve? Well, if you do, I won't tramp on your corns any more this time. I have found out since that the question was really a catch question anyhow.

Shutter Time and Aperture Speed.

R. A. F., New York City, propounds the following questions in regard to shutter openings and diaphragm numbers:

1. What are the different shutter openings?
2. Explaint the difference in time; how much faster each shutter opening is over various other shutter openings from the largest shutter opening down to the smallest shutter opening?
3. What is the shutter opening for straight work?
4. What is the time of exposure of each picture going at the rate of 16 pictures per second with the right shutter opening?
5. Explain how much faster F. 1.9 over F. 3.5—F. 3.5 over F. 4—F. 4 over F. 5.6—F. 5.6 over F. 8—F. 8 over F. 11—F. 11 over F. 16—F. 16 over F. 22—F. 22 over F. 32?

1. The shutter of a motion picture camera is the segment of a disk revolving in front of and parallel to the aperture or frame plate. It revolves once for each frame or picture taken; in synchronism, that is, in time with the movement which draws the film down for each successive picture. Its function is to cut off the light or image from the film during that period of time during which the film is drawn down in readiness for the next exposure. While the exposure is being made, the section of film in the gate and before the aperture plate is motionless and, just as the platen of a printing press must hold the paper to be printed firmly against the type without permitting it to move in relation to the type lest it smear the imprint, so must the film remain stationary while it receives the impression of the lens image or it will be blurred.

The type of the intermittent movement with which a camera is provided determines the greatest or maximum shutter opening. The instant that the claws or fingers of the intermittent movement commence to draw the film down to its position for the next frame, the aperture opening must be covered by the shutter and remain closed until all downward movement of the film has ceased. Should the movement of the film commence before the aperture is entirely covered by the shutter, such portion of the frame as remained uncovered will be blurred.

As the shutter moves continuously and uniformly around, it must be that fraction of a disk represented by the ratio between the time that it takes the claws to pull the film down and the time that it takes for them to enter the film at the top and return to that position again, plus a segment large enough to cover the aperture when the movement begins. If it takes one-half the time of a complete shutter revolution to pull the film down for the next frame, the shutter segment must be half a circle plus a segment wide enough to cover the aperture opening; for this extra segment portion must completely close the aperture before the downward movement takes place. For that reason a rod and pitman, or a crank which requires one-half the time interval for drawing the film can only have an open segment of approximately one-third, or one-third shutter opening, as it is termed.

The Lumiere type movement which uses the so-called harmonic cam for throwing the fingers, does not draw down in about one-fourth of the time interval and consequently can employ a shutter whose open segment is one-half.

No. 2. At sixteen pictures per second, each picture is drawn down and exposed in one-sixteenth part of a second; if the shutter is one-third open then the exposure time is one-third of one-sixteenth, or one-forty-eighth; if one-half opening, one-half of one-sixteenth, or one-thirty-second of a second. For any other shutter opening the speed or time is calculated in the same simple way. Thus, also, it will be seen that all shutter openings bear a simple arithmetical ratio to the time of exposure; a quarter opening is twice as quick as half opening, but only gives half the exposure that half opening gives.

No. 3. In still photography it is often necessary to use exposures as quick as one-thousandth part of a second to get an unblurred picture of a moving object, but in the motion pictures it is essential that a swiftly moving object should be blurred in each individual frame to reproduce on the screen the effect of a single moving object. If we close the shutter opening to a mere slit and photograph a baseball thrown in the sunlight, we will get a succession of clear images of the ball on the negatives, but when the picture is thrown on the screen, we get an impression of three or four balls chasing one another across the screen. The clean cut images are too far apart to blend correctly in the eye and produce the swish of the single moving ball.

No. 4. It is, therefore, advisable in almost all cases to use as wide a shutter opening as the intermittent movement of the camera permits. Also the larger the shutter opening the smaller the diaphragm opening and the smaller the diaphragm the greater the depth of focus.

No. 5. In the following list the area, that is, the measure of light passing capacity is twice that of each succeeding number. If it requires one second to expose a picture at F 11 it takes two seconds to get the same exposure at F 16, or if it takes one second at F 11 it takes one-half second at F 8. This is the list in proper order: F 1.9—F 2—F 3.5—F 4—F 6.3—F 8—F 11—F 16—F 22—F 32—F 44—F 64.

This holds good for all lenses marked in the F system and any lens will give approximately the same exposure as any other lens when used at the same F number. The only difference that two different lenses might have at the same F number, would be that a long focus lens would have a greater thickness of lens glass than a short focus one and would consequently absorb a very small per cent. more than the thinner glass of the short focus lens.

Contrast and Flatness.

J. B. B., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

> I am sending two negatives, one taken with one camera and the other taken with another.
> Number one, the one of the parade, has lots of contrast and was taken on August 25, 1915.
> Number two, the other one, was taken not so long ago and does not have any contrast to amount to anything.

> Number one was taken under good light conditions for August, while number two was as good as could be expected for December. Has this got anything to do with it, if not, then why is one more contrast than other? What is the address of the Cinema Camera Club?

> In taking interiors how much candle power per square foot should be used, and how many more square feet should be added, as the space to be taken grows bigger and are flares good substitutes, and how many of them do you need per square foot, and where can you buy them?

The difference in the contrast of the sample films sent is due to several factors, the most important of these being that one was evidently taken on a bright day and the other on a dull day. Some lenses give much more brilliant negatives than others and development and exposure both have their influence on contrast.

The address of the Cinema Camera Club is 229 West 46th street, New York City.

For interior lighting enough lights to give at least 400 foot candles per square foot should be used, when working with an aperture of F. 4.5, that means for every square foot of stage space four hundred candle power is needed.

Flares are not recommended for work except where it is impossible to use electricity.

They produce too much smoke and can only be used successfully where there is a draught to carry the smoke away from the picture.

Ray Screens.

H. D. A., New York City, asks:

> "Will you kindly give me what information you have relative to the use of ray screen in connection with the Cinematograph Camera in scenic and other outdoor subjects? Also please tell me where I can obtain the best 'blended' or shaded screen? My lenses are Carl Zeiss, 2 inch, and Dallmeyer Telephoto, 9 inch."

A ray filter and a graduated or sky filter are indispensable parts of a scenic photographer's outfit. Distant mountains, canyon and cloud pictures are almost impossible without them.

Distant mountains that are blue and purple and almost indiscernible against the sky, are brought out sharply by the use of a one-time ray screen slipped over the front of the lens. A so-called one-time ray screen requires twice the normal exposure; that is, if the normal exposure without the screen is F 16, then with the screen it is F 11.

Graduated screens are ray filters in which the screen is graduated from clear glass at one end to a deep color at the other, are placed before the lens, the clear glass at the bottom and the dyed portion at the top. This permits full exposure of objects in the lower part of the picture, while it cuts off a large portion of the light from the sky, which is generally much overexposed if full exposure is given for the foreground. The kodak sky filter can be adapted for the motion pictuer camera or more elaborate graduated filters of the Sanger Shepherd Company may be had from Allison & Hadaway, 257 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

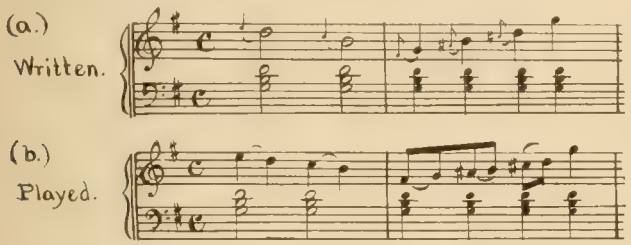
IMPROVISING.

ARTICLE V.

Auxiliary Notes.

By Clarence E. Sinn.

A LONG time ago when writers of music were more strict in some matters than they are now, a note called the "long approggiatura" was often used. It is a grace note without the little dash through the stem as written now-a-days. See example 15.



Ex. 15

The top line of Ex. 15 (letter "a") shows how such notes were written; the lower line "b" shows how they were intended to be played. Students were taught that these notes "took one-half from their principal notes." (The notes to which they were attached.) The idea being that these notes did not belong to the hormony of their respective measures, yet fell upon the accented parts of the measure—right on top of the chord—making a discord. This didn't fit the rules. So when they wanted to write a melody including such passages, these old fellows used to dodge the issue by writing the principal note (that would be the harmonized note) in the accented part of the measure—where it would lie right over the chord it was a part of—and those discordant notes which preceded them would be written as small notes. These small notes, as explained before, were called "long appoggiatura," and took their value from the notes to which they were attached. (See Ex. 15, Letter "b.") In this way they conformed to the rule (whatever it was) in the writing, and passed the buck on to the fellow who had to play or sing it. Apparently it wasn't against any rules to perform such phrases —only to write them. Now-a-days composers write their music just as they expect it to be played. If they wanted anything like "b," Ex. 15, it would be written that way. It is understood that the notes "D" and "B" in the first measure are the harmonized notes—that they belong to the chord and the little notes "E" and "C" do not. We can also comprehend without being hit with a club that in the second measure the notes belonging to the harmony are "G," "B," "D," and that F sharp. A sharp and C sharp do not harmonize with the chord of "G" (although accompained by this chord). But we also understand that the principal note is the one harmonized, even though it may not always lie upon the accented part of the measure.

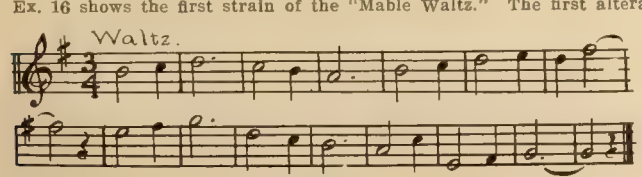
Those notes which used to be written small and called "long appoggiatura" (as in "a," Ex. 15) are now written out in full (as in "b," Ex. 15), and are called "Auxiliary Notes." They always lie one degree above, or one degree below the principal note; usually half a tone below, or either one-half or one full tone above.

The reason for dragging all this in is because the auxiliary note is a good friend in the elaboration of melodies, and you will find his acquaintance well worth cultivating. An easy way to find him is to write in a grace note where you think it might be effective—anyone can stick in a few grace notes—and then change the grace note to a big note, taking its value out of the note to which it is attached. If you have a gift of melody this will come without practice—if you haven't, you will have to try it over until it becomes easy.

Elaborating Upon a Theme.

Perhaps you may select a single strain of some composition as a working theme for one of your characters. The whole composition may be useful as a "filler-in," but this one strain appeals to you as a good subject to work on for this particular character. As an illustration, take the old "Mable Waltz." (Ex. 16.)

Ex. 16 shows the first strain of the "Mable Waltz." The first alterations that occur to us are, First, a change of key; 2d, a change of tempo (and figure). By simply changing the signature we get an alteration of key without altering the position of the notes. See Ex. 17.)



Ex. 16.

Changing the tempo (and with it the figure) permits a greater variety of elaboration. The waltz, being in triple time, suggests an alteration to double or quadruple time. Let us choose the latter—not that it makes any particular difference—but just to illustrate. (See Ex. 18.)

Ex. 17.

Ex. 18 shows the subject changed to 4-4 time.

The first line "a" has no alteration except as to time and figure.

The second line "b" is the same as "a," with the accent changed. The two first notes are now made preparatory, while the third note comes on the principal accent—the down beat.

The third line is the same as "b," with the addition of grace notes. (These grace notes are changes to full-sized notes in the fourth line; notice their value is taken out of the notes to which they are attached.)

The fourth line "d" is the same as "b," with the addition of auxiliary notes. (You can see where we get these auxiliary notes by observing the grace notes in the third line, "c.")

The last line in Ex. 18 (letter "d") gives a little gavotte which can be further eloborated by extending some of the intervals as shown in previous examples. Ex. 19 will illustrate one way of extending some of the intervals, though your own fancy will doubtless suggest others. (See Ex. 19.)

Ex. 19.

The figures given in Ex. 18 should suggest many variations of the subject given. For example, take the second line ("b") and lengthen its accented notes. Ex. 20 gives an illustration of this. You will notice the character of the melody is considerably changed, though the melody itself is easily recognizable. (See Ex. 20.)

Ex. 20.

The accompaniment in Ex. 20 is a "running accompaniment"—legato; this gives the number a sort of a sentimental character.

We have arranged with Mr. W. C. Simon to print a page of original composition in this reduced style at certain intervals. The following score is an original composition—the third of a series of ten or twelve numbers which will be suitable for certain styles of dramatic subjects under the general classification of society dramas. The complete sets will be available in loose leaf form and will be a welcome addition to the music libraries of orchestra leaders.

Mr. Simon is prepared to undertake original musical compositions or adaptations for any production or special occasion and may be addressed in care of the Moving Picture World.

Musical Setting for "As a Woman Sows"

Released January 24 by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg by special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Mutual films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "As a Woman Sows" were prepared by the photoplay department of the New York music publishing house of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

Further inquiries concerning any phase of the work of the orchestra leader in photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

JACK COHN GETS DINNER.

In honor of the great scoop registered in procuring pictures of the Astor Cup Race after the exclusive privilege had been sold to another concern, and of showing his pictures of the race at the Strand Theater on Broadway three hours after the race started, Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly was tendered a dinner party by the editors of the motion picture weeklies of New York City. The event took place in Murray's Restaurant on Forty-second street Wednesday night, January 19, and it was an occasion of congratulations, praise and a spirit of good feeling prevailed throughout the evening. Those who had charge of the affair were Pell Mitchell, editor Mutual Weekly; S. MacKean, Hearst-Vitagraph; Messrs. Mayell and Cohen, of Pathe's Weekly, and Fred Beck, of Paramount News-Pictures.

Mr. Cohn not only scored a beat in getting the pictures and being the first to show them, but also beat the exclusive privilege concern when they brought suit and an injunction against him, the court deciding that when a person purchases a ticket for any event, that it includes the rights to photograph it as well as look at it. This was such a great victory not only for the Universal and Jack Cohn, but for the entire industry as well, that the different editors gathered and decided to show Jack how they appreciated his efforts.

MACKENZIE'S "PRECIOUS PACKET" FINISHED.

Donald Mackenzie, the Pathe producer, has finished his Gold Rooster play, "The Precious Packet," and showed it privately in the Pathe showrooms. The picture made a most favorable impression and will probably be placed upon the program at an early date. It is adapted from the book by Fred Jackson and features Ralph Kellard and Lois Meredith.

New York Operators' Ball

Big Gathering Assembles at Central Opera House and a Good Time Is Enjoyed by All—Anita Stewart Leads Grand March.

ON SUNDAY evening, January 16, the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union No. 306, I. A. T. S. E., gave their annual ball at Central Opera House, New York City. Now the Central Opera House hall is rather a huge proposition in point of size, yet large as it is, it was even more than comfortably filled by the gathering which was a very distinct credit to the organization.

The ball was preceded by an entertainment which lasted from 8 o'clock until 11, the artists appearing therein were, judging by the laughter and applause, all good.

Among the notables present were John Skerrett, general manager, and William C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, (the latter being a member of the organization and chairman of the ball committee), Frank Cannock, the inventor of the Simplex machine, and Ernest C. Baerveldt, special representative of the Precision Machine Company; Howard Coles, president of the Coles Motion Picture Machine Corporation; Mr. Robin, sales representative of the Baird Motion Picture Machine Company; M. D. Kopple, president of the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company; H. T. Edwards, president and treasurer of the Picture Theatre Equipment Company; Charles Shay, international president of the I. A. T. S. E., many actors and actresses of note, and last, but by no manner of means least, Miss Anita Stewart, of the Vitagraph Company, who led the Grand March with International President Shay.

The Grand March was directed by Harry Mountford, organizer for the White Rats, and splendidly done. The light effects were good, and the whole affair from the beginning of the entertainment at 8 P. M., till the last weary, happy couple left the hall, at 4 A. M., passed off without even the suggestion of a hitch. This, of course, did not happen by accident. It was due to the untiring efforts of the officials of the organization and the committee headed by Brother Smith, which had charge of the affair.

At the end of the Grand March Miss Anita Stewart, International President Shay, International Vice-President Higgins, Harry Mountford of the White Rats and Editor F. H. Richardson were called to the stage and introduced to the guests of Local 306, following which presentations were made as follows: International President Shay, a costly and beautiful wall plaque; International Vice-President Higgins, a loving cup; Joseph A. Crehan, president Local Union 306, a watch and chain, suitably engraved; Fred Stoffregen, secretary Local Union 306, a loving cup, all in token of the services these various officials have rendered, and of the love and esteem in which they are held.

And right here, I have been requested by the organization to express its sincere appreciation and cordial good will to Miss Anita Stewart. Miss Stewart had promised to be present. There is but one word that would adequately describe the weather condition on that night: that word is "beastly." Miss Stewart had had an extremely hard day, and, moreover, was not at all well; yet, accompanied by her charming mother, she, at very real and very great personal inconvenience, kept faith and did as she had promised.

I am sorry to say that this is something not always done, and the organization feels that Miss Stewart, under the conditions, is entitled to something more than a mere word of thanks.

Taken all in all, the ball was in every way a decided success. The accompanying photograph shows the line-up at the end of the Grand March. President Shay, Miss Stewart and the officers of the Union are in the front line.

The following Operators' Unions were represented: Paterson Local 362, Newark Local 244, Hudson County Local 384, by our old friend President Sherman, and Trenton, N. J., Local 359, by Benjamin Seigle. F. H. R.

LOUISE HORNER WITH HORSLEY.

A recent addition to the Cub (Mutual) Stock Company headed by George Ovey, is Miss Louise Horner, a comedienne of long experience and known to theatre-goers the country over for her interpretation of "slavey" types. Miss Horner was especially engaged by Director Milton Fahrney to play the "slavey" in "Jerry in the Movies," because of her peculiar fitness for the character. Her work in this release was so excellent, however, that Mr. Fahrney made her a proposition to remain with the company indefinitely.

Miss Horner's engagements on the stage were many, but the one in which she scored her biggest success was "A Knight for a Day," in which she played the "slavey," a part originated by Miss May Vokes. She played the role for several seasons.

COCHRANE TO DIRECT COMPANY.

George Cochrane, brother of Robert H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and who for the past few months has been acting as assistant director to Sydney Ayres, was this week placed at the head of a dramatic producing company of photoplayers at Universal City. The first picture which he will make is a one-reel story adapted for screen purposes by F. McGrew Willis from the story by Laura Oakley. In it Carmen Phillips and Douglas Gerrard play the leading roles.

McRAE TO DIRECT 101 BISON FILMS.

Abandoning for the time being the plan of touring the Orient, making pictures, Henry McRae is within a few days to commence the production of big, spectacular two-reel 101 Bison releases at Universal City. Regarding the proposed trip to the far east, latest developments indicate that it will be postponed until some time in the spring.

Frank Beal, Selig director, is producing "The Girl With the Lantern," a real railroad story. Kathlyn Williams, Harry Mestayer, Lillian Hayward, C. C. Holland and Guy Oliver are the principals.

Third Annual Entertainment and Ball of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union, Local 306, at Central Opera House, New York, January 16.

Mutual Masterpictures

Second Week's Offering Contains Three Strong Subjects of Five Reels Each.

SECOND of the weekly group of three Mutual Masterpictures, Edition de Luxe, to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation, are announced as follows: "As a Woman Sows"—five reels—Monday, January 24; "Lord Loveland Discovers America"—five reels—Thursday, January 27; "Betrayed"—five reels—Saturday, January 29.

"As a Woman Sows," first of the feature releases for the week, is a Gaumont production, featuring the popular stage and screen star, Gertrude Robinson, supported by Alexander Gaden, equally well known for his many successes on the speaking stage and the screen, and an exceptionally powerful cast of regular Gaumont stock players. It is the initial release of the Gaumont studios under the title of Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, and depicts the story of a young wife's folly, in which Miss Robinson portrays the part of the wife. The story is based on a man's fight for political supremacy, during which he becomes so obsessed that he neglects his wife, leaving her to the companionship of an unscrupulous friend.

"Lord Loveland Discovers America," second of the Mutual Masterpictures, Edition de Duxe, for release during the week of January 24, is from the famous story of the same name by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, whose various offerings to the world of fiction have won them wide acclaim. In this production from the American studios, Arthur Maude scores one of his greatest screen achievements in the role of "Lord Loveland." Constance Crawley, who has shared honors with M. Maude in a number of feature productions screened at the American studios for the Mutual, appears in Mr. Maude's support. Her portrayal of "Leslie Dreamer" is conceded one of Miss Crawley's most excellent screen characterizations. Others in the cast are William Carroll, Charles Newton, William Frawley, George Clancy and Nell Franzen.

"Betrayed" was written especially for Miss De Carlton and presents her in a role entirely new to her admirers. As the daughter of an old Indian chief who quits the Western reservation for the Eastern metropolis, this young star renders an exceptionally powerful characterization.

"Betrayed" is a drama full of adventure and throughout it runs one of the prettiest love stories imaginable. It is beyond doubt, one of the best pictures that has ever come from the New Rochelle studios.

William S. Hart in the Wilds

Noted Ince Star Making a Northern Canadian Film in Boulder Creek Locale.

WILLIAM S. HART, perhaps the most popular of all portrayers of virile roles, has been spending the last fortnight with his company in the wilds of the Boulder Creek region in Northern California. The accompanying picture shows them at luncheon near some log shacks which they use for sleeping purposes. Among the great quantity of equipment taken to Boulder Creek were a large number of sleighs and horses to depict the snow scenes in the story. It is laid in Northern Canada and involves several hazardous feats, among them being a fierce hand-to-hand combat beneath the surface of an icy lake. Another is a daring ride on horseback over a rope bridge that crosses a deep gully. The scenario was written by J. G. Hawks.

William S. Hart and Company in Northern California.

The company travelled in true theatrical style, having three sleeping cars and several baggage cars of their own. They were preceded by an advance agent, or rather a location man, who picked out the best scenes in the wild and rocky country for staging the story.

Each succeeding story filmed by Hart for Thomas H. Ince has shown even stronger than its predecessors. It is said that "Hell's Hinges," the coming Triangle release in which Hart is starred as a Western character, will prove a revelation of dramatic strength.

Betty Riggs Now Evelyn Brent

FROM now on Betty Riggs, the pretty seventeen-year-old ingenue appearing in Metro feature productions, will put aside that perfectly good, but homespun, name for the more euphonius name of Evelyn Brent. It was so ordained by the young lady herself, when after a brief, but successful career in motion pictures, she came into her own with the prominent role of Snowbird, an Indian girl, in support of Edmund Breese, in "The Lure of Heart's Desire." This marvelous story of the Alaskan wastes and New York society, has just been completed for Metro by the Popular Plays and Players.

Evelyn Brent.

Less than a year ago Miss Brent was a student in the Training School of the Normal College in New York City. Her folks would not listen to her entreaties to allow her to go on the stage. So she played hookey one day, and was successful in obtaining a very small part in "The Heart of a Painted Woman," with Mme. Petrova, at the Popular Plays and Players studio. Next she was given a better role at the same studio in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," with Edmund Breese. After that she was put under contract with the Popular Plays and Players, and given the big role of Snowbird in the last production. She is to be featured shortly in a big Metro production.

Miss Brent was born in Tampa, Florida, but removed with her parents to New York when a child. Beside possessing a charming personality and rare dramatic ability, Miss Brent is an expert at horseback riding, swimming, dancing and skating. In "The Lure of Heart's Desire," Miss Brent, who is fond of all kinds of animals, learned to drive a dog team, and before the picture was completed she had become quite expert at that difficult task.

VAL PAUL BECOMES PROUD FATHER.

Who is the happiest man at the Universal City studios? Beyond the shadow of a doubt, it is Val Paul, heavy character actor with Lynn Reynolds' company of Universalities, for this week there was born in the Paul family a seven-pound boy, who is said to be the "living image" of Val, senior. Latest reports announce that mother and son are both doing well.

SHIELD AND McCRAY DIRECT JOKER COMPANY.

Ernie Shield and Roy McCray, both veterans with the Universal's Pacific Coast corps of photoplay builders, have this week been put in charge as co-directors of a company of comedians who will appear in the production of one reel Joker comedies, supplementing tha films of Allen Curtis's company of the same release brand.

Current Vitagraph Program

Releases for the Week of January 31 Feature May Robson, Mary Anderson and Edith Storey.

MAY ROBSON, Broadway's favorite actress, heads the cast in a new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon comedy that in turn heads the releases of that company for the week commencing January 31. "A Night Out" is the vehicle in which Miss Robson endears herself to photoplay fans in an intensely amusing and original character role.

Among the other releases for that week is a Broadway Star Feature, "Bill Peters' Kid," that will send thrills through even the most hardened man. Mary Anderson, sweet and girlish, kills a rabbit and proceeds to skin it with a nonchalance that belies the tumultuous emotion in her heart. "Jane's Bashful Hero" gives a new view of Edith Storey as the village belle in a one-part comedy. "The Wrong Mr. Wright" is another comedy release, featuring Jewell Hunt, "the dance girl of the movies."

"A Night Out," written in collaboration with Miss Robson and Charles T. Dazey, who is known for his "In Old Kentucky," presents situations that enable Miss Robson to demonstrate her art. She is cast as Granmum to whom a girlhood has been denied and whose youthful heart is still filled with love of play and excitement. Miss Robson instills her youthful vigor into the role of Granmum, tangoes, runs and even climbs up an ivy vine to surreptitiously enter her home after the escapade. Assisting her are a capable cast of Vitagraph comedians, including Hughey Mack, Kate Price, William Shea, George Cooper, Arthur Cozine, Belle Bruce and others. George D. Baker produced the film, which is in five parts.

"Bill Peters' Kid," a three-part comedy from the coast company of the Vitagraph, is released on Saturday, February 5. It is a simple story, beautifully told under Rollin Stur-geon's directions, and shows Mary Anderson as a child of the desert.

Edith Storey, whose versatile talents have won for her fame and fortune under the Vitagraph standard, is seen in a new role in "Jane's Bashful Hero," released as a one-part comedy on January 31. Edith is Jane, and Donald McBride is Willie, a bashful young man. He is lacking in the nerve necessary to "pop the question," so Jane helps him out with the aid of a dummy silhouetted on the window blind.

In "The Wrong Mr. Wright" Miss Jewell Hunt plays the part of the daughter of a Mr. Wright who gets into the hotel room of another Mr. Wright. The comedy has splendid comedy situations, well brought out under the direction of C. Jay Williams. It is released as a one-part comedy on Friday, February 4.

Younger Keystoners

Louise Fazenda, Harry Gribben and Harry McCoy Making Names for Themselves in New Comedies.

THE past three months have witnessed the rise to artistic prominence of a dozen or more comparatively new Triangle-Keystone players. Such daredevil comedies as "A Submarine Pirate," "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts" and "Saved by Wireless" have brought out a new sort of reckless valor in the films. In comic character delineation, on the other hand, plays like "Her Painted Hero," "His Father's Footsteps," "The Hunt," and "The Great Pearl Robbery" have afforded unusual opportunities for the younger artists as well as the stars.

In particular Miss Louise Fazenda has developed a quite new line of eccentric comedy characters which has stamped her as a comer in the film world. In "A Game Old Knight" she played the ugly princess with a rare sense of humor. Then in "The Great Vacuum Robbery" she was the lady crook at the other extreme of looks from the ugly maid, extremely knowing and fascinating. Now in "His Hereafter," a burlesque of the Western type of story, she is fittingly described as "a sweet character in a faro frame," being the daughter of Harry Booker, who has the role of a gambling house proprietor. Her versatility has proven equal to each of these parts and she will no doubt get the lead in a forthcoming play. The young woman who is only 19, is a native of Lafayette, Ind., and undertook serious dramatic roles at the start. Her sense of humor and her love of grimaces inevitably led her into comics. After a short period with another film company she joined the Keystone about two years ago.

Louise Fazenda.

Harry Gribben, another young Keystoner, has been made use of during the Fall and Winter in a large number of more or less straight roles. Among these have been the artist in "A Janitor's Wife's Temptation," the bomb-thrower in "The Worst of Friends," the husband in "Perils of the Park," and the escort in "A Movie Star." Mr. Gribben is an extremely agile worker equal to all the strenuous demands of Keystoning. Another rising player is Harry McCoy, who is seen as the gardener in "Perils of the Park."

MOROSCO STUDIOS CONTINUE TO GROW.

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company studios continue to branch out in space and activity as well as enlarging its working staff. A spacious and well-equipped stockroom has been added to the plant which will enable this company to buy supplies in quantities when the market is right. The new stockroom is housed in a specially erected building of corrugated iron and faces the Council street lane through the Morosco colony, adjoining the carpenter shop.

Russel Stapleton, formerly head of the order department of H. J. Heinz & Co. in Los Angeles, has been engaged to take charge. Another addition to the working staff has been made in the person of Charles Stallings, formerly of the American in Santa Barbara.

TRAVERS VALE COMPLETES "THE CHASM."

Travers Vale, former Biograph producer, who recently joined the producing staff of the Universal forces at their Pacific Coast studios, has just completed his first release, a two-reel drama by Harvey Gates, entitled "The Chasm."

V-L-S-E Men Confer

Eastern Forces of Big Four Gather in New York for a Confab—Sales Methods Discussed.

EVIDENCE that the selling methods which V-L-S-E has instituted for serving and co-operating with the exhibitor, are fast gaining ground for this organization, was presented at the convention of the branch managers and representatives of the New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Washington offices, held on Sunday, January 15th, at the home office, 1600 Broadway, New York.

General Manager Walter W. Irwin, and Assistant General Manager A. W. Goff, defined in detail the company's policies of personal screen inspection, minimum and maximum price ratings, open-booking and the block and quota systems, and then placed these subjects before the meeting for frank open discussion from the exhibitor's viewpoint.

That the exhibitor can best judge a feature after seeing it screened, and then booking it according to the tastes of his individual neighborhood, was agreed to unanimously, and that such personal showing is of inestimable value in providing him with pictures which assure a profit.

It was pointed out that the only objections that could possibly arise from the minimum and maximum policy would be due to the fact that either the exhibitor did not fully understand the advantages that accrue to him by booking a subject on its box office drawing power—and not what it cost the manufacturer to produce—or that a salesman made the mistake of selling film instead of showing the exhibitor how the minimum and maximum policy assures him of a profit, whether a picture is good, bad or indifferent. "In other words," said Mr. Irwin, "the minimum and maximum policy resolves itself in selling the exhibitor any feature he wants at the maximum price at which he can make money, as measured by his house and business."

The flexibility of this plan as outlined, plus the advantages of the open-booking policy (which allows an exhibitor to book what he wants when he wants it, and as long as he wants it) brought forth the consideration of the possibility that the exhibitor in the large towns might have a shade the better of the small town exhibitor, because of the circumstances of booking the film over which no one has control. To obviate this possibility, V-L-S-E is inaugurating a system of rapid turnovers, which keeps the prints constantly working for the best interests of every exhibitor.

Special emphasis was laid on the "block and quota" system which brings the individual salesman in constant touch with every exhibitor in his territory, and which allows him more time to give to the needs and problems of each exhibitor in his "block." A "quota" which it does not intimately concern the exhibitor is a method the organization has of keeping the salesmen jacked up to top-notch efficiency, which means that the exhibitor receives more intimate and effective service.

Besides these ideas of sales policy, many questions for the handling of paper and cuts, and for the good and welfare of the industry as a whole, were discussed. Particular stress was laid upon the standardization of features to attain a continuously consistent program, which, in other words, brings the test value of each production right into the hands of the public and will ultimately make the motion picture patrons their own booking clerks.

Coming directly after Mr. Goff's western trip, where he visited all the exchanges on the Pacific slope, then Chicago, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Kansas City, Cleveland and Detroit, this convention crystallized the fundamental idea of the V-L-S-E to help the exhibitor help himself make more money, by applying the policies of personal screen inspection, and open-bookings on a minimum and maximum price basis.

Those of the home office who participated at the convention were: General Manager Irwin, Assistant General Manager Goff; L. J. Bamberger, manager of the sales promotion department; E. L. Masters, advertising and publicity department; V. N. Shapiro, assistant advertising and publicity director; A. I. Siegel, Secretary to Mr. Irwin. The Boston contingent headed by Manager George Balsdon, brought Representatives Brady, Butler and Reardon. From Philadelphia came Manager J. S. Hebrew and his salesmen, Moyer, Mowery and Heenan. Washington sub-office was represented by Frank B. Spurrier and Mr. Bachrach. The new York branch had present Mr. F. F. Hartich, assistant branch manager, George Balsdon, Jr., and salesmen, Farber, Erichson and Clark.

JAMES AUBREY SIGNS LONG TERM CONTRACT.

James Aubrey, the original "Heinie" of "Heinie and Louie" comedy fame, has recently signed a long term contract to continue playing Heinie in the above mentioned comedies, with the Mittenthal Film Co., Inc. At a recent beefsteak dinner given by the Pathe Club, Mr. Aubrey was introduced to Charles Pathe, who would not believe Mr. Aubrey was Heinie. He could not be convinced and finally asked Mr. Aubrey to prove it by giving a specimen of his work. Mr. Aubrey at once opened fire with his inimitable facial expressions, dislocations of the nose, dislocations of the eyebrows, etc. Mr. Pathe, clapping him on the back, said: "Your face is your fortune."

New Equitable Schedule

Later Productions Call for a Rearrangement of Releases—Good Subjects Announced.

THE newly-arranged schedule of releases of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation calls for the strongest consecutive list of features yet put out by that concern. The new arrangement of releases was prompted by the finished pictures now on the shelf and those almost completed being of such divergent nature and widely differing plots that a readjustment of releases made for the betterment of the program in its entirety and as units.

"Behind Closed Doors," in which Marie Empress debuts on the Equitable program, and which was to have been released December 10, will be the regular release for January 31. Following "Behind Closed Doors" will come Alice Brady in "The Woman in 47," a most extraordinary story of virile dramatic intent, in which Miss Brady is seen in a role entirely dissimilar to that portrayed by Miss Empress and yet is as sustaining in interest and suspense as it is possible to make a dramatic tale. "The Woman in 47" will be seen on the regular Equitable program February 7.

Roy L. McCardell's first contribution to the Equitable story staff will be noted in "The Question," which comes to the screen via Equitable on February 14 and which affords Marguerite Leslie her first opportunity in the silent drama field. Miss Leslie, formerly leading woman for Sir Henry Irving, Herbert Tree and other famous actors, will portray the role of the woman, undecided between a baby and her dog, chooses the latter. "The Question" is greatly different in every form from either "Behind Closed Doors," "The Woman in 47" or "The Clarion," which is the release for February 21 and which will see Carlyle Blackwell in his first Equitable picture.

"The Clarion" is based on Samuel Hopkins Adams' great journalistic tirade against patent medicines, which occupied the columns of important daily papers for several years and which was instrumental in the introduction of Dr. Wiley's pure food and drugs act. Mary Boland, formerly co-starred with John Drew in many of his biggest stage successes, will become Equitabilized February 28 in the Triumph Film Corporation's production of "Three Pairs of Shoes," in which she will be supported by an exceptional cast of well-known stage and screen players.

"Three Pairs of Shoes" is again entirely different from any of the aforementioned productions and fits into the program well as a fanciful story with dramatic and novelty situations.

Frank Sheridan, Arthur Ashley and a cast of noted artists follows on March 6 in "The Struggle" which is now being produced by John Ince and in which sensational climaxes run rampant. On March 13 Gail Kane, the leading Equitable star, will make her second appearance on the program in a novel, tense and picturesque production, "Her God," which is unlike anything heretofore screened by Equitable or any other concern and which gives talented Miss Kane unusual opportunities to display her varied histrionic abilities.

"Passers-By," C. Haddon Chambers' powerful story, comes on the program March 20 with the star who originated the leading role in the stage production back in the part. "Passers-By" represents the first work for the screen of a writer of the importance of Mr. Chambers. Bruce McRae has replaced Emmett Corrigan in "The Chain Invisible," which will be seen March 27 and which will be Frank Powell's first contribution to Equitable. Contrary to previous reports, Irving Cummings will not be co-featured in support of Jane Grey in "Man and His Angel," it having been decided to place Henri Bergman in the role.

SALES MANUAL AIDS EXHIBITORS.

R. W. MacFarland, of the Lubin Company, is preparing a series of beautifully colored sales manuals for each of the productions of that company, released through the V-L-S-E. These are printed on a highly coated paper, and reproduce in the exact colors, the posters which are available for each production. The illustrations include those of a half sheet, one sheet, three sheet, six sheet and twenty-four sheet. In addition, the sales manual contains a synopsis of the story with the cast, and the complete list of advertising, which may be obtained on the production.

In each of these manuals there is also enclosed 9x12 publicity folders, indexed for quick reference, and containing reproductions of half tones which the exhibitor can use in his press matter. In other words, the sales manuals give the exhibitor all the information necessary to the proper selection and exploitation of a film.

Vitagraph Increases Facilities

Will Build New Studio at Flatbush—Many New Ideas Will Be Incorporated.

IN KEEPING with the new policy about to be announced by the Vitagraph Company, plans are under foot to construct a new type of studio on one of the plots owned by the Vitagraph Company in Flatbush, New York. Construction engineers have been at work on these plans and within a short while ground will be broken for the new studio, directly behind the present plant. The new studio will approximate 150 by 200 feet, and it is planned to lay out this proposition in such a way that will enable at least ten directors to work at the same time.

A modern and unique lighting system will be installed, and from present indications it looks as though many revolutionary effects in this branch of the industry will be embodied in this system. The plans as outlined make provision for the rapid installation of sets, and it is intimated that a new method of scenic effects will be utilized by this company.

One of the most radical changes in studio construction is the fact that the new studios will contain ten separate and distinct studios. In other words, it is planned by the Vitagraph Company to have a bedroom, living-room, drawing-room, kitchen, bathroom, and in fact every style room, all on one floor of this studio. The partitions will be solid construction and each room will represent the ideal of its type.

One point of particular interest is the fact that the sets will be arranged in such a way as to give particularly long throws.

The structure will be modern steel and concrete, and particular attention has been paid to the ventilating and heating appliances.

James Young Goes to Lasky

Director of Vitagraph and World Film, Accompanied by Assistant and Cameraman, on Way to Coast.

JAMES YOUNG, one of the best known directors in the motion picture industry, started on Wednesday from New York for the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, Cal. In the party besides Mr. Young will be his assistant director, Edward Hollywood, and Mrs. Hollywood; head cameraman, E. C. Corwin, Mrs. Corwin and their child, and Mr. Young's servants.

One of Mr. Young's chief claims to fame has been by reason of the series of brilliant productions he has made in recent years in which his wife, Clara Kimball Young, has appeared as the star. Mr. and Mrs. Young were prominent in the Vitagraph studios for five years. He produced many one and two-reel subjects for this company, including the ever successful "My Official Wife" and "Goodness Gracious," the burlesque photoplay which was on the opening program of the Vitagraph theater, New York, and which attracted widespread attention, as it was the first successful use of the burlesque and satiric strain in motion pictures.

The unusual success that has come to Clara Kimball Young has been attributed in no small degree to Mr. Young's abilities as a director. "Hearts in Exile" is one of their collaborated efforts. Among other popular features he has produced are "Lola," "The Deep Purple," "Marrying Money," "Little Miss Brown," "Over-Night," "The Heart of the Blue Ridge" and others. Mr. Young prepared all of these for their photodramatic versions.

By reason of Mr. Young's experience both as writer and director, it is expected that he will be a valuable addition to the staff of Lasky directors, which includes Cecil B. De Mille, director general; William C. De Mille, Frank Reicher, George Melford, Paul Dickey and others.

ALICE BRADY BUSY WITH PICTURES.

Miss Alice Brady has been obliged to decline an advantageous offer from George M. Cohan to play the leading feminine part in his new review to be produced shortly at the Astor theater. Miss Brady's time for the past ten months has been constantly occupied in moving picture work, and her contracts in this field will have no cessation until late in the spring, when she will resume acting upon the speaking stage as the featured player in a new comedy to be shown in one of the Shubert theaters. She left recently for North Carolina to appear in the opening scenes of a new motion picture drama, having just finished the screen version of Compton Mackenzie's widely-read novel, "Carnival," which in its photoplay form is called "The Ballet Girl."

Schools Again

Leading Film Man Calls Attention to Another Phase of This Swindling Game—A New Bait.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

RECENTLY an article on schools of acting was printed in these columns and attracted wide-spread attention. It is evident that the schools are widely established, for from all parts of the country came stories of the local ventures. There must be hundreds of these traveling "professors," moving about the country and getting the cream of the business before they pass along.

Still more wide-spread is the reach of the correspondence schools. One of these is run from Chicago by a former photoplay actor, and there are several others; all making their appeal to the credulous, for it is absurd to suppose that any person really imagines that acting, either for the screen or the stage can be taught by mail. One "course" issued by a firm in one of the smaller cities consists of a series of pictures "registering" the various emotions. The would-be actor is told to practice the reproduction of these emotions in front of a mirror until perfection is reached, when he can get a diploma and go out and push Francis Bushman out of his job.

William Wright, of the Kalem company, calls attention to another school in a letter in which he says:

> Herewith find letter, applying for a position. This is a sample of thousands we have received in the last several months, indicating that some particular school is reaping an enormous harvest. Each of these letters begins the same:
> "I have made a very special and careful study of film acting."
> We have received such communications from all over the United States. Several times the writer has been inclined to send you one of the letters, but passed it up. However, here it is.

The letter, it should be understood, is the buffer that stands between the school and the Post Office Inspectors over the line "We show you how to get a position when proficient." The student does not stop to ask what this showing consists of. He takes it for granted that he will be fully instructed so that he can obtain work. It sounds almost like a guarantee that he will be given employment when the course is completed, but the showing consists of a form letter that is to be copied and sent to a list of studio addresses If someone says "yes" then the applicant has a position just as McIntyre and Heath might have had the roast beef in their vaudeville act.

Evidently this "actor" did not fully follow the form, but sought to improve upon it, for his letter runs:

> I have made a verry Special and Careful studdy of film acting and I Should like to have an opportunity of joining some of your extras at your Studio I am not afraid of hard work and I feel that I have enough talent and enough knowledge of the buisness to insure your Consideration I know that you are well filled with applications but I am sure that if you will give me a trial you will find a place for me among your regular extras I am willing to work and capable of working I enclose a Self addressed and Stamped envelope and ask that I may kindly receive a reply.

The letter is written from an Ohio town. Presumbaly he supposed that the Kalem company will make it worth his while to come to New York on his mere assurance that he will be found worthy of a place among the "regular extras." His lack of education shows in his handwriting, his spelling and his punctation, or rather a lack of it, for there is not a single punctation mark in the entire communication, which covers two sheets torn from a pad.

Presumably the same lack of education showed in his correspondence with the school, but they did not care. They were out for money and if some foolish boy or girl half starves to get the money for the course, they find that the money is just as spendable as that which comes from their more affluent pupils.

There was developed another scheme not long ago. Answering an advertisement in a daily paper for actors, the applicant was told to come to a Staten Island address. There it was explained to him that the advertiser was not in need of assistance, but that, from the desire to help others, he had inserted the advertisement. Directors, he was told, will not employ players until they know how to act. This advertiser was willing to make a hundred foot film of the applicant, showing him registering the various emotions. Armed with this can of film he could lay siege to the directors, who would at once take him into the projection room, have the film run off and presumably hire him on the spot. The cost was a dollar a foot. Here it seemed that the advertiser was willing to give something for the money, though ten dollars would amply cover the cost of the sort of film that would be made.

With New York studios crowded with actors willing to work for a starvation wage and with hundreds out of employment in Los Angeles, with these facts advertised in the trade press, it seems strange that the schools should have so many pupils, but it is always the same. Each applicant is certain that he is more clever than the rest and if he (or she) only had a chance they would at once advance to stellar honors.

It is bad enough to suppose that acting can be taught in a few lessons, but there is no use trying to argue with people who believe that they can become Chaplins or Pickfords merely through making faces at a looking glass. It may seem to be useless, but it would be a fine thing if the Motion Picture Board of Trade should enlist the aid of the daily press in educating the public as to these swindles, for swindles they are and nothing else.

Kate Davis Again at Large

Censorship Agitator Is on the War Path—Secures Publication of Fake Reports in Daily Press.

ABOUT two years ago a woman of the short-haired type, hailing from Wilkesbarre, Pa., named Kate Davis, attempted to organize censorship leagues among the women in a number of large cities. At that time she succeeded in stirring up considerable trouble for exhibitors. For a time her activities were cut short by some personal difficulties which she got into in her home town. But she is again abroad, working the old game in a new way. Her plan is to call a meeting of exhibitors under some pretense or other and then secure the publication of the alleged proceedings in the local press. She was first heard from in Cleveland, where, without even attending the meeting, she induced the daily papers to print many misleading statements of what she said occurred there.

The latest story of her activities comes from Philadelphia. The Moving Picture World correspondent sent in the following story of the affair:

"The story published in many of the leading newspapers of Philadelphia during the past week to the effect that Miss Kate Davis, head of the People's Aid Association, had read a paper before some seventy-five of the leading exhibitors at the headquarters of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League, 1339 Vine street, in which address she described the moving pictures being exhibited in some 1,000,000 theaters scattered throughout the United States, as an insult to human intelligence, horrible, demoralizing and lurid, was purely a hoax, and as such should have received little attention from intelligent citizens.

"The truth of the matter was that Miss Davis did call at the headquarters of the league, that she did not make any such an address before an audience and that she was hand in hand in sympathy with the exhibitors. When she paid her respects to the exhibitors of Philadelphia there were only three or four gentlemen in attendance and she introduced herself and explained her motives, declaring that she was on her way to New York to visit the Motion Picture Board of Trade.

"How this story could have been published in responsible newspapers without having been verified is hard to explain, but the fact remains that it did appear and that it was read by thousands and thousands of Philadelphia's moving picture enthusiasts who were of necessity somewhat impressed with its contents. It would seem befitting that someone, somehow, forced one paper who gave the story a headline and in which paper possibly forty moving picture theaters advertise, to print a retraction. If the moving picture industry, like any other industry or trade, is to be respected by the press and by the public at large, it will come about through their own energies along that line and not through a general coincidence of affairs. It is distressing to think that Philadelphia moving picture men would let anything like that be put over without registering a comeback. To think that the story said that the talk was given before seventy-five local exhibitors, when truly there were but two present when Miss Davis called."

California Changes Marketing Policy

Alex Beyfuss, General Manager of San Francisco Concern, Announces Shift to State Rights Plan.

THE California Motion Picture Corporation will in the future release its subjects on the state rights basis. This was the announcement during the week of Alex E. Beyfuss, vice-president and general manager of the company. Mr. Beyfuss has been in New York for the past two months, and in that time he has done much investigating of conditions. He has interviewed many men and has carefully weighed what they have told him. He has reached the conclusion that the marketing of the productions of his company can be accomplished to the best advantage of all concerned by avoiding the restrictions imposed by the program method. He believes the present is the psychological time to return to the system that in the past yielded good results.

The first subject to be placed before the independent buyers will be "The Unwritten Law," the script of which was written by Captain Leslie Peacocke and which featured in the leading role Beatriz Michelena, the successful player who has been at the head of the cast in every picture produced by the California in its two years of existence. This production has already been privately shown in New York. For the privilege of purchase outright several alluring offers have been made. On the other hand, there have been so many applications for state rights that Mr. Beyfuss has determined that allotment by territories is the best plan. His decision has been ratified by the officers of his company.

"We have no quarrel with the program distributors," declared Mr. Beyfuss. "We believe that the average feature should be released through the program company. The exceptional feature, however, will earn more money for both exhibitor and manufacturer if it is handled by a state rights buyer who gives his entire attention not only to the selling, advertising and proper presentation, but who is not limited to a fixed program price. For instance, in San Francisco a certain theater offered us $1,500 for the first week's showing of one of our features, but because another house had contracted for the program we were releasing on we received only $500 for the same showing. Our prestige was not helped any by being in the "second" theater. On the other hand, the contract rate of our releasing company in certain smaller towns in the South was $25 per day, which was more than the drawing power of the picture in that territory warranted. This kept exhibitors from booking the picture. Whereas we might have received $15 per day, we did not get anything in the South. We lost money on the coast by the price being too low and in the South by the price being too high.

"The directors of the California Motion Picture Corporation are firmly convinced that the demand is for quality pictures; hence they will only release six pictures this year; but these six pictures must be better than program or they will not be released. Better than program quality—that slogan sounds good, doesn't it? Henceforth we will adopt it. We have not only the good intentions but the finances and the organization to carry this policy out.

"The California Motion Picture Corporation is now free to adopt this most unusual policy because it is not hampered by any set release dates or by contract with any program company. This policy is of especial interest to state rights buyers because it assures them not only of a great film dramatization with Beatriz Michelena in 'The Unwritten Law' but five other equally great pictures during 1916.

"As we have had considerable experience with program companies, we know how hard the struggle for existence is at this time. We are confident that those whose purse is long enough to withstand the strain of competition and constant improvement and who keep up with the procession will make a great deal of money in the end, because weak manufacturers who must sell one picture at any price to start making another one will not be in business ultimately. Then there will be fair profits and pleasanter business methods for the survivors.

"Many film executives will probably take issue with me, but I have heard that one of the directors of an important concern admitted they lost $50,000 by releasing an exceptional feature to strengthen their regular program. In that case a real big picture suffered by having weak pictures tied to its tail. Despite the sacrifice made by this film concern, it is doubtful whether the exhibitor really benefited, because the average exchange manager in any organization is almost sure to force the exhibitor to book two or three weak pictures at a higher price than they are really worth to get this one exceptional picture. A number of film companies are talking the open booking policy, but their managers out in the country, who must collect as many dollars as possible, are certain to carry on their methods of having the exhibitor take a few weak productions with every strong one.

"The California Motion Picture Corporation is composed of hard-headed and successful business men. They feel they have overcome the great theatrical hoodoo of 'chance and temperament.' We do not believe that this is a question of luck in producing better than program features. If a concern has the organization and starts with a strong story and a properly prepared scenario as the foundation, a director who uses common sense and he has capable assistants in his camera and laboratory force, and supplied with proper tools—namely, cast and players—then the production will be successful nine times out of ten. Of course, it is true some pictures may turn out somewhat superior to others, some may appeal to the public stronger than others, but we are positive that with us it is no longer a matter of luck in producing good pictures. Beatriz Michelena in 'Salvation Nell' made money for exhibitors everywhere. Every exhibitor who has seen 'The Unwritten Law' desires to book it. See if we don't prove this contention true by making our next picture, 'The Woman Who Dared,' on which we are now actively engaged, an equally good money-maker for the exhibitor also."

Henri Bergman

HENRI BERGMAN, the dramatic character actor, who recently completed the difficult role of the jealous husband in "The House of Tears," the Metro wonderplay in which Emily Stevens is starred, occupies a field all his own on both the speaking stage and on the screen. He is a master delineator of strong dramatic roles, and few can compare with him in the invaluable art of pantomime.

Henri Bergman.

Mr. Bergman has had a long and varied career on both the stage and screen. He has had the advantage of excellent training with a majority of the foremost stars of today. He has appeared as leading man in many notable Broadway productions, playing with Henrietta Crosman, Viola Allen, Nat Goodwin, Stuart Robson, William H. Crane and other prominent artists. He created the leading heavy role in such stage productions as "The Price of Peace," "The Prodigal Son," "The Daughter of Heaven," "Panthea," "The Henrietta," "The Senator" and other successes.

Since joining the Rolfe forces, who produce exclusively for the Metro program, Mr. Bergman has been seen in "The Right of Way" and "One Million Dollars" with William Faversham, "An Enemy to Society" with Hamilton Revelle and Lois Meredith, and in his last feature with Miss Stevens. He will appear again shortly in an early Metro release.

THE DREWS MAKING "SWEET CHARITY."

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the popular, refined fun-makers of motion pictures, who recently signed a contract to appear exclusively on the Metro program, have begun work on their first feature which is called "Sweet Charity." The comedy, which is one reel in length, was written by Mr. Drew.

Besides writing the story, Mr. Drew is directing his own feature, and, being the author, he did not neglect to give himself a good part in the comedy, as he appears in thirty-four of the thirty-five scenes. Mrs. Drew is also prominent in the feature. Their second feature will probably be "The Swooners." These features, which will be released on the Metro program, will be known as the Metro-Drew comedies.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Dustin Farnum at the Strand.

DUSTIN FARNUM is at the Strand theater this week in "The Call of the Cumberlands," a photodramatic version of Charles Neville Buck's famous book of the same name, produced by the Pallas Pictures Company on the Paramount program.

The story deals with a feud war in the South, and Mr. Farnum has the part of a Southern artist who comes to New York and falls under the spell of a beautiful Northern woman, but returns to his old home and the sweetheart of his youth.

The Strand Topical Review, the latest fashions, travel and educational pictures, and a new comedy are also on the program. Grace Hoffman and Bruce Weyman are the new vocal soloists.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

The second week of the new policy instituted by Samuel L. Rothapfel at the Knickerbocker theater included a film version of a Mary Roberts Rinehart story called "Acquitted," with Wilfred Lucas as the featured player. The comedy companion of this dramatic piece was "Perils in the Park," with a typical Keystone cast. Beginning Thursday, these features were succeeded by Orrin Johnson in a screen adaptation of "The Three Musketeers," which Thomas H. Ince has named "D'Artagnan," and another Sennett farce, "A Movie Star." For his musical programme Mr. Rothapfel engaged Alfred de Manby, Alys Baldwin and Thornton D. Urquhart. New and authentic news pictorials were shown and the first of a series of "Seeing America First" views were also presented.

Blanche Sweet at the Broadway.

The Jesse L. Lasky Company are presenting Blanche Sweet in "The Ragamuffin," by William C. DeMille, at the Broadway theater. Miss Sweet has a unique role, and the drama contains many beautiful and interesting scenes. Since her first appearance in photoplays Miss Sweet by her dramatic instinct and charming personality, has become a prominent star in the photodramatic firmament. Wm. C. DeMille, who wrote "The Ragamuffin," is one of America's leading playwrights, and the author of "The Woman," "The Warrens of Virginia," "Strongheart," and many other successful spoken dramas. The usual special features complete the program.

Pauline Frederick in Dual Roles.

Pauline Frederick plays her first dual role since becoming a photoplay star, in the Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Spider," which is scheduled for release on January 27. Although Miss Frederick appears in two characterizations, this is not a double exposure production, as the story is so constructed that the two characters are never brought face to face at any time. By clever cutting, the director, Robert G. Vignola, makes the women see each other without actually meeting.

Famous Players Four Weeks at Strand.

A new Broadway mark was established by the Famous Players Film Co. during the last month when four of that concern's features were shown in succession at the Strand theater in New York. These four productions were "Lydia Gilmore," "The Foundling," "Mice and Men," and "My Lady Incog," in which Pauline Frederick, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and Hazel Dawn were respectively starred.

Though this company, as well as other producers, have had simultaneous exhibitions of two features on Broadway at different theaters, this is the first instance in which the foremost motion picture house in the country has been devoted to the productions of any one concern for an entire month.

GAUMONT PLAYERS MARRY.

Without notifying even their most intimate friends, Miss Kathleen Butler and Henry W. Pemberton were quietly married at Jacksonville, Saturday, January 8. News of the marriage came as a complete surprise to the friends of the couple at the Gaumont winter studio where both have been engaged in screen work. W. J. Butler, the bride's father, had only arrived a few days previous from the Pacific coast.

Thomas Santschi

"I'M TOO BUSY to be interviewed," said Thomas Santschi, the Selig star, when accosted the other day. And Tom Sautschi is too busy to be interviewed at that! It has been four or five years now since Tom Santschi has left the Selig studios for a vacation of any duration. He has been busy directing Selig photoplays and enacting those leading character roles that have endeared him to the photoplay public. Thomas Santschi's next appearance promises to be in "The Crisis," a spectacular drama to be filmed by the Selig Company from Winston Churchill's great novel of ante-bellum days. Director Colin Campbell expects to accompany Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Wheeler Oakman, Eugenie Besserer and other Selig stars from Los Angeles to Chicago within the next six weeks, where preparations for the filming of "The Crisis" will be completed under the direct supervision of William N. Selig.

Thomas Santschi.

Tom Santschi has never worked for any motion picture manufacturing company other than the Selig Polyscope Company. He spent some time with stock companies before beginning work for the Selig Company and has a thorough knowledge of the art of acting. He has appeared in many unusually excellent productions under the Diamond S trademark, including "The Spoilers," "Orders," etc. He is known as the "silent man" of filmland. He is an athlete and an unerring marksman.

THE friends of Charles P. Stewart will be very glad to know that he can be found every day at the Triangle theater, New York. Mr. Stewart is assistant to S. L. Rothapfel in the management of the new theater, and owing to his past experience and genial personality, looks to be the proper man in the proper place.

With his hat at the proper angle and his general appearance showing that time and money had been spent in social "make-up," a tall, good looking young man has appeared amongst us. He just got off the train from the West Coast and he is billed around town as one of the greatest leading men in filmdom. Harold Lockwood has resigned from the American Film Company to accept a very good offer from Metro.

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

THANKS to the courtesy of Stanley Sumner, I paid my first visit to our new Fenway theater—a gem in every way, and strongly suggestive of the Strand in New York City. An air of hospitality prevails on entering when we were greeted by the comely matron, Mme. Le Favre, who has a corps of blue-uniformed girl ushers well trained and noiseless. Conscience troubled me for having so long neglected to see this dainty but commodious playhouse. Though supposedly a Triangle house, the bill was made up of that great success, "A Price for Folly," with the inimitable Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno; a dear little Thanhouser reel, called "The Fisherwoman," featuring Inda Palmer, H. E. Herbert and Geraldine O'Brien, and "The Secret Wire" with Harold Lockwood and May Allison, to say nothing of a splendid orchestra, a good vocalist and several Hearst-Vitagraph pictures presented under the title of "The Fenway Reviews." Alfred de Manby also sang and we heard him for the last time here as he left town for duty at the Knickerbocker under Mr. Rothapfel. The Fenway is attracting the best of the Back Bay (home of the "400"). The auditorium is on the street level and there is a spacious promenade upstairs with a circular balcony all done in soft red. The orchestra is so placed as not to interfere with one's view of the screen. The Hub is "de-lighted" with its new baby. Films are changed twice a week.

The Exeter is also giving us extra good films; and I went over the other night to again see Farrar in "The Temptation," which I saw at the Broadway. Scores of the opera-going set were there to admire the singer's pantomime work. This is a film to see more than once, the second time to watch the artistic work of de Cordova with his violin. He clearly shows his familiarity with that instrument and innate love of music. Again we see a good bit of work at the hands of Sessue Hayakawa, the cleverest Japanese actor here and a big hit in "The Cheat."

A Sunday night reel, "Brought Home," was a little gem, an Essanay offering featuring Ruth Stonehouse and Richard Travers. But why that title when you see the picture story telling of the temptation of the hero to commit suicide and the prevention by his friend who is made to say, "It is folly to take one's life because of losing a woman's love when there are others and there is nothing in the world that love cannot cure"? All very pretty; and he leads him out into the light of day for an auto ride. While spinning along, they accidentally run down a young girl who is a foundling and who has a live kitten in her arms. They take the girl to the bachelor apartment of the would-be suicide, who now finds something in life to occupy his attention, time and money, for he is very wealthy. Of course you know how it ends, but it is a pretty and consistent story, worth while. My idea of the title is "Found—By Accident." He did not "bring" her home but took or carried her there. It was the accident that changed the current of his life and made him find himself.

The Famous Players star, Hazel Dawn, appeared on the Paramount program at the Park in "My Lady Incog" and brought out a somewhat new plot. Sidney Olcott as director showed his skill on all sides, especially in the interiors. "Mice and Men" with dainty Marguerite Clark rounded out a most enjoyable afternoon. Score one for Manager Soriero who took up my suggestion on that "silencer" slide and who tells me that it has made a hit. I was glad to bring home that Broadway idea, which might be copied to advantage in many of the picture houses hereabouts. It might be strengthened to include sundry other nuisances inflicted on us.

Miss Alice H. Grady, private secretary to Louis Brandeis, has written the scenario of a picture play based upon savings bank insurance. In the cast are former Governor Walsh, a friend of the moving pictures, Mr. Brandeis and other prominent men, also well-known women. Miss Grady caught her idea when the popular ex-governor was offered a salary of $15,000 for a short engagement in a feature film, but which he had to decline. He is now en route south and then goes to the Orient for a needed vacation. I understand that the little play has been rehearsed.

Wish I could enthuse over the film version of "The Fourth Estate," but frankness forbids. The speaking version, so well recalled, was well nigh perfect, especially the newspaper office scenes, and the romance of it not too much in evidence. Charles Waldron has done nothing better than in this leading role which he created for the real play now distorted for the Fox producers, who must inject immorality—in this case a big dose of it for the judge; by the way, "Al" Hickman did the part well, and certainly had a "bad eye." Sam Ryan, too, the dapper Hibernian of the films, made a good confederate for Bertlemy. We were taken into the depth of a Chicago newspaper office and shown the modus operandi of the making of the matrix, which was "clear as mud" to most of the auditors and had no bearing on the plot. However, the play is a live one and gave Clifford Bruce a fine opportunity to illustrate the man with a clean mind. This was a redeeming feature. Ruth Blair and Aline Bartlett deserve a line for not overdoing their parts in resisting the amorous Judge, who could never hold down a job in any city with his tendencies so notoriously conspicuous.

The Hub has another theater, Loew's Orpheum, which opened with a flourish of trumpets and many guests. It is a vaudeville house, but a feature on opening night was the four-reel Metro picture, "The House of Tears," featuring Emily Stevens. It is by all odds one of the strongest stories ever filmed and I look to see it billed at leading picture houses everywhere. In the press accounts of that first night scant mention was made of it—more's the pity!

"Madame X" was the pet Gold Rooster offering at the Boston theater recently and drew many admirers of Dorothy Donnelly, a local favorite. I for one enjoyed the presentation quite as well as the spoken play, always excepting William Elliott's great plea at the bar of justice. No one has quite put that over as he did, and my one regret was that he could not have been induced to take the film part. Another thing we liked was the scene leading up to the marriage to Floriet and the wedding. We find ourselves making more excuses for her early indiscretion, in that we see the cold-bloodedness in the man and the craving for affection in the mother of his child. There were some inconsistencies, like doubling up of the antics of the two conspirators. It was no place for cheap comedy work. However, it is a virile play, bound to be a winner everywhere; and Miss Donnelly films well. Another Pathe offering that evening was "The King's Game," capitally done, the atmosphere well preserved, thanks to the artistic taste of Arnold Daly, who staged it. Comedy was skillfully injected by George Probert, and the kiddies were immense. Directors, put children into your reels whenever possible for they are sure to make good and add such a touch of nature.

Talk about atmosphere, "Vanity Fair" is full of it, and we find Mrs. Fiske immortalized on the screen in one of her best characters—Becky Sharp, that remarkable creation of Thackeray. This reminds me to mention the wonderful likeness to the great author as impersonated by Harold Hubert, whose name did not appear on the program. The play was put on for two weeks at Tremont Temple, a place of worship on Sundays by the Baptists. The audience was notable in quality, more of the old conservative set—"the Chippendales"—than seen anywhere for years. Then, too, so many of the scenes were laid in our own Louisburg Square, so like "Ole Lunnon." This is one treasure spot on Beacon Hill not yet invaded by trade or boarding house keepers. Families are there whose forbears first saw the light of day in those surroundings, so the interiors were a delight to the eye and needed no changes to produce the effect suited to the play. Somehow I did not miss the spoken lines, as Mrs. Fiske's by-play and expression conveyed the idea perfectly. "Vanity Fair" as a book lends itself readily to the screen when skillfully staged as in the Edison masterpiece now gone forth to delight millions and to set quite a pace.

"Excuse Me," one of the funniest farces ever, has been successfully filmed by the Pathe people, who were fortunate in securing George F. Marion and so many of the original cast. We had an hour of solid fun at the Boston theater while thousands enjoyed it equally at the new Fenway theater early last week. It is refreshing to have such good, clean comedy without slapstick. Marion is certainly some porter and the types were well drawn. All who have had experiences in Pullman cars find here something more or less reminiscent. On the same program at the Boston we had "The Alster Case," which proved a genuine treat for those who had not read the reviews or knew of the finale. It certainly is one of the very best detective plays seen in a long while, for not a hint is given as to the identity of the real criminal. John Cossar, Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse made a dandy trio and are always so dependable.

This ought to be a great seller for the "Big Four." Pathe gave us some colored fashions, evidently posed by models, so self-conscious are they and mechanical. It was refreshing therefore the other night to see Lillian Walker ("Dimples") posing for the new fashions, for she was dainty and graceful. Never will I forget her extremities in green stockings, as viewed on the opening of the film of that name in New York at the Vitagraph theater. I am telling all my friends (especially male ones) not to miss that unique unnamed title, a clever stroke on the part of someone.

On the Lasky-Paramount program we had a genuine treat in "The Golden Chance" with Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid, most ably supported by such finished artists as Edythe Chapman, Ernest Joy, Horace Carpenter and Raymond Hatton who is ever reliable. A feature was the setting—all indoor—and the gripping situations, never overdone. Hub society folks who saw it sat up for a moment to look again and again at Edythe Chapman who in this play bears so close a resemblance in face, carriage and by-play to our leading society editor, Mrs. C. H. Washburn, known widely in New York and on the other side. Mrs. Washburn, until recently, conducted the ablest society page anywhere and is absolute authority on matters concerning the "400," having been engaged many years in giving the public the cream of real society news. She is also a friend of moving pictures—the best.

We are getting into the heart of the "Strange Case of Mary Page," running in serial form at the Fenway theater and compelling attendance as well as interest. Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo make a good pair and are well supported.

The Hub congratulates Fannie Ward, the Lasky star, on her recent marriage to "Jack" Dean with whom she has played several seasons. When she first appeared here after resuming her stage career, Dean was the only American player in her company. At that time she was the wife of Joe Lewis. She has a lovely young daughter, a perfect replica of herself. Fannie Ward first appeared at the age of sixteen with "Harry" Dixey in "Adonis," then went abroad with the company, met Mr. Lewis and retired temporarily from the stage. In "The Cheat" she has given to the films a performance which elevates that play high up on the ladder of topnotchers.

Hub film fans are glad to note the acquisition of Katherine Grey, erstwhile wife of John (formerly "Jack") Mason. You may be sure she will make good as ever in the spoken drama. I wish they would film her in an early success, Cyrano de Bergerac, for there are plenty of men who can play the title role, men, for instance, like H. Cooper Cliffe who has made a big hit in "The Parisian Romance," seen here last week, produced by Fox. He was most realistic, and the elegant roue to his finger tips. In some ways he was, in my opinion, far ahead of Mansfield whose mannerisms did not appeal to all of us theatergoers. Fox has given us an admirable film version but "rubs it in" a bit on the naughty side. Dorothy Green was excellent as Rosa and the photography was great.

I was privileged to see Constance Collier in "The Tongues of Men" and congratulate the Morosco Company on securing such a capable actress to play Jane Bartlett. This play stands high on the Paramount program. You all know its story, but I wonder if you realize the neat little lesson it unconsciously conveys in its strain of narrowmindedness and petty prejudice, which too often rules the pulpit. Forrest Stanley had a good part, in that it disclosed his slow conversion from priggishness to the tolerant view of life through personal contact with the woman he had condemned publicly. It was good to see him take "back water" and make amends. The photography was especially well done, all through, and isn't Miss Collier fascinating without a particle of self-consciousness which spoils otherwise good work in so many players?

Thanks to Mrs. Marcellus Ayer, of the Exeter, for giving her public that distinct novelty, "Inbad, the Sailor," a delicious little fairytale, done in silhouette and most artistically. I wonder how they managed the trip skyward of the hero and his man on that rug! Some stunt!

On the same program was a neat little Thanhouser comedy. "The Conductors," well done, especially by the "Classy Companion" with Sandow muscles. The operation of the trolley car was natural, and there was no horse-play to mar the feature. Then we had Houdini in one of his thrilling stunts, quite edifying to those who have never seen him in the flesh.

Gustave Frohman, inspired by his ideas, which are bound to be adopted (as they are now respected), is to establish a clearing house for A1 films, chiefly educational, but not necessarily high brow. He has opened headquarters on Winchester street near the home of the World Film and around the corner from the V-L-S-E, Famous Players and other exchanges. The building is new, unique in all its details, and well appointed. Will tell you more of it after the housewarming. Mr. Frohman will be the guest of honor at the Film Club Sunday evening, February 6.

Australian Notes

DURING the past month two Australian pictures have been released. One was a topical drama, produced by Australasian Films, Ltd., and was only of topical interest. The other, produced by J. C. Williamson, was entitled "For Australia," was a three-reel drama written round the Sydney-Emden fight. It was a very good production.

Australasian Films, Ltd., announce that they have secured the Australian rights to all the production of the Equitable Company, and are showing the first one at the Crystal Palace (the biggest show here) next week.

I notice in an American motion picture trade paper an interview with a Mr. Higgins, "who has produced 40 plays in Australia." Mr. Higgins has, to date, produced four pictures, including one topical, two scenics, and one drama. So it will be seen that there is a mistake somewhere. These productions were only good from a photographic point of view.

Film censorship has been established by the government in New Zealand. The government will choose a board of censors, who will see every picture, and it will be a penal offense to exhibit any film that has been banned by the board. A more refined censorship has also been established in Melbourne. The Chief of Police has given instructions that policemen are to visit every show each week and report on the class of films shown.

Several Melbourne picture theater proprietors have been fined for showing pictures on Sunday.

Features shown in Sydney during the past month include "Rags," with Mary Pickford; "The Crucible," "Up from the Depths," a Mutual Masterpicture, and "The Great Ruby," a V-L-S-E production.

EDISON PLAYERS GO TO FLORIDA.

A large Edison Company, under Director Richard Ridgely, left New York Saturday, January the 22nd, for a three months' stay in Cuba where they will make several big five-reel features. The prime reason for the trip is to secure actual locations for the picturization of Elbert Hubbard's most famous story, "The Message to Garcia." That "message" has inspired more people to greater endeavor, and has probably been quoted more than any one article ever written in modern times. It gave the late Fra Elbertus some of his widest popularity. The scenes will be taken in and about Havana, Cuba.

The principals taken include Mabel Trunnelle who will play a role unusual to her—that of a Spanish girl spy. Robert Conness will be the lieutenant who takes the message to Garcia; Bigelow Cooper will play the heavy man; Herbert Prior who appears as a demented Cuban; Edward Earle, who is cast for a straight part, and Helen Strickland. "Garcia" will be played by a Spaniard now associated with Havana's leading theater. Many Cubans and Spaniards will be locally cast.

Director Ridgely will first finish the Kleine-Edison feature, "The Ladder of Ambition," in which Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness are featured. The play ranges from the Adirondack mountains to sunny Cuba. Many scenes will also be taken, for the several features, on the boat on the way down. A Cuban tragedy picture will also be filmed by the director.

"Inbad the Sailor"

First of Bray-Gilbert Silhouette Pictures Is a Pleasing Novelty—To Be Released By Paramount.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

J. R. BRAY and C. Allan Gilbert have brought a new type of picture to the screen, the possibilities of which are large. It is quite likely that these two artists will develop their silhouette fantasies into delightful expressions of delicate fancy and imagination of a type not obtainable through the usual methods of photoplay production. There is a genuine need for intelligent humor and odd conceits, at once artistic and entertaining, such as those embodied in "Inbad the Sailor," the first of the Bray-Gilbert fantasies to be released January 20th, on the Paramount program.

Exhibitors may count upon the novelty of these productions. There has been nothing like them in the past and they will be of particular value to managers aiming to give tone to their programs. As is generally known, Mr. Bray was a pioneer in the development of the comedy cartoon drawing, which is amusing enough, yet still has its limitations. The silhouettes are a distinct advance over the straight cartoon, for they utilize its best features supplemented by pantomimic acting. So carefully has the process of production been perfected that it is difficult to tell where the acting leaves off and the drawing begins.

We see the figures of men and women silhouetted against attractive backgrounds and suddenly they are whisked away on a trip to the moon, or some other equally fantastic adventure, for the drawings of Messrs. Bray and Gilbert make anything possible. Obviously, the imagination may be given free play in the writing of scenarios for these pictures that are just the thing to catch the spirit and atmosphere of tales from "Arabian Nights."

"Inbad the Sailor," in fact, is probably the nearest approach to an "Arabian Nights" story thus far brought to the screen. It is rich in fancy and has moments of charming humor, aided by Oliver Herford's sub-titles written in verse. The artistic quality of the picture cannot be commended too highly and those to follow may be awaited with interest.

Edgar Scott, "Decapitator."

Edgar Scott, who has had charge of the cutting room for the Universal's eastern studios, has been given entire supervision over the cutting of all eastern films, and from now on will be known as the "head cutter."

Paul Gilmore in "Houses of Mystery."

Paul Gilmore is featured in the leading role of the Knickerbocker Star Features, three-reel photo drama, entitled "Houses of Mystery," released on the General Film Program Friday, Jan. 21st, 1916.

"The Debt of Honor"

The Intense Acting of William Nigh Is Best Feature of Melodramatic Metro Picture.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig,

IN AN effort to produce a powerful drama, William Nigh, the director of "The Debt of Honor," likewise the interpreter of the principal role, rather overdid the unpleasantness of an unpleasant story. The final reels become a veritable delirium of depravity and it is doubtful if the shocks they contain are justifiable either on the score of art, or that of entertainment. However, the Columbia Pictures Corporation evidently thought that they were, and the picture will be released by Metro on January 24th.

If it is worth while to portray a degenerate, probably physicians would term him a paranoiac, Mr. Nigh has done a remarkable piece of work. In fact, it is remarkable in any event, but without prudery, there are sound reasons for wishing that he had expended his talent in less morbid activity. Olin Varcoe is not incidental to the story; he is the story, for the entire plot is quite obviously devised as a framework for his unsavory personality. A young woman afflicted with an almost unbelievably sensitive conscience, thinks that the only way to repay a financial obligation thrust upon her by her father, is to nurse the unspeakable Oliver during the last days of a useless life.

There is no need to trace the intricacies of the plot that accounts for the presence of Oliver, his volunteer nurse and a great number of his dissolute friends at an old mansion, presumably on the Canadian border. It is enough to know that they arrive safely and that the stage is set for a Bacchanalian revel planned by Olin as a suitable preliminary to his funeral. For more than a reel the stately halls of a really fine building are given over to festivities too abandoned to be called gay and accompanying them are unbridled passions. Mr. Nigh's performance during these scenes—his love, his jealousy, his anger, all made futile by mental and physical weakness—is frightfully graphic, and through the horror of it all an audience may well be fascinated and at the same time shocked. Valli Valli puts plenty of emotional force and spirit into her playing of the severely tried young woman and the remainder of the company is of fine quality. Settings and photography are excellent.

Director Baggott.

King Baggott is soon to return to directing. He has already accepted three dramas which he will start work upon shortly. Director Harry McRae Webster, who has been directing Mr. Baggott, will direct Violet Mersereau in five-reel Red Feather Features.

"Fruits of Desire"

Robert Warwick Is Starred in William A. Brady Adaptation of Novel—Released by World Film.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE success of this five-part adaptation of Henry Russell Miller's novel, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt," depends largely upon the popularity of Robert Warwick. He has a congenial role as Mark Truitt, a character presented by him in convincing fashion, and it is quite possible that the performance of the star, combined with the acting of a reasonably well-balanced supporting company, will more than offset the short-comings of the picture.

Scene from "Fruits of Desire" (World Film).

"Fruits of Desire" lacks dramatic strength. Perhaps the scenario writer, in adapting the novel, followed the text too faithfully and evolved a narrative rather than a drama, save in occasional passages. The story of the rise, disillusionment and ultimate salvation of a man, is told from beginning to end, but the method is that of a story-teller instead of a playwright and the scenes tend to become episodic.

Barring this defect, by no means an uncommon one in photoplays, the production is of average merit and gives evidence of a praiseworthy effort to present things as they are, at least in their external aspects. Mark Truitt, one learns at the outset, is determined to become a great man. He dreams of the steel works that some day he will build on a site not far from his home in a village, and the more important steps in the realization of his ambition are pictured. We see how he starts as a laborer, becomes foreman by reason of his forceful personality and advances step by step, winning the love of a mill worker's daughter the while.

The love interest centers in the devotion of this strongly emotional young woman, who, when success is attained, is cast aside by Truitt in favor of an earlier sweetheart offering better social possibilities. But the steel magnate, for Truitt becomes no less, is made to repent his mistake and in time is allowed to enjoy the companionship of the woman more necessary to his happiness than unlimited wealth.

There are many unquestionably authentic scenes depiciting the activities in a steel mill and there are incidents of sympathetic appeal, always well handled by Mr. Warwick, Madeline Traverse and others in a numerous cast. James Mack, as the son of the mill foreman, is of particular value to the story.

Closing Episodes of Kalem "Stingaree" Series

"The Moth and the Star" and "The Darkest Hour," the Last Two Installments of the Australian Highwayman Stories.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Moth and the Star."

THE closing episodes of the E. W. Hornung series of photoplays built upon the picturesque career of "Stingaree," are full of excitement. The handsome and debonair young highwayman, whose method of relieving his victims of their valuables is so well bred as to make the operation almost painless, is enjoying the doubtful comforts of a prison cell at the opening of the eleventh installment of his adventures. Visited by an eccentric prison reformer, "Stingaree" fails to appreciate Mr. Lucius Brady's efforts in his behalf. With marked ingratitude and in a manner somewhat rough, he forces the reformer to change clothes with him and leaves the good man securely trussed up in the prison bunk. The bandit's escape is then an easy matter and, after helping himself to another gentleman's evening clothes he blithefully attends a concert and leads the applause when Miss Ethel, his former sweetheart, finishes her vocal numbers. His liberty is of short duration, however, and that night he is retaken and relodged in his old cell.

Such a string of startling events would make a fairly exciting day for the most venturesome of bandits, and the relish with which True Boardman carries off these episodes in the life of the Hornung hero, is good to behold. Mr. Boardman is the right man in the right place. The supporting cast is as reliable as ever, especially Paul C. Hurst as that engaging rascal Howie, he of the warlike whiskers and the childlike smile.

"The Darkest Hour."

In this number, the clock strikes twelve for "Stingaree" and the other characters by whom he is surrounded, and the highwayman leaves the shores of Australia and his hazardous profession behind him forever. The faithful Howie is the means of his making his last escape from prison. As a proof of his devotion to his honored chief, the bushwacker shaves off his beloved whiskers, and gets a position as keeper at the jail. "Stingaree" is quickly freed, and the generous conduct of his rival, John Kent, restores his sweetheart to him and clears the way for his return to England and to his old place in society. The final installment is full of interesting incidents, and forms a satisfactory conclusion to the series of two-reel photoplays founded upon the well-known stories of the writer who also gave "Raffles" to the public. The plea by which Mr. Hornung attempts to justify the criminal career of his hero will, naturally, not stand anything like an acid test, but the sophistry may be excused for the sake of the entertaining qualities of the yarns especially, as we are not expected to take them with any degree of seriousness.

The series is a creditable achievement for all concerned. True Boardman, Paul C. Hurst, Thomas Lingham, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, Marin Sais, Ollie Kirkby and producer James W. Horne have accomplished their several tasks with untiring spirit, and with excellent results. A special word of praise should be written for the carefully and correctly preserved Australian atmosphere, for the true to type impersonation of Paul C. Hurst of the unctuous "badman" Howie, and for the intelligence and grace of "Stingaree's" white horse.

"The Horrors of War"

Presenting in Three Reels, Horrors, Too Awful to Contemplate, That Follow in the Wake of the Great European War.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE most praiseworthy point about the Pathe series of war pictures is that it proves true to the title given it. There is every evidence that the pictures are authentic, and there is no padding such as we have seen in some of those that have been given to the public. The most repulsive scenes exhibited in this collection have been culled from among others obtained by the Pathe correspondent, too horrible for exhibition.

The opening scenes were photographed from the deck of a Russian battleship, and show the actual bombardment of a Turkish town on the coast of the Black Sea. There is also shown at the same place the sinking of a steamer that has tried vainly to escape. Then we are taken through scenes of desolation, and roads strewn with the bodies of corpses partially covered by a winding sheet of snow.

And again we see a trench being dug in the mountain side, and the dead being brought in wagon loads and roughly flung in heaps by their hardened pall bearers, later to be consigned to a common grave. Perhaps the most repulsive sight of all is a quick flash of a hungry dog feeding from a pile of frozen dead. At another place we see the body of a horse perched in a tree, its limbs partially shot away.

Scene from "The Horrors of War" (Pathe).

There appear also many other scenes of an equally depressing nature; and we venture to say that no stronger plea in favor of preparedness could be presented.

Marshall Neilan, the Selig director, has started a new three-reel feature entitled "The Cycle of Fate," with Edith Johnson, Bessie Eyton, Wheeler Oakman and Frank Clark as principals.

"The Wonderful Wager"

Raymond Hitchcock Has Ample Opportunity for Funmaking in Clever Two-Part Lubin Comedy.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

NO DOUBT George V. Hobart's comedy, written for Raymond Hitchcock and produced by the Lubin Company, might have been extended to five reels, but the strain on the resourcefulness of a capable comedian would have been severe.

Scene from "The Wonderful Wager" (Lubin).

As it stands in two reels, "The Wonderful Adventure" is an offering of the best caliber. There is enough action and it is never allowed to drag; moreover, Mr. Hitchcock manages to be funny just about all the time that he is on the screen. If audiences enjoyed his work in "The Ringtailed Rhinoceros" they will be doubly pleased with the picture in question, for it is the stronger of the two.

The story is next to nothing; the humorous situations developed from the slight plot and the playing of Mr. Hitchcock are everything. Under odd conditions, two sportsmen arrange an automobile race to Florida, the loser to pay the winner $10,000. Placing his fortune at the mercy of a Ford car, Mr. Hitchcock experiences every difficulty known to the driver of a machine, and he is many miles from Florida when the car runs off the roadway and settles in the bed of a river.

The driver, minus an automobile to drive, seeks shelter with a circus company and it is here that we find the most effective comedy in the picture. Mr. Hitchcock becomes a clown, he tries his hand at taming lions, he sleeps on the straw in a tent where his companions are a select assortment of animals from the Lubin menagerie, and he plays valet to an elephant. There is no resisting the humor of the actor's annoyance when the elephant inconsiderately steps on his foot and refuses to move. It is out of incidents such as this, cleverly handled by Mr. Hitchcock, that the picture is made.

"The Wonderful Wager" is a step above slapstick. Audiences will laugh heartily at a clean, entertaining comedy.

Difficult Theme Is Made the Basis of Six-Reel Picture Distributed by Joseph W. Farnham.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IT IS JUST conceivable that this production may impress a few easily influenced people with the value of leading normal lives and of giving due consideration to the perpetuation of the race. Such, apparently, was the laudable aim of the producer and if the picture falls short of the mark, why at all events it will do no harm. The most conspicuous shortcoming of the offering is a lack of conclusiveness, a failure to arrive at any definite point, unless the contention that a young married couple should have children as soon as possible, irrespective of their ability to support them, be taken as conclusive. The problems of propagation, mixed as they are with social and financial problems, are altogether too complex to be settled in an off-hand manner.

The first reel, giving a close study of the lower forms of animal life, is decidedly interesting in itself, though its pertinence to a study of race suicide is not easily discernible. The sub-titles, accompanying the pictures of various insects, seem to urge that the young of the species are not properly guarded, yet if this is true, certainly it is entirely in accordance with the laws of nature and not something to be frowned upon. Race suicide, if such a thing exists, presupposes a violation of natural laws.

Next comes the cave man and his violent wooing. This episode is an illustration of strong passions unchecked by kindly consideration of the rights of others. The mating instinct surely was powerful enough and occasional murders, as a direct result of its violence, did not seriously impede the growth of the human race.

In the episodes laid in decadent Rome and the dissolute courts of Europe, the emphasis is placed on misdirected sex energy and does little more than show the habits of philandering men in previous generations. Fortunately the spread of the human race never has been menaced by the selfishness of the few, who prefer to dodge the responsibilities of rearing children. And coming to the episode supposed to be typical of modern times, we meet a happily married couple who remain childless because the husband thinks it best not to increase their living expenses until his income is larger. When the time comes, when, as a sub-title puts it, they are in a position to realize their fondest dreams, an accident robs the wife of the ability to bear children. This tragedy is too personal to enforce a general argument.

Each episode in "Race Suicide" is complete in itself and there is no attempt at a connected photoplay story. Many of the settings are attractive and the chief characters are intelligently played by Ormi Hawley, Earl Metcalfe and Kempton Greene.

"Ham" Comedies Ready

Comedian Long Absent From Screen Makes Return Bow In February.

PHOTOPLAY fans will not have to wait much longer for a glimpse of Lloyd V. Hamilton on the screen once more. Two "Ham" comedies have been completed since the return of the popular Kalem comedian to active screen work and are announced for release in February. They are "Ham Takes a Chance," and "Ham, the Diver," both single reel subjects. Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare are once more the players featured with "Ham." Gus Leonard, the former Orpheum circuit star, is an addition to the company who has gained considerable popularity since "Ham's" lay-off because of injury. With Jack MacDermott, the juvenile, he will continue to appear in the "Ham" comedies, making the organization one deserving of "all star" claims.

"Ham takes a Chance," the one reel subject which will mark the comedian's return to the screen is scheduled for release on February 15. It takes "Ham" back to the atmosphere in which he was so favorably known to his followers in the past, that of a broken-down theatrical troupe. The theatrical organization numbers in its ranks Ethel, a dancer, Gus, a knife thrower, and Jack, the darkey man-of-all-work. One glance from Ethel's eyes and Ham and Bud decide to become members of the troupe. Bud's job is to exercise Fritz and Bertha, Ethel's pet snakes, while Ham is the target for the knife thrower. When Gus is suddenly taken ill Ham induces Bud to become the target while he throws the knives. With this basis the fun that follows may be imagined.

This single reel subject is followed on February 22 by a novelty in the way of screen comedy, "Ham the Diver." As may be guessed from the title, Ham, in this release, succeeds in getting a job as a diver. Bud is his assistant. But once

Ham gets beneath the water the diminutive comedian finds the work of pumping air an irksome task and he scarce needs the urging of Ethel's dancing eyes to abandon the pump for a dip in the surf. It will be seen from these brief descriptions of the stories of the new "Ham" comedies that the Kalem subjects will continue to strive to live up to their claim of being" somedies with real plots."

TO THOSE who have read Richard Dehan's gripping story of the days of the Boer war, it will not be surprising that it should have been chosen as a fitting subject for a five-reel photoplay. The story is a many sided one, but deals primarily with the regeneration of a South African physician, who, having become addicted to "dop," a miserable brown whiskey, has sunk to the very depths of degradation. In the treatment given the theme in the Pathe production the life history of the heroine, Lynette Mildare, is given a little more than an equal share of attention, and the past of the "Dop Doctor" is left unrevealed. The angle of the story chosen must be admitted to be very interesting. The picture has been well produced, and the principal players, namely Fred Paul, Agnes Glynne and Booth Conway, have done commendable work.

The production has an historical value, and recalls conditions which prevailed in the Transvaal during the period in which the story is laid.

appear Pearl White, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis.

This opening episode tells the story of the origin of the young woman whose fortune it is evident we are to follow. It shows how the villian enters the domestic peace of a certain household, threatens the wife of his host with a blackened reputation on her refusal to hand over the family jewels, and through his questionable actions, arouses the suspicions of the husband to the point of belief in his wife's falsity. The woman is thrust from the home, and the villian is cruelly punished, whereupon, on his release from his punishment he opens the gates of a waterway and floods the estate of the man he has wronged. During the panic caused by the filling of the houses with water the child of the separated couple is rescued by the perpetrator of the crime. In the second reel we come in contact with the child grown to womanhood, and escaping through the agency of a masked man from an unpleasant situation into which she has been thrown by her foster father. The flood scenes are tremendously realistic, and the entire episode is full of stirring action, giving promise of interesting developments to follow. Edward Jose is directing the serial from the scenario of George Brackett Seitz.

"The Island of Surprise"

A Vitagraph Drama Which Profits by a Fine Production and Forceful Acting.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IT MAY be said at the outset that this is a first rate picture, presenting a pleasingly romantic story in an entertaining manner. The arrangement of the scenes, the acting, the settings and more especially the locations on what passes for a desert island, are of the best, and even if an audience does not take all of the happenings seriously, there can be no doubt about the genuineness of its enjoyment. "The Island of Surprise" apparently was written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and directed by Paul Scardon as straight drama, nonetheless it possesses moments of unexpected comedy at the most critical points of the story.

Just why there should be cause for laughter in the predicament of the man and the two women stranded on an island might be difficult to explain, but the fact remains that an audience finds humor rather than tragedy in the plight of the man embarrassed by the devotion of his companions—one his unacknowledged wife, the other the girl to whom he is supposed to be engaged. Also in the attack of the savages there seems to be a comedy element, and again it would be difficult to explain why.

But, however these passages of the picture are received, there is no break in the interest aroused in the first reel with Robert Lovell's impetuous wooing of his father's secretary, despite his parent's plan to have him wed the daughter of his business partner. Robert keeps his marriage a secret and is inclined to regret it after meeting the girl he hesitated to accept on his father's recommendation. All the people involved in the vexed romance meet aboard a yacht for an extended cruise, and the three most concerned are left on the Island of Surprise, while the yacht is driven out to sea by a storm.

Mr. Brady resorted to an old expedient in causing a blow to rob the hero of memory, which is restored by another blow when it is time for him to recognize his wife; but the convenient accident may be pardoned in view of the many interesting situations it makes possible. William Courtenay, Eleanor Woodruff and Zena Keefe carry the leading roles with spirit, and assisting them are such able actors as Charles Kent, Anders Randolf and Charles Wellesley. Mr. Scardon's production is picturesque and always in good taste.

"The Gods of Fate"

Lubin Drama Presents Strong Story and Offers Unusual Scenes in Spectacular Fire and Train Wreck.

THE Lubin Company, Daniel Carson Goodman, the author of "The Gods of Fate," and Jack Pratt, the director, are to be thanked for a thoroughly good drama, in which the story rings true and natural acting brings out the human qualities of the characters. Seemingly, the producer determined to make this a strong five-part picture at any cost, for not content with the appeal of logically presented situations, he introduced two spectacular catastrophes that must have been a bit expensive.

Lubin has always been rather partial to fire scenes, but previous releases have brought nothing in the way of a factory fire quite so impressively vivid as the one shown here. The photography is surprisingly clear and the cameras were placed in a position to give a full view of the burning building with the flames shooting out of the rows of windows. These scenes are made to serve a legitimate place in the progress of the story, and the same holds true of the second spectacle reserved for the concluding reel of the picture. Here we have a head-on collision of two trains, followed by the rescue of the hero and heroine from the mass of wreckage. The collision is plainly pictured after a reasonable preparation to work up interest and excitement.

But after all it is the story that counts and on this score, especially in the opening reels, the picture merits favorable notice. Estey and Miller, men in a locomotive works, played by Francis Joyner and William H. Turner, respectively, appear true to type and the children of these factory employes are such as one might meet in the modest homes depicted. In the prologue, pains were taken to reveal the contrasting natures of the youngsters, who in later years develop according to the promise of their childhood.

The plot hinges on the theft of plans for a valuable invention, stolen by Miller when Estey dies, leaving a little daughter. Miller adopts the girl, but hides the fact that the money he received for the invention rightfully belongs to her. After the death of Miller in the factory fire, the conflict centers between the two sons, one determined that justice shall be done the girl whom he loves, the other equally set upon his own prosperity at the expense of others. The roles of the girl and her lover are convincingly acted by Rosetta Brice and Richard Buhler, whereas the trouble-maker is adequately presented by Arthur Housman.

"The Fourth Estate"

The Fox Adaptation of the Patterson Newspaper Story Contains Some Stirring Situations.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Fox company released on January 17 "The Fourth Estate," an adaptation of the newspaper story by Joseph Medill Patterson. The picture will have much interest to the layman, to those who view it strictly on the dramatic side. It will have in that portion of it devoted to the technical side less interest for those who have participated in or are acquainted with the whirl and suspense that accompany big doings in a newspaper office. Many of the interiors are staged in the plant of one of the Chicago dailies. The scenes in the mechanical department are good. The workmen attend strictly to business and see not the camera. The atmosphere in the news room is far from convincing. We are given to understand that a big story is being prepared, but we see nothing of the lively routine that enters into the making.

The story is of the misdoings of a political boss and a judge, who in a prologue are seen committing a murder. That makes their interests one. There is a strike, and the boss calls on the judge to railroad Noland, the leader of it, to jail when the labor chief declines to take money and call it off. The leader, tipped off a warrant is out for his arrest, escapes to Canada, where in the course of a couple of years he strikes it rich and sells out his interest for $18,000,000. He returns, to search for his wife and to buy a newspaper, that he may the better punish those responsible for his hasty departure.

In the meantime the judge has attempted the seduction of the wife of the leader and has failed. The judge, by the way, is about the worst type of unspeakable villain to be conceived; the sort that gives rise to a consuming desire to kick him. The action of the boss, who seems to be the official procurer for the judge, in trying to throw into the power of the judge a girl he has under false pretenses lured from an employment agency furnishes the returned leader with a club that accomplishes the destruction of the two men. Through a convenient coincidence Noland finds his wife; while he is consummating the purchase of a newspaper the wife, waiting in a machine, extends sympathy to the girl who has just escaped from the judge. To Noland she tells the story that provides Noland with the evidence he is seeking—another rather singular coincidence.

From this point the action is swift and the suspense is marked. The trapping of the two criminals is attended by exciting incidents, including an attempt to murder the new proprietor and the death of the slayer. It is assumed the two are arrested for attempted abduction, but when the paper appears in the morning great headlines set forth they are guilty of the murder shown in the beginning, although nothing has been revealed to indicate how the knowledge of it was discovered.

"The Call of the Cumberlands"

Dustin Farnum Gives a Thrilling Portrayal of the Character of Samson South in Five-Part Pallas Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE literary work of Charles Neville Buck needs no introduction. "The Call of the Cumberlands" is the second of his books to be picturized, and with success. Its types, not all of them virile, but well contrasted, present a characterization of strength. You can't fail to be pleased with the Samson South of Dustin Farnum, or the Spicer South of Herbert Standing, while the Tamarack Spicer of Dick Le Strange is as despicable a character as we could wish to see. Winnifred Kingston as Sally Spicer and Myrtle Stedman as Adrienne Lescott give pleasant portrayals of their respective roles.

And yet the production is not an altogether perfect one, in spite of the fact that there are in it scenes that could scarcely be excelled, of their kind. For instance, the night when with broiling blood the Hollmans trail the slayer of their kinsman with bloodhounds. Or the scene at the country club near New York where Samson, now a full fledged artist, passes a blow for the first time, and with blood streaming from a wounded lip pulls his gun on the men whom his keen perception singles out as the chief movers in a plot to bring about the murder of a political adversary with him as the murderer.

South and Sally Spicer has not been brought out quite clearly, and more than once there is a feeling that the action is dragging somewhat. At the same time the production is one that will be thoroughly enjoyed as a truthful portrayal of a family feud in the Kentucky mountains.

THE CAST.

Philip Langdon, attorney-at-law....Henry B. Walthall
Mary Page, as Nora.....Edna Mayo
David Pollock, who backs the show..Sydney Ainsworth
E. H. Daniels, the manager.....Harry Dunkinson

AFTER viewing the first Episode of Essanay's serial, "The Strange Case of Mary Page," I was impressed that it was one of the most compelling two-reel photoplays I had ever seen. This opinion was uppermost in my mind at the time, notwithstanding the fact that I was clearly aware the two reels were but the first installment of a film story that would require 28 more reels to complete it.

Naturally I felt, after witnessing on the screen the mysterious tragedy in which David Pollock lay dead in a room in the Republic Hotel, beside the unconscious form of Mary Page, and the equally strange disappearance of her body in the twinkling of an eye, I felt, I repeat, an overweening desire (which every other spectator of the opening films will experience) to see the sequel. And this sequel, no doubt, will also have its concluding thrill that, in turn, will create a further desire to peer into the great mystery, and so on until the latter is laid bare.

But, apart from the desire referred to, there was a well-defined satisfaction in my mind that I had seen a photoplay that had held me with overmastering grip—a live, red-blooded photoplay in which men and women loved, lived and fought as real entities, and not the first installment of a mere serial film story.

The characters mentioned in the cast given above are powerfully drawn. Mr. Walthall radiates artistic strength in the part of Philip Langdon, the accepted suitor of Mary Page, the rising star in histrionism at the Covington theater. And Edna Mayo as Mary in these opening reels of the serial mystery does some of the best work I have ever seen her do before the camera.

The scene in Mary's dressing room at the Covington, when Pollock enters and attempts to force his attentions on her, is thrilling; and it becomes a whirlwind when her lover Philip Langdon rushes in to her defense. The David Pollock of Sydney Ainsworth in this and other scenes becomes so fervidly real that one is seized with a positive aversion for the man. The plaything of his passions, Pollock is on a level with the brute, and Mr. Ainsworth by means of highly sensitive and expressive facial changes shows transparently the evil workings of the man's heart and mind until our aversion is turned into horror and hatred. This is especially so in the scene in a room of the Republic Hotel, when Pollock succeeds in luring Mary there by using the name of her fiance, Langdon. And in this room he is found dead—murdered. By whom? is the question that the remaining episodes will answer.

Harry Dunkinson makes a capital manager of a theatrical company in the role of E. H. Daniels. He is "on" to all the artifices that are wont to mollify the real or imagined ills of the star of the company, or to touch the tender spots of her heart by an appeal to her vanity. Note that scene in Mary's dressing room when Daniels orders the maid to throw out the roses and buy orchids to fill the vase. What a seemingly lavish display of expenditure have we here, as Mr. Dunkinson carries it off! One has to smile at Mary's opinion of it all, as expressed by Miss Mayo, who gives Mary an attitude of amusement at the contemplation of the manager's extravagance.

The stage and the orchestra seats of the Covington theater are seen in full realism, on the opening night of Mary Page in her new play. The Bush Temple theater, on Chicago avenue, was used for the scenes, and the theater was packed by a real audience that attended to see the film in the making. All the other settings are worthy of praise, the banquet in the Republic Hotel among them.

The release of the first episode is Jan. 24 through the General Film Co., and the others, in succession, on the Monday of every week thereafter until the end of the serial.

"A Fool's Paradise"

A Six-Reel Melodrama, Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson, and Produced by the Ivan Picture Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE opening episode of this six-reel photoplay is a stroke of genius. As an aged woman is on her deathbed her newly-born granddaughter is brought to her and the woman's last earthly action becomes one of the leading motives of the picture and is closely linked with the life of the child. The baby's grandfather does not possess anything like his wife's amount of virtue, and is the dweller in the abode indicated by the title. The gentleman, who is old enough to know better several times over, behaves himself for five years after his wife's death; then marries a fine figure of a woman, who, to quote her own words, will "make his life an earthly paradise." The lady is a clairvoyant, but the completeness with which her prediction is reversed should go far toward shaking her husband's faith in fortune-tellers. There may be a grain of truth, after all, in "Old Hoss" Hoey's remark anent ladies of her profession: "They'll see anything—for two dollars!" At all events, the marriage is not a happy one. It causes the infatuated old gentleman to turn his daughter, son-in-law and grandchild out of doors, and lavish his wealth upon a woman who carries on an intrigue with a younger and handsomer man. The son-in-law is a dreamer and, without assistance, can not provide for his family. His wife, dreading poverty, is about to take determined means of preventing an increase in her household, but her husband arrives home in time and throws the rascally doctor through the door. The old gentleman soon has his eyes opened to his new wife's true character, and, with a firmness of decision that sends him up several degrees in the respect of all beholders, he bundles her out pronto, and wisely concludes to spend the rest of his days making his grandchild and her parents happy.

The moral of Mr. Abramson's play is above reproach, and, aside from overemphasizing some of the scenes, he has constructed his material into an effective screendrama. The motives that actuate his characters never rise above the obvious and never depart from the bounds of probability. The picture will appeal strongly to a large and thoroughly respectable section of followers of the silent drama.

Scene from "A Fool's Paradise" (Ivan).

The cast, save in one particular, has been well chosen. Joseph Burke is competent as the foolish gentleman and does not make his weaknesses unnecessarily offensive. Chrystine Mayo as the fortune teller gives the character the right amount of physical charm, and indicated her pseudo refinement without becoming coarse. Paula Shay doubles the wife and daughter of Wilfred Morgan, with excellent results. Jack J. Clarke is miscast as Morgan's son-in-law. Mr. Clarke is a capable actor but too energetic of build and method to fit the part of the dreamer John Lansing. He proves this emphatically when he throws the abortionist through the door.

"A Circus Romance"

Story of Circus Life Is Produced by Charles M. Seay for Equitable—Muriel Ostriche Starred.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

DIRECTOR Charles M. Seay went to no end of trouble in securing proper people and surroundings for this story of circus performers. For five weeks the director and his players travelled with a carnival company touring the small towns of Georgia and it is only natural that the results, in so far as they pertain to the experiences of a circus troupe, are realistic. We meet many oddly interesting types among these wanderers and catch something of the spirit of their restless existence—here one day, there to-morrow, facing the joys and the sorrows born of their unstable life.

Scene from "A Circus Romance" (Equitable).

There is a distinct romantic appeal in the picturing of these modern gypsies and it is made stronger and more personal by focusing the attention on two youthful members of the company, Babette, a dancer and Petey, the dare-devil performer of the show. Early in the production we learn something of the antecedents of Babette, how her mother, deserted and penniless, became a fortune-teller with the troupe, and how Babette became a typical product of the nomad existence, without, however, losing her girlish gaiety of spirit.

In developing the story, the author causes the death of the fortune-teller and permits the daughter to discover the whereabouts of her father, who has married again and is an influential citizen in a small town, one of the towns visited by the company. The sympathy, of course, is all with the girl, and her case is strengthened by the emphasis placed on the hypocritical natures of the gossipy townsfolk. Butterworth does not acknowledge his daughter openly, but he makes a place for her in his home and immediately the deacons of the church and the deacons' wives are scandalized. The girl's one true friend is the young minister, who wants to marry her, but the hypocrisy of a village does not appeal to Babette. She breathes more freely among her easy-going companions of the circus and is relieved on returning to them and her dare-devil lover, Petey.

Muriel Ostriche, small, vivacious and pretty, is precisely the type for the role of the dancer. In recent months she has had no part that suited her so well. George Larkin is appropriately cast as Petey, and Edward Davis is sufficiently dignified as the father.

"A Knight of the Range"

Universal's Red Feather Feature a Wholesome Five-Reel Melodrama—Break-neck Riding One of Its Big Points.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

ESPECIAL sensational riding marks the newest Red Feature picture, "A Knight of the Range." It is five reels long and except in one or two short spaces, it carries the spectator along with a decided sweep and with many an uncontrollable gasp as he sees horse and rider escape death, so it seems, only by the grace of Providence. The picture is also marked by the amply vigorous way it registers its unexpected climaxes, holding them for just the time that is needed and passing on. The love story is the kind the average wholesome person wants. It has a good old plot full of unexpected turns and the whole stands out clear and effective. I feel absolutely sure that it will make an acceptable offering.

Harry D. Carey has the titular role and does that good old, but delightful stunt, plays big brother to the weakling, just because he is preferred by the girl, played by Olive Golden. The heavy villain (William Canfield) is the gambler of the cowboy village saloon. He, too, wants the girl and is the means of working out the destruction of the weakling (Hoot Gibson) whom first he fools with a stolen ring, then gets him drunk and finally persuades him to help raid the coach, setting a trap so that he will be caught. "The knight" sees through the scheme with the help of a senorita (Peggy Coudray), who loves the gambler and doesn't want him to get the heroine. The cowboy hero has trouble in misleading the posse, for the sheriff has an interesting Indian trailer and the chase is a hard one. Some of the scenes in the girl's home when the badly wounded "knight" has taken refuge there and the weakling also comes to prove finally to her how much of a yellow dog he is, are particularly good. And the way the girl turns to the "knight" will certainly please the romantically inclined—the big majority. The death of the weakling during a fight among the rocks, and helped by a rattle snake is sufficiently astonishing. The gambler's end, too, comes with a sensational punch. A big bunch of star rough riders who never give a thought to broken bones, gives verve to many a scene.

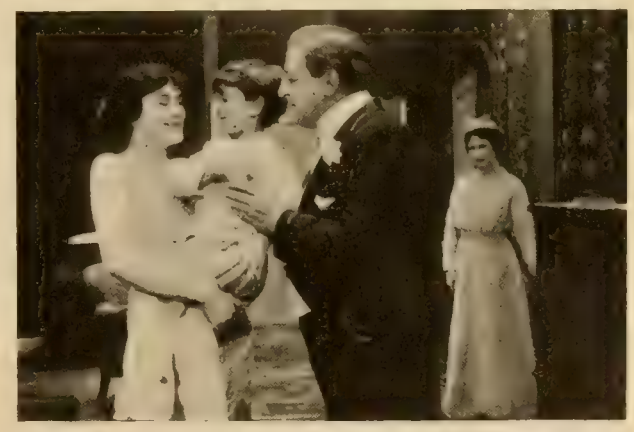
"THE Writing on the Wall" is an adaptation of a novel of the same name by William J. Hurlburt. The picturization by Marguerite Bertsch has been handled with skill by Tefft Johnson, with a cast consisting of Joseph Kilgour, Robert Gailord, Virginia Pearson, Naomi Childers, Bobby Connelly and other prominent Vitagraph players.

The story presents a peculiar mixture of human destinies, is broad in its scope, encompassing glimpses of several worlds within a world, in which appear of necesity a variety of types, similar and unsimilar, as they are affected by differences of environment or natural instincts.



Scene from "The Writing on the Wall" (Vitagraph).

The majority of the scenes of the picture take place in the luxurious home of Irving Lawrence, a prominent and wealthy man who owns considerable property in the tenement section of the city. At the request of his wife who is a tireless worker among the poor, he gives his private secretary orders to attend to the erection of new fire escapes in place of the rickety ones at present on his tenement houses; an order which he withdraws as soon as his wife's back is turned.

The old fire escapes repainted work a deception that proves fatal, not alone to a score of poor children and their parents, but to the social criminal himself when he dies with his victims in a horrible tenement fire.

The picture is a splendidly produced one, and the names of the players are sufficient to assure the best in the way of dramatic action. Sometimes we were conscious of either a badly focused camera or a discrepancy in projection; but apart from this no fault could be found. The production presents a splendid characterization.

fronting them, rather a simple appeal to the liking for a tale of love and adventure in which the author is not greatly concerned about probabilities. For a picture of its type, "The Iron Will" does very well, largely because of the artistic taste displayed by the director in his choice of settings, and partly because of performances given by a nicely balanced Biograph cast.

Vera Sisson makes an attractive heroine in distress. She is Henrietta, the daughter of a stern father who has no consideration for her love affair with a young army lieutenant when a baron, imposing in appearance and manner, asks for her hand. True to the practice of stern parents since time immemorial, the father locks Henrietta in her room promising to keep her there until she consents to the marriage. He carries his point, never guessing that the pseudo baron is in fact a notorious bandit.

As a husband, the bandit-baron has few redeeming features. Not content with abusing his wife, he continues his unwelcome attentions to an earlier love, and remains a persistent trouble-maker until death removes him and there is nothing to prevent the union of Henrietta and the faithful lieutenant.

Raymond Nye has the commanding presence needed for a convincing interpretation of the outlaw, Jose Ruben makes a quite dashing lieutenant in the glittering uniform of a Hungarian officer and in lesser roles no fault need be found with Ivan Chrystie, Charles Mailes, Gretchen Hartmann and Jack Mulhall.

A Couple of "Bray" Cartoons

Paramount Gives Special Showing of Remarkable Offerings from the Bray Studios.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

DURING the past week press representatives were called by the Paramount Pictures Corporation to have a look at two particularly amusing contributions from the Bray studios. "Haddem Baad's Elopement," by L. M. Glackens, a well-known cartoonist, and "The Police Dog on the Wire," from the cartoon pen of C. T. Anderson.

The former shows in the most amusing fashion how Haddem Baad wooed and won the pretty daughter of Keepa Grouch, of his meeting with Gloom, under whose influence he labored until by sheer force of an indomitable will be shakes himself free from all abstract influences, and, taking advantage of a meiocene mail chute writes a love message to the maiden. The weight and numbers of the huge missives each bearing one letter in partial declaration of Haddem's love, falls with such force into Keepa Grouch's house that the occupants are lost to view. Following this comes the elopement, and the chase by the angry father, in a carriage drawn by an animal of the meiocene age.

"The Police Dog on the Wire" is also an interesting number. This remarkable dog has been promoted to share the police officer's desk and chair, and is kept appraised of what is going on by his lady love who takes her stand at the door of the corner saloon where the flighty police officer hangs out.

On the same reel with each of these is an interesting zoological subject of the Ditmars series. With the first number appears a life study of an anthropoid ape of the Bronx Zoo collection, and with the second an interesting and unusual treatise on the extraction of poison from the fangs of the snake.

Triangle Program

Five-Reel Fine Arts Film, "Acquitted," and Four-Reel Keystone, "A Modern Enoch Arden."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"ACQUITTED," admirable adaptation of a short story by Mary Roberts Rinehart, presents Wilfred Lucas in a role seldom portrayed on the screen, yet one bound to enlist sympathetic interest if adequately interpreted, that of a kind-hearted everyday man of family, whose whole life has been one of unselfish devotion, who finds himself at the breaking point of human endurance through no fault of his own and attempts a last supreme effort for those he loves. Not a heroic career in a theatrical sense, it is the more effective because readily recognized by those who know anything about our common struggle for existence. It is truly of the life we are living.

Apparently a simple impersonation, it is really one of subtle characterization, requiring a nice attention to small detail that the illusion may be preserved. Wilfred Lucas responds so fully to the requirements of his role that one forgets the beauty of his performance in the interest he arouses, the interpretation of an artist rather than that of an actor. The story is unfortunately titled with one of those suspense-destroying forecasts which placard the plot, but it is otherwise well handled and attains moments of affecting pathos. It is clean, forceful and well worth while.

to where the audience begins to take an interest in the leading characters and hope for compensating justice at the end. It is so crowded with sensational incidents that it makes lurid melodrama pale at times, there is even a little bit too much of this towards the end, as if the producers had worn themselves out in the effort to extend a three-reel story to larger dimensions, but it is too generally amusing and thrilling to be disparaged on that account. It keeps the audience on edge most of the time and it provides plenty of amusing material. One incident convulsed the entire audience at its first showing, that of Joe Jackson as the returned Enoch Arden and the child, a little girl, at the edge of a brook. While he is leaning over the water she extracts a full whiskey flask from his hip pocket, tastes it, makes a grimace as she goes a few feet up stream and then pours it into the water just as he is scooping it up to drink. He tastes the liquor in the stream and imagines that he has discovered a river of it with consequences to be imagined. The work of the entire cast is good, that of Jackson predominating, especially in his athletic feats. A success.

Three Mutual Masterpictures

"Lord Loveland Discovers America" (American), "Vengeance Is Mine" (Horsley) and "The Idol of the Stage" (Gaumont).

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is challenge in the word "Masterpicture," a challenge of comparison with other five-reel products, whether by the same producer or by others, a claim of chief excellence which compels critical investigation, not only on account of the exhibitor, but on account of those who have set up a high ideal for themselves. In this day of good scientific work the reviewer gives attention to the quality of story portrayed, to the capacity of its interpreters and to the director's skill. Has the author provided a soul and structure; has the actor responded to his opportunities, and has the director treated the subject in accord with its requirements? Is the composite result such as will command the attention of a mixed audience, one composed of refined and intelligent people as well as those of immature minds and unformed tastes? To people of deformed minds and tastes no tolerated art of expression is addressed.

"Lord Loveland Discovers America" depicts the amusing adventures of an English lord so besieged by creditors at home that he visits America with the avowed purpose of marrying an heiress. An unpleasant complication ensues. His valet, impersonating Lord Loveland, brings about a widespread distrust of the real nobleman, rendering it impossible for him to obtain money from his letter of credit. The genuine Lord Loveland is thrown on his own resources and proves that there is a real man beneath the artificial creature he has hitherto been, and the character is admirably impersonated by Arthur Maude.

The play gives Arthur Maude a role which suits him in every respect, in fact, the opportunity is so overwhelmingly his that there is almost nothing for the rest of the cast. Faint line of love interest is that of a lady he meets aboard ship, but his comical experiences are those of being turned out of his hotel in a dress suit for non-payment of board, his baggage being retained, and his glimpses of hardship in attempting to make his own living. The comedy is one of amusing adventure; it is clean, and it will probably be well-received. It is not, however, superlatively great.

"Vengance is Mine" affords Crane Wilbur a chance to appear in the limelight almost constantly after the first reel is over. Mr. Wilbur is a highly intelligent and capable actor in roles suited to his appearance and temperament, and he is probably able to give a good account of himself in roles that are not, but he knows quite as well as a critic that an actor becomes great in the interpretation of a role for which he is cast, or a dozen such, but not in having a role cast for him. "Vengance is Mine" opens up with the attempted seduction of an innocent young girl in a hotel room by a blackmailing young villain. The villain's violent struggles with the girl result in his discomfiture, but he tears out the hotel register page on which HE wrote his name "and wife," proof of nothing whatever, and preserves it for future misuse.

Crane Wilbur in his impersonation becomes a rather arbitrary Governor, one who announces that he favors capital punishment and he marries the girl whose seduction was once attempted. The villain returns and demands three thousand dollars from the Governor's wife for the hotel register page on which HE wrote. The innocent wife promises to meet the villain in HIS room, an outworn theatrical situation. The Governor's younger brother overhears the plot and follows in truly theatrical fashion to the room. Struggle. Girl shoots villain. Younger brother enables her to get away, but he remains and permits himself to be arrested for the murder, thus forever compromising the Governor, and he is finally convicted of murder in the first degree where no motive was proven.

Now we know what to expect, the same old last-moment pardon when the telephone wires to the prison are cut and the Governor drives like mad in his car to save the innocent victim after the real culprit has confessed. It was done in another Mutual feature about a month ago, and it has long been the stock in trade of the amateur playwright. The Chief Executive arrives in the electrocution room just as a lever was about to be pressed which would end the innocent man's life. The high-minded Governor, who would not before pardon his innocent brother, condones the murder committed by his wife, and the play concludes with his resignation from office. There are a lot of irrelevant scenes throughout, such as that of prison torture, which should be eliminated in the final editing, and the whole trend of the story is morbid.

"The Idol of the Stage." The story of an actor of good family, who marries a girl of good family and finally neglects her and their child to revel in opium smoking. We are treated to several views of a vile den, where "The Idol of the Stage" drags down another woman who loves him. In the weary course of time he becomes the regular thing, an innocent convict, but he is to be pardoned when cured, the object of keeping him in restraint in a veritable school of dope fiends is to cure him of the habit. The stage convicts wear stripes and sleep in a dormitory instead of cells. One of them, a "trusty," attempts the seduction of the Idol's wife when she visits him, drags her to an old mill and subsequently induces a reporter to print the news that she is visiting her husband on mere pretext, her real object being that of meeting the "trusty." Through thousands of feet of such stuff the "Masterpicture" drags its way.

It is occasionally claimed by salesmen that such stuff sells better than any other kind of play, an unproven statement and one possibly inspired by the fact that several powerful plays by talented authors have painted a dark side of life and drawn well, attracted wide-spread attention because they dealt with some perilous economic or social problem, where there was strong sincerity of purpose back of the proposition. If it is true that commercial success depends upon the constant lowering of motive and treatment, the end of moving pictures as an art is already in sight. Who creates a demand for the morbid if it is not those who produce the morbid? Is it not true that the production of splendid stories, treated with skill and interpreted with intelligence, reaching out to all that is fair and just and merciful in human nature, will truly provide masterpictures for millions who would love dearly to see them?

"The Innocence of Ruth"

Five-Part Kleine-Edison Drama, Featuring Edward Earle and Viola Dana, Is an Interesting Story from the Pen of William Addison Lathrop.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Edison company released on January 26 a five-part drama written by William Addison Lathrop. It is a good picture. The story is of Ruth, a girl scarcely more than a child, who by her dying and penniless father is confided to the protection of Carter, a single man rather young for so great a responsibility. The inevitable happens, to be sure, but the course of true love, even when undeclared, proves to be unsmooth. The dramatic situations are centered about the efforts of Reynolds, an acquaintance of the guardian, who proves a crook in the end, to seduce Ruth.

There is a bit of improbability attached to the attendance at the charity ball of Edna, who lives in the home of Reynolds and is supported by him—plainly his mistress. Nor was it likely that at the denouement a detective would grapple with a desperate man who had a revolver on a table near him when the policeman very easily could have covered the criminal with his own weapon. It paved the way for the killing of the detective and the shooting of the escaping man by the companion of the former, but it constituted an unnecessary as well as an illogical mess of bloodletting. It was a bully struggle, however, and probably that was Director Collins' object.

Viola Dana is a charming Ruth, whether as child or youth. It is refreshing to see a screen character attempting a dance as an incident in the unfolding of a story and find one who really can dance instead of making a painful effort. Miss Dana adds to the illusion of the drama by her skill and grace in the "dance of the flowers" and as "Yama Yama." She displays ability, too, in the portrayal of coquetry, gayety and the sterner moods. Edwin Earle as Carter is strong, finished. He fits the part. Augustus Phillips is Reynolds and makes of him a ruthless man of the world who will be properly disliked. Mr. Tamamoto as Togo, the butler, makes his part stand out.

Scene from "The Innocence of Ruth" (Kleine-Edison).

The picture is finely staged. There are large sets, as, for instance, the theater scene and the ball that follows. There are situations of strength. The picture is well played; and it will make a release that will be enjoyed.

Rupert Julian in One Reeler.

"Arthur's Last Fling" is the title of a one-reel drama which Rupert Julian is staging at the Universal City studio. The story was written by Julian and in it he, Elsia Jane Wilson, Hal Cooley and Rena Rogers play the leading roles.

In this one-reel drama, written by Julian Louis Lamothe and produced by Melvin Mayo, the hero, becomes infatuated with a woman of the under world and gives up a pure young girl in order to make the Magdalene his wife. The good woman becomes a nun, meets the girl, who has now abandoned her old life, and helps her. The picture will please the very liberal minded. It is well acted by Francelia Billington, Helen Wolcott, Donald Bradbury and Jay Morley.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 5, 1916 (Selig), Jan. 17.—The feature item of this number is water sports at Isle of Jolo, P. I., on Thanksgiving Day. Chicago delegation at Washington; picking roses on snow-covered bushes, Portland, Ore.; crew of S. S. Thessaloniki, New York; Anchor line S. S. Perugia; exterminating moles and gophers, Salem, Ore.; laying corner-stone of American Federation Building, Washington; gas well, Corpus Christi, Texas; Representative "Cyclone" Davis, Washington; gale at San Francisco; Franklin Park Zoo, Boston; Black Hand explosion, Sacramento; cutting willow sapplings and repairing levees, Linwood Landing, Miss.; 17th U. S. Cavalry at San Antonio, Texas, completing the reel.

THEM WAS THE GOOD OLD DAYS (Vitagraph), Jan. 17.—Not the most humorous one-reel comedy from the typewriter of Mark Swan, but the picture has considerable merit, and is capably acted by John T. Kelly, Kate Price and Harry Fisher. The story contrasts the comforts of modern times with those of early Colonial days, and has been well produced by C. J. Williams.

THE TALE OF A COAT (Kalem), Jan. 18.—Sherlock Holmes is burlesqued in an amusing way during the action of this one-reel comedy. As a master cracksman, Bud Duncan employes his comic energy without restraint, and Ethel Teare, Charles Mulgro, Jack MacDermott and Gus Leonard do their best to keep pace with him.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 4 (Essanay), Jan. 19.—The cartoons with which Wallace A. Carlson has supplied this number are surefire laugh-makers. The topics are all live ones and include conscription, Wilson, Ford, Bryan, baseball, etc. A Dreamy Dud episode and scenes in the Canadian Rockies and Victoria, B. C., complete the reel.

MISFIT BARON (MinA), Jan. 20.—As the title indicates, this one-reel comedy is founded on a case of mistaken identity. The usual complications take place, the valet being mistaken for the master. Spirited playing on the part of Bill Parsons, Carolyn Mitchell and the other members of the cast infuses the reel with a fair amount of fun.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 6, 1916 (Selig), Jan. 20.—Ladies at Alamada, Cal., preparing supplies for war victims, opens the number. The feature item is fashion notes from Interior Africa. Death of Indian Chief Ogallala Fire; recruiting for "Continental" army, San Antonio, Tex.; prominent men of the U. S. and Mexico; Peruvian bark Callao at San Francisco; moving picture manufacturers at Washington; ice boating at Maldin, Mass.; accident in C. & N. THE SEALSKIN COAT (No. 13 of "The Ventures of Marguerite" Series) (Kalem), Jan. 21.—Otto Hoffman, the author of this number of the Marguerite series has devised a clever detective story and the producer has filled it with swift-moving "business." A diamond necklace and Marguerite's sealskin coat nearly get that young lady into serious trouble. Robert Ellis, Richard Purdon and Tom J. Evans are in Miss Courtot's support.

A TELEGRAPHIC TANGLE (Vitagraph), Jan. 21.—Maude Bonner has furnished the Drews with a one-reel scenario that is equal to the best of their material. The author shows a surprising familiarity with the failings of mankind and their petty sins, but presents only the humorous side of the question. The work of the stars and their support and the production by Mr. Drew are up to the old standard.

THE OPEN TRACK (No. 63 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Jan. 22.—A motorcycle and a wild leap to the handrail of a freight car supply the thrill in this number, and a band of counterfeiters supply the trouble, but Helen lands them in jail at the finish. R. Adams, Clarence Burton, Franklin Hall, George Robinson and Glen Gano are members of Miss Gibson's support.

INSOMNIA (Lubin), Jan. 22.—Mark Swan has written a one-reel comedy of errors that is vastly amusing. The mishaps that Billie Reeves goes through, in the leading role, are many and will prove the source of much laughter. Arthur Matthews, Charles Griffiths and Carrie Reynolds help Mr. Reeves to keep the reel moving at a lively pace.

General Film Company Specials.

THE MISER'S HEART (Biograph), Jan. 17.—This is good melodrama, a reissue, in which appear among the players at present prominent Robert Harron, Edward Dillon, Wilfred Lucas and Charles H. Mailes. A child, played by Inez Seabury, has a place in the story, and does good work. The subject contains moments of marked suspense. Review on page 254 of the January 8th issue.

THE EVANGELIST (Lubin), Jan. 17.—This four-reel Unit Program photoplay was adapted by Clay M. Greene from the drama of the same name by Sir Henry Arthur Jones, and produced by Barry O'Neil. The scenes are English and the plot deals frankly with several vital phases of life. It has been made into a strong photoplay and staged with liberality and skill. The cast is an excellent one and contains the names of Gladys Hanson, George Soule Spencer, Jack Standing, Peter Lang, Ferdinand Tidmarsh, George Clark, Arthur Mathews, Rosetta Brice, and Eleanor Dunn. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Jan. 22 page 621.

WHY LOVE IS BLIND (Selig), Jan. 17—The acting of Jack Pickford in this three-reel drama, written by Wm. A. McGuire, is worthy the tradition of the family. He plays a hunchback boy who falls in love with a blind girl, and finds happiness through the sacrifice he makes for her sake. The story is out of the ordinary and strikes an undercurrent of real sympathy. It has been competently directed by George Nicholls. The other members of the cast include Guy Oliver, Wm. Scott, Lillian Hayward, Frank Clark and Betty Nathan.

THE ANGEL OF PIETY FLAT (Biograph), Jan. 18.—This two-reel subject is a good story of outdoors—of the primitive west, with atmosphere well maintained. It was reviewed in the issue of Jan. 8.

THE BOOK AGENT'S ROMANCE (Essanay), Jan. 18.—The part played by G. M. Anderson in this two-reel drama has considerable light comedy. The story deals with a gang of crooks and their efforts to secure a valuable necklace. Mr. Anderson, as the book agent, accidentally gets mixed up in the affair, helps to foil the thieves, and wins a bride. The play gives the star's admirers a chance to see him in a different phase of his art and is an interesting screen drama. Ruth Saville, Lee Willard and Eva Heazlett are the leading support.

A LIFE CHANCE (Biograph), Jan. 19.—A three-part drama containing strong situations. There is a good cast, containing Louise Vale, Franklin Ritchie, Gus Pixley, Jack Drumeir and Jose Reuben. The subject was reviewed on January 8.

A DUEL IN THE DESERT (No. 9 of the "Stingaree" Series—Kalem), Jan. 19.—The duel in this number is between "Stingaree" and Inspector Cairns. The highwayman and his partner, after escaping from prison, are again retaken and again escape through a clever trick of "Stingaree's." The desert scenes are well screened and the two reels are full of action.

THE LAW'S INJUSTICE (Lubin), Jan. 20.—Edward Sloman is the producer of this three-reel photoplay, written by Julian Louis Lamothe. A young Italian girl, who gets into the clutches of a loan shark and is forced to serve a term in prison, is the heroine of the story. The plot commands attention, the leading roles being played by Helen Wolcott, George Routh and L. C. Shumway. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Jan. 22, page 621.

HOUSE OF MYSTERY (Knickerbocker), Jan. 21.—In this three-reel Star Feature picture, Paul Gilmore plays the part of a U. S. Secret Service officer. Mr. Gilmore has no difficulty in meeting the requirements of his role and becoming a satisfactory hero in an exciting melodrama that deals with smugglers, and a mysterious house where some of the most vigorous of the action takes place. The picture is a good specimen of its class and was produced by the Hockhimer Brothers. Peggy Hamilton, Philo McCollough, Dick Johnson and Adelaide Woods are members of the cast.

THE WHITE ALLEY (Essanay), Jan. 22.—A mystery is the leading motive of this three-reel melodrama, written by Carolyn Wells. The plot is somewhat slow in getting under way, but, after the keynote is struck, the interest is maintained to the end. Most of the scenes take place in or near a country home, the owner being murdered in a mysterious manner. The picture is well played. Harry Beaumont, Ernest Maupain, Edward Arnold, Hugh Thompson, Elizabeth Burbridge and Peggy Sweeney have the leading parts.

SECRET SEVEN (Vitagraph), Jan. 22.—This three-reel photoplay lives up to expectations inspired by its title. It is a detective story, in which a band of Italian counterfeiters make things lively for the other members of the cast. If the play has a fault, it is an oversupply of plot. Adolph A. Thomas, the author, has put his material together skilfully, however, and William Humphrey has been faithful to his reputation as a producer. Carolyn Birch, William Humphrey, Leo Delaney, Templer Saxe, Harry Northrup and Rose Tapley lead the cast. Miss Tapley is especially excellent as Rita Bellona.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE FOURTH ESTATE (Fox), Jan. 17.—This story of newspaper and political life contains good situations and will make a popular release. The picture is reviewed at length in this issue.

Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

THE INNOCENCE OF RUTH (Edison), Jan. 26. A Kleine-Edison feature in which Edward Earle, Viola Dana, Augustus Phillips and T. Tamamoto have the leading roles. It is a well-made and interesting picture, a review of which will be found on another page.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

HER DEBT OF HONOR (Columbia), Jan. 24.—The morbid tone of this picture will make it unsuitable for many houses, although there is no escaping the strength of a number of the scenes and the power of the acting of William Nigh, who also directed the production. He portrays a degenerate with remarkable skill. Valli Valli is a conspicuous member of an efficient cast. Settings for the picture are very good and they are well photographed.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 55 (Mutual), Jan. 20.—Running races in San Francisco, Federation building ceremonies in Washington, scenes during Youngstown strike, Pasadena rose tournament and views of the Ford peace expedition in Norway are shown in this interesting number.

A BABY GRAND (Vogue), Jan. 20.—This is not an especially commendable picture. It contains a good deal of slapstick business, and a considerable display of women's legs. The head comedian persists in trying to varnish the legs of the pretty young heroine in place of the legs of the baby grand piano.

THE GIRL OF HIS DREAMS (Cub), Jan. 21.—A fair sample of farce comedy with George Ovey featured. The comedian has a remarkable dream in which a beautiful young woman appears to him. The idea carried into real life has bitter mingled with the sweet.

MR. BUMPS, COMMUTER (Novelty), Jan. 21.—An escaped convict invades Mr. Bumps' home, steals his clothes and causes much trouble. There is no very definite plot and the situations are not very amusing. This is only a fair number.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, No. 19, "The Dells of Wisconsin" (Gaumont), Jan. 23.—"The Dells of Wisconsin" is the title of this excellent contribution to the scenic records of our country. On the same reel with "Keeping Up With the Joneses."

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Jan. 23).—In this number of these entertaining cartoons by Harry Palmer, the McGinnises go traveling. Pa McGinnis has his troubles in a Florida swamp.

SAMMY'S DOUGHFUL ROMANCE (Vogue), Jan. 23.—In this farce comedy which displays considerable dough slinging, the average audience will, regardless of this fact, find much to amuse them. Sammy is a baker who loves his employer's daughter, and has to resort to deceitful measures in order to gain the consent of the young lady's father.

A SANITARIUM SCRAMBLE (American), Jan. 28.—A comedy number, featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. The girl, after being discharged as a nurse for paying too much attention to her lover, pretends her home is a private sanitarium. When the aunt comes unexpectedly, she has her guests pretending to be invalids. A familiar plot handled in quite an amusing way.

WALK THIS WAY (Beauty), Jan. 30.—A comedy number, by Jack Dillon, with Neva Gerber and Walter Spencer in the cast. There are some good contrasts between city and country types in this. The plot is light and quite entertaining. This makes a number of about average intere-t.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE BAIT (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Centaur), Jan. 22.—A five-reel production featuring Betty Harte and William Clifford. The type of life depicted in this play is most unwholesome. Its types are interesting, and have been well portrayed by a competent cast. The majority of the scenes of the play take place in frontier gambling dens. A young girl is used as bait in one of these dens, and is afterward married to a trapper of good character. The element infused into this portion of the story is the saving grace of the production.

THE MAN IN THE SOMBRERO (American), Jan. 25.—A pretty love story told in two reels. The production is wholesome and not in any way inoffensive, but at the same time is not above the average in any other particular. Harold Lockwood and May Allison have the principal roles.

THE BURGLAR'S PICNIC (Thanhouser), Jan. 26.—A three-reel subject, with a pleasing juvenile interest, by Clinton H. Stagg. The Fairbanks twins are featured. They and their school girl chums go into the woods for a midnight picnic. The old professor follows, loses his glasses and gets into a deserted house where two burglars are making headquarters. The girls appear and the burglars are captured. The later scenes, on the wrecked train, contain more action and the close is satisfying. There is no effort at sensationalism, the pleasing results being obtained by a natural development of the story. The twins are very attractive in this.

LORD LOVELAND DISCOVERS AMERICA (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe American), Jan. 27.—A five-part production made by the American Film Co. Arthur Maude is featured and Constance Crawley plays opposite him. The picture is an adaptation of the novel by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, which has a plot well suited to screen purposes. Arthur Maude, the talented English actor, gives a splendid impersonation of the title role which is imbued with a delightfully refined vein of comedy. In the adaptation of the story to the screen there is evident a tendency to overload the play, a fact that interferes considerably with what should be an easy flow of circumstances.

VENGEANCE IS MINE (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe Centaur), Jan. 31.—In this five-part Centaur production Crane Wilbur is featured. The picture has its points of merit, but it is a pity that more care had not been taken in the arrangement of the plot which has not the strength or consistency of development that could be desired. For instance, near the close of the story the governor refuses to pardon his brother for committing a murder of which he believed him guilty. But when it is discovered that his wife instead of his brother has committed the crime he makes a successful attempt to shield her.

THE BROKEN CROSS (American), Feb. 1.—A two-reel number, featuring Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Queenie Rosson, Rose Donnelly and Harry von Meter. This is a bright, well-acted picture, with a dash of adventure in the opening scenes, where the hero rescues the fisher girl from drowning. Later he finds himself between two strong affections. Propinquity leads him to take Helen, but on the eve of their wedding he tells her of his former love for Dora. Helen, recognizing the cross Dora had given him, sends him back to her. An unusually pleasing love story.

THE KNOTTED CORD (Thanhouser), Feb. 2.—A three-reel mystery story, by Clinton H. Stagg, featuring Bert Delaney, Mignon Anderson and others. The story is one that catches and holds the interest from the beginning. The appearance of a knotted cord means that the millionaire and the young detective are marked for death. The former is killed, but the detective outwits the gang after numerous adventures. This is well constructed and has several moments of melodrama which is enjoyable in this type of story. The ending contains a surprise. Altogether this makes a successful offering.

THE IDOL OF THE STAGE (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Gaumont), Feb. 3.—In this five-part production there has been utilized a competent cast, with Malcolm Williams featured. The production is not in any way a commendable one. On the contrary, it is most unwholesome in theme, and contains more than one of those nauseating scenes which constitute the struggle of the male with the female too often presented in the present day film feature.

THE EXTRA MAN AND THE MILKFED LION (Mustang), Feb. 4.—A three-reel number, taken from one of the stories of Chas. E. Van Loan, featuring Art Accord as Buck Parvin. The offering as a whole is disappointing, as there is so much of the humor and general spirit of the story that does not get on the screen. It leaves too much to the imagination of the observer, and the scenes seem disconnected and lacking in meaning. The disappointment is the greater because the scenes themselves are extremely well handled and enacted by a large and pleasing cast. The boxing contest with the kangaroo and Tommy's blunder in the lion cage are the two best episodes.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

HADDEM BAAD'S ELOPEMENT (Bray), Jan. 13.—An amusing animated cartoon from the Bray studios. This cartoon has been done by the well-known cartoonist, L. M. Glacken, and shows the remarkable incidents relating to Haddem Baad's courtship which happened in the meiocene age. On the same reel with "An Anthropoid Ape."

AN ANTHROPOID APE, Jan. 13.—An interesting study of one of the apes at the Bronx Zoo. In a dinner coat he sits at table and drinks from a bottle, into which at intervals he squints telescopic glances for the purpose of ascertaining just how much is left. This belongs to the Ditmar series.

POLICE DOG ON THE WIRE (Bray), Jan. 27.—C. T. Anderson is the artist of this cartoon which shows the police dog at his desk receiving the current news from his lady love, who takes her stand at the corner saloon to watch over the police officer. A very amusing number. On the same reel with "Extracting Poison from the Fangs of a Snake."

EXTRACTING POISON FROM THE FANGS OF A SNAKE, Jan. 27.—An intensely itneresting contribution from the Ditmar series. This shows the poison being pressed from the sack above the fang, through which it is precipitated into a small glass bowl.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION ON THE DARK CONTINENT (Photocolor), Jan. 17.—An interesting industrial showing how railroads are built in Africa with unskilled native workmen, and without proper facilities of any kind. On the same reel with "The Lizard."

LUKE LOLLS IN LUXURY (Phunphilms), Jan. 19.—An elaborately staged farce comedy, in which Luke gets into a harem and rescues a young girl from enforced slavery. The picture will be found very amusing in spite of the fact that a good deal of slapstick business is resorted to.

RIDING THE GOAT (King Cole), Jan. 22.—This is an amusing farce comedy which introduces an Elks' parade in Los Angeles. The story centers around a couple of simpletons who are treated to an amusing initiation, after which they insist on marching in the parade, from which they are roughly extricated.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE LOVE TRAIL (Gold Rooster Play), Jan. 21.—A five-reel adaptation of Richard Dehan's celebrated novel, "The Dop Doctor." The scene of the story is laid in South Africa in the time of the Boer war. The principal roles are played by Agnes Glynne, Fred Paul, and the play which abounds in fine situations will be a welcome offering to an intelligent audience.

THE HORRORS OF WAR (Pathe), Jan. 24.—This picture presents in three reels some of the horrors of the great European war. There can be no doubt as to the genuineness of these pictures, and the scenes of awful desolation and death have been culled from among others too horrible to exhibit. There can be no greater plea for preparedness than these pictures present.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE CONQUEROR (Kay-Bee), Jan. 23.—A society drama of the old school with an entirely new interpretation. A fine story well handled.

THE GREEN SWAMP (Kay-Bee), Jan. 30.—A powerful story of deterioration in the character of a young and loving wife when jealousy begins to destroy her happiness, jealousy of a most primitive kind, one without the slightest justification, yet shown as a natural outgrowth of intense affection at a critical moment. One of the most perfect plays of its kind ever shown.

BECAUSE HE LOVED HER (Keystone), Jan. 16.—An amusing farce-comedy, with Sam Bernard in the lead. Well handled and offering some ingenious episodes.

A MODERN ENOCH ARDEN (Keystone), Jan. 16.—A big and thrilling story, a real story, with a line of amusing incidents well calculated to keep any audience in a good humor.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 3 (Universal), Jan. 19.—Views of the Rose Carnival at San Diego; a California chicken farm; Canadian cavalry in fencing exercises, and the Ford peace party in Norway are included in this.

WHEN AUNT MATILDA FELL (Nestor), Jan. 31.—A comedy number, in which Al E. Christie has revised one of his better plots. The two hobo makeups are very funny and the action is pleasing. One of the hoboes plays the count and wins Aunt Matilda's heart. An amusing number.

IN DREAMY JUNGLE TOWN (Rex), Feb. 1.—A pleasing number for little folks, featuring Violet MacMillen. The girl dreams she is a jungle maid and has all sorts of experiences with animals and birds. The animal characterizations are amusing. Fine offering for children.

SEA DOGS AND LAND RATS (L-KO), Feb. 2.—A knockabout number featuring Gertrude Selby, Fatty Voss and Reggie Morris. Two sailors join in the park flirtations and some rapid fire competition takes place. The humor is of a rough sort. There is a laugh at the close.

BUILDING UP THE HEALTH OF A NATION, LESSON 3 (Powers), Feb. 3.—Bernarr MacFadden in a new series of exercises and breathing movements. This has an instructive side.

CAGED WITH POLAR BEARS (Powers), Feb. 3.—On same reel with above. Views of a trainer in a cage with eight full grown polar bears. The bears do some amusing tricks.

THE SOUL MAN (Imp), Feb. 4.—This number features King Baggot as a wanderer returning home after ten years. He is unknown to anyone, including his former sweetheart, who fails to recognize him. The latter is married and he saves her child. The number has not enough drama in it to be called strong, but it is thought provoking and different.

WANTED—A PIANO TUNER (Joker), Feb. 5.—A good low comedy subject, featuring Chas. Conklin, Wm. Franey and Gale Henry. The makeups of the piano tuner and detective are good. This has a string of laughs in it.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK, No. 7 (Powers), Feb. 5.—A diversified number, picturing the patent office department in Washington, scenes on Ellis Island, and many views of native pastimes in the insular possessions of the United States. Photography uneven, but an interesting and instructive number.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE PATH OF HAPPINESS (Red Feather Photo-Play), Jan. 31.—The first offering of this new brand features Violet Mersereau as a girl of the woods, a part which fits her like a glove and to which she brings much freshness and charm. The development of the story is excellent throughout, with the exception of the bathing scenes which were overdone and are to be cut down. Harry Benham and Sidney Bracey play the city man and the hunchback. The plot is a trifle conventional, but the story has many excellent touches and the production as a whole unusually good. The photography and scenic effects are very good.

OLD KING COAL (Universal—Special Feature), Jan. 31.—No. 8 of the "Graft" series. In this instalment Tom Lanigan takes his brother and mother to the country. While away The Fifteen plan to blow up his apartments on his return. A mouse causes a premature explosion. Tom then carries out an investigation of the coal trust in the face of numerous perils. He finally brings about the death of the coal king, thus taking away another from The Fifteen. This is one of the best constructed of the series. The scenes attending the coal strike are particularly good.

THREE-FINGERED JENNY (Gold Seal), Feb. 1.—The third episode of "The Journals of Lord John" series. This reverts in the first reel to the episode of "The Grey Sisterhood" and goes over numerous scenes previously shown. The new feature is the reunion of Paul Teano with his wife, a member of the Sisterhood. This is a nice little mystery in itself, but does not greatly advance the main plot. The instalment closes with Maida again in the clutches of the Egyptian and his sister.

THE WISE MAN AND THE FOOL (Laemmle), Feb. 3.—A two-reel number, by Lynn Reynolds, featuring Myrtle Gonzales, Fred Church and Val Paul. This is a story of the eternal triangle and the plot has no great novelty. The introduction of the parable in the second reel makes a pleasing feature. His vision, after reading the parable, inspires the hero to go back just in time to prevent his rival from marrying the girl. This is an offering of average strength.

FLIVVER'S STILL ALARM (Nestor), Feb. 4.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring Charles Evans, the English comedian. This is a burlesque, in which the fire chief's rival abducts the girl and sets fire to the house. The fire company responds, with great deliberation, the wagon hauling passengers and selling milk en route. Not as funny as certain others in which this comedian has appeared, but has flashes of good humor at times. The photography is uneven, but generally acceptable.

PHANTOM ISLAND (Bison), Feb. 5.—A two-reel number, by Grace Cunard, featuring Francis Ford, Bert Wilson, Dorothy Davenport and others. Two lovers and their servant are cast upon a desert island, inhabited only by an old man lost there in previous years. The characters of cook and fiance are not very strongly drawn until the closing scenes, when the cook proves to be a villain at heart. This is conventional, but has pleasing atmosphere and is quite entertaining.

V-L-S-E, Inc., Specials

THE MISLEADING LADY (Essanay), Jan. 3.—Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo play the leads in this fine drama. The story is interesting and the settings artistic. The stars are ably supported by a good cast. This film makes a good offering. For an extended review see page 618 of January 22 issue.

THE WONDERFUL WAGER (Lubin), Jan. 20.—Raymond Hitchcock has done nothing better on the screen than his work in this two-part comedy, constructed from a slight story by George V. Hobart. There is a quantity of humor in his experiences while driving a Ford car to Florida to win a wager. This picture is in all respects a high class offering.

THE ISLAND OF SURPRISE (Vitagraph), Jan. 24.—A picturesque, romantic drama, written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and directed by Paul Scardon, with William Courtenay, Eleanor Woodruff and Zena Keefe playing the principal roles. The most dramatic passages of the production are laid on an island where the hero is stranded with two women. They are attacked by savages and narrowly escape death before being rescued. The picture makes excellent entertainment.

World Film Corporation.

THE CITY (Shubert), Jan. 17.—Clyde Fitch's celebrated drama was made into a picture by Theodore Wharton, who had an able cast at his disposal, with Thurlow Bergen, William Riley Hatch, Elsie Esmond and Edith Edney in the roles of first importance. The photoplay lacks much of the force of the stage production, but probably will be well received, a number of shortcomings notwithstanding. Exhibitors may safely count upon the drawing power of the title.

A CIRCUS ROMANCE (Equitable), Jan. 24.—Scenes showing a circus troupe traveling through the South contribute largely to the atmosphere of this five-part picture, in which Muriel Ostriche gives vivacity and charm to the character of a dancer. The story was well handled by Director Charles M. Seay, whose company included Edward Davis, Jack Hopkins, Catherine Calhoun and George Larkin.

FRUITS OF DESIRE (Brady), Jan. 31.—Robert Warwick is the star in this five-reel adaptation of Henry Russell Miller's novel, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt." The picture is not especially dramatic, but is not without interest in the telling of the life story of a man who realizes his dreams of wealth after a severe struggle. Mr. Warwick is ably supported by Madeline Traverse and others.

The War Film Syndicate

Paul Bush Has Been Appointed Eastern Representative and Will Make Headquarters in New York.

PAUL H. BUSH, who acted as New York manager for the Indian Film Company during the exploitation of the Tribune war pictures in the east, has been appointed to act as eastern representative for the War Film Syndicate of Chicago.

Mr. Bush will visit all the principal cities in the east, in the interest of the War Film Syndicate, before establishing himself in definite quarters in New York City. He left Chicago Saturday, January 22, for Detroit, and from that city will proceed to Toledo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Boston and will arrive in New York about February 1.

The War Film Syndicate owns the exclusive rights to the Wilbur H. Durborough German war pictures, the state rights for which are now being sold.

"NE'ER-DO-WELL" IN LITIGATION.

Phillip and Lillian Klein, executors of the late Charles Klein who was lost with the Lusitania, have sought to enjoin the release of the motion picture, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," made by Selig, upon the claim that the author, Rex Beach, had previously sold the dramatic rights to Klein and that a play was written and produced by him based on the book. The action has been brought in the Federal Court.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE EXTRA MAN AND THE MILKFED LION" (American).

"The Extra Man and the Milk-fed Lion" is a three reel comedy belonging to the Buck Parvin series, produced by the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Calif.

When the Buck Parvin Company started to make this unique picture it was discovered that a wild animal circus was needed, but not obtainable. A big one in Los Angeles offered the right opportunity, but neither money nor persuasion could induce the owners to have their precious charges pose for the camera. Arthur Howard, who is a man of resource, undertook to steal the circus. He could not carry it off bodily, but he did take a lot of it away in film form. Mr. Howard rode in a taxi to the circus, taking his camera and camera man with him, cautiously concealed, and secured some capital scenes.

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS IN METRO PICTURE.

To obtain several big and exciting scenes for "The Blindness of Love," a forthcoming Metro production, in which Julius Steger is starred, the entire campus of the University of Florida was used, together with hundreds of the students. The Metro company, headed by Director Charles Horan, were making the exterior scenes in and around Jacksonville, Fla., and had intended using a small seminary nearby for the college scenes.

On a chance, Horan communicated with the University officials, and asked if it would be possible to make some pictures there. He was surprised and overjoyed when word came back that they would be delighted to entertain the Metro company, and as for pictures, they could go as far as they liked.

Horan had his entire company at the University gates, near Gainesville, the next afternoon. They spent the remainder of the day rehearsing, and the students were given two holidays in order to participate in the scenes. Two foot ball teams were put in action, and they staged a hotly contested game the next day while hundreds of students in the grand stands rooted, and the camera clicked away.

LESSER OPENING NEW YORK OFFICE.

Sol L. Lesser, who controls the United States rights on Selig's "Ne'er Do Well," will open offices in New York, where he will make his headquarters for marketing the "Ne'er Do Well" on a national basis. E. M. Asher will precede Mr. Lesser a few days to arrange for suitable offices and complete various details so that everything will be in readiness when Mr. Lesser arrives. Mr. Asher will also act in the capacity of publicity manager.

MAURICE COSTELLO IN A NEW VITAGRAPH.

The Vitagraph Company has completed a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature, under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke, that provides a splendid vehicle for Maurice Costello. It is "The Crown Prince's Double," a story of unusual interest in which Costello is shown in costumes that set off his figure admirably. Costello portrays both roles, and through trick photography of a high order, is shown talking to his double. In the cast are Anders Randolf, Thomas Mills, Anna Laughlin, Norma Talmadge and others.

CORRECTION IN CAST.

Moving Picture World.

Gentlemen: I desire to correct an error in the various reviews of "The City." Dick Stewart is credited with playing George Hannock, Jr., "The Dope Fiend." This part was played by Allan Murnane and Mr. Stewart played George Hannock, Sr. I make this statement in justice to Mr. Murnane, without desire to detract in any way from the work of Mr. Stewart. Both gentlemen were excellent in their respective parts as the screen will show. Sincerely yours,

THEO. W. WHARTON, Producer.

"DESTINY" (Essanay).

How a young man ultimately triumphs over the curse of drink which has cost everything he held dear—sweetheart and ambitions—and finally wins a place as judge of the supreme court is the timely story told in this three act piece. The play offers many opportunities to Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse for the handling of stirring situations. It comes at a time when so much is being written concerning the evil of excessive drinking, and while it is distinctly a story and makes no effort to point a moral, it carries something to interest those on both sides of the liquor question.

Bryant Washburn is the young attorney whose one weakness is drink. Edmund F. Cobb, as his rival, gets him into a state of intoxication and calls the girl, played by Ruth Stonehouse, to gaze upon the man she is going to marry. The attorney sees his engagement broken because of the trap and abandons his practice and leaves the country.

His despondency drives him lower, but he is snatched from the depths by a former client, who in hope of repaying a debt of gratitude, brings about a reconciliation with the boy's father and a renewal of his engagement. Some years after he is found happily married and a respected attorney who realizes the height of his ambition—a seat on the Supreme bench.

V-L-S-E Program

Big Four Offers a Number of Strong Productions for February and March Release.

NEW releases announced by the V-L-S-E from each of their companies for the present period, are noteworthy in the strong heart-interest which predominates all of them. Lubin's first February release, scheduled for February 14, is "Dollars and Cents," featuring Ethel Clayton, who made such a favorable impression in "The Great Divide," and Tom Scene from "Thou Shalt Not Covet" (Selig).

Moore, whose initial appearance on the V-L-S-E program will occur in this production. "Dollars and Cents" is an adaptation of the novel which has recently appeared in one of the prominent magazines, by Albert Payson Terhune. The play was directed by Joseph Kaufman, and in addition to being built upon a powerful story, is said to be replete with many novel effects. Following this release, Lubin will present, "Her Bleeding Heart," featuring Richard Buhler and Rosetta Brice, another story of intense sentimental carrying powers. It will be ready for booking February 28.

"Thou Shalt Not Covet," which is Selig's February release, scheduled for the 7th, is a story built on the old Biblical quotation, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife," which, in itself, gives some conception of its possibilities as a heart interest play. One of the startling scenes of this production is the wreck of a large ocean liner. It features Tyrone Power, Kathlyn Williams, Eugenie Besserer, and Guy Oliver.

On March 6, Selig will release "Unto Those Who Sin," with Fritzi Brunette in the principal part. This is a drama written by James Oliver Curwood and directed by William Robert Daly.

Essanay's offering on February 14, is a five act feature, "Vultures of Society," written by Richard Goodall. The types of the under-world from the cocaine fiend, to the genial colored porter, have been well selected from the slum districts of Chicago by E. H. Calvert who is directing the picture. The principals of the production include Lillian Drew, Marguerite Clayton, Ernest Maupain and E. H. Calvert. For their second release in February, Essanay will present a modern day drama called "The Discard," by Charles Michelson. It is one which holds the attention from title to tail piece, picturing an exceedingly interesting side of life.

Vitagraph have re-arranged their V-L-S-E releases so that the schedule for February begins with "The Crown Prince's Double", released on the 7th, and is followed by "The Writing on the Wall" on the 14th; "Kennedy Square," on the 21st; and "One Night" on the 28th.

In March, beginning with the 6th, Vitagraph will put out through the Big Four, "The Hunted Woman," "Colton U. S. N.," on the 13th; "The Two Edged Sword," on the 20th, and "The Supreme Temptation" on the 27th.

More than seven hundred people are used in one of the big scenes of "The Crown Prince's Double," when the story pictures a movement to dethrone the king. Maurice Costello is seen in this production and Norma Talmadge.

"The Writing on the Wall," which follows "The Crown Prince's Double," was Olga Nethersole's starring vehicle, and is a psychological drama of greed. Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour, Naomi Childers and Bobby Connelly are its principals. "Kennedy Square," next on the schedule, is an echo of the days when Baltimore was the social center of the South. It was written by F. Hopkinson Smith, and presented by S. Rankin Drew. It is noteworthy for its delightful southern atmosphere and lovable southern types.

"One Night," said to be an especially strong vehicle for Robert Edson, for whom it was especially written, is being produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Davenport.

Lumley Hare, the English leading man who has been seen in so many successful Broadway plays, is under contract with the World Film Corporation. His first screen appearance will be in support of Kitty Gordon in "As In A Looking Glass."

WORLD FILM OBTAINS HOUSE PETERS.

An acquisition of big importance is announced by the World Film Corporation in securing the services of House Peters as the star for the next picture to be made at the Paragon studio in Fort Lee. Mr. Peters is admittedly one of the screen's most brilliant and deservedly popular stars and in contracting with him for the new feature the World Film directors feel that they have scored a veritable triumph.

Mr. Peters will appear in a five reel drama written by Arthur Stringer, entitled "The Hand of Peril." Maurice Tourneur, the versatile World Film director who has become general manager of the reorganized Paragon studio, will direct the picture in person. Work will start this week. Mr. Peters' leading woman is to be Miss June Elvidge, whose work in the World Film productions of "The Rack" and "Love's Crucible" has convinced the heads of the organization that in this charming actress they have a player of stellar possibilities.

Under the direction of Edwin August, "The Yellow Passport" a new Russian picture in which Clara Kimball Young will make her next appearance, is rapidly nearing completion. Only a few minor interior scenes remain to be taken at the Peerless Studio. The picture has exceeded everyone's fondest hopes. Director August has built up scene upon scene of tremendous drama and his efforts have been highly successful.

"PEACE AT ANY PRICE" (Vitagraph).

Two Ford automobiles race at one another with every prospect of a head-on collision, in a new Vitagraph comedy, produced by and featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. Just as the collision seems inevitable, a bearded figure rises from a trench between the machines and announces, "Boy, there ain't no war; the soldiers all went home last Christmas."

As may be guessed, the plot is founded on a nightmare of a man whose brain cells had been wearied by newspaper notices of the wonder the Ford Peace Expedition was to have accomplished by Christmas. The film is called "Peace at Any Price," released on January 28.

"AROUND THE WORLD" (Cub).

For the Cub Comedy "Around the World," to be released January 28 through the Mutual, a line reading something like "a comedy with thrills" well describes the basis of this one reeler in which George Ovey is featured. The comedy part is very much in evidence throughout the one thousand feet, whle the thrills are supplied through a real aeroplane flight by George Ovey.

The story evolves around Jerry (George Ovey), who, buf-

feted about by the police, switches a white and a colored baby to avenge his wrongs. When the change is discovered the miscreant finds himself in a ticklish position, and to escape the pursuing policeman he jumps into a conveniently placed biplane and sails away.

His flight is of long duration and eventually lands him in a cannibal village. It is a queer looking place. The natives are cannibals of the story book type, but they are not far behind the times in other respects, for their village is equipped with telephones, wireless and other devices of the present era. They hold as captive a pretty white girl and, falling in love with her, Jerry contrives to effect her escape. He has a hard time putting his schemes into being, but at last luck favors him and he sails back home with the girl of his choice by his side.

The biplane flights were made by Ovey himself and have been done in a fashion of his own which is to say the least was a daring undertaking.

Miss Belle Bennett plays "the girl," and among others in Ovey's support are George George, Jefferson Osborne, Louis FitzRoy and a host of others.

"UNDINE" (Bluebird).

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., offer as the third release in their new series "Undine," a spectacular production, in five reels, inspired by the fairy tale of the same title, written by De La Motte Foquet. The producer, Henry Otto, found that the scenario submitted by Walter Woods did not follow the written tale very closely; a fact that was greatly to the advantage of the screen production, for the original story could not well be exactly translated to pictures.

There is enough of the tale appropriated, however, to keep the theme intact.

Director Otto took his large company, headed by Ida Schnall, who plays Undine, to Santa Cruz Island, California, where beautiful and natural settings of forest, seashore and ocean were at hand to provide scenes for some wonderful photography.

The incidents in the realm of Queen Unda will be found particularly attractive. There are a score of maidens, clad mostly in wisps of seaweed, when they are not encased in nature's bathing suits, disporting themselves in the sea and upon the sands. Fancy swimming and diving feats are among the "close-ups," the most sensational plunge being made by Miss Schnall who precipitates herself into the sea from a measured height of 130 feet.

Beautiful spectacular effects are accomplished by photographing the dancing nymphs among the grottos and fantastic arches formed by the rocks of the rugged coast; the scenes in the enchanted forest are beautiful with another grandeur, and as a composite of land and water picturing "Undine" is sure to be an artistic success, independent of the various sensational features in which the fairy-photos abound.

"SEE AMERICA FIRST"—No. 18 (Mutual).

Milwaukee's real charms and picturesqueness have been overshadowed, perhaps, by the great industry which has made it famous. The pretty Mutual Traveler will attempt to bring some of Milwaukee's wonder spots to the eyes of motion picture spectators in the Jan. 11 release of the Gaumont split-reel "See America First" in the Mutual Program. The marvelous harbor, with its tremendous facilities for handling the freightage of the great lakes, the drives, parks and residential section, picturesque Water street, the Soldiers' Home and the new court house are among the places visited. A sight seeing trip would not be complete, of course, without a glimpse of the breweries, so the Traveler takes her spectators with her to see the production of Milwaukee's greatest commodity.

In the second half of the reel, Harry Palmer, the cartoonist, puts "Pa" McGinnis through his paces for "Ma" and "Julie" in the animated comic, "Keeping Up With the Joneses."

MANY ARC CONTROLLERS IN USE.

It is obvious that the merits of the Speedco Arc Controller, the machine manufactured by the Speed Controller Company of 259 William Street, New York, are rapidly being appreciated in all sections of the country. Some of the theaters that have recently been equipped with Speedco Arc Controllers are the following: Park, Columbus Circle, New York; Loew's Columbia, Washington; Loew's St. James and Loew's Globe at Boston; B. F. Keith's Boston; Coliseum, Seattle; Orpheum, Grand Rapids; Pantages, Winnipeg; City, Newark; Duplex, Detroit; City, Brockton; Strand, Akron; Alhambra, Utica; Auditorium, Baltimore; Gertrude McCoy, Baltimore; Cambria, Johnston, and Triangle, at Brooklyn.

"DIAMONDS ARE TRUMPS" (Selig).

"Diamonds Are Trumps" is a Selig multiple reel feature drama produced by Wm. Robert Daly. "Diamonds Are Trumps" is a detective story of an unusual type in which the sleuth does not occupy the center of the screen on all occasions, and is not the hero of the story. An all-star cast, including Fritzi Brunnette supported by Lillian Hayward, Frank Clark, Edward Scene from "Diamonds Are Trumps" (Selig).

J. Piel and others contribute to the excellence of this production.

A clever crook is engaged in smuggling diamonds across the border, and is never detected. Tom Roach, a detective, in love with Kitty Randolph, is assigned to obtain incriminating evidence against the crook, but fails. Then it is that Kitty Randolph takes the case into her own hands and completes the undoing of the shrewd smuggler.

The photography, scenic investure and acting are all of high class. "Diamonds Are Trumps" will be released Monday, January 31st, through General Film Service.

LESSER RENEWS RIGHTS OF "THE SPOILERS."

Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., bought the California rights for Selig's new edition of "The Spoilers." In its original form "The Spoilers" was one of the most sensational pictures ever made. It has been expanded by the edition of many scenes serving to make clearer the action in this great production.

"THE HEARTBREAKERS" (Vim).

Owing to the great demand for comedy, the Knickerbocker Star Features will release on January 28, a Three-Part Feature comedy-drama. Far from the slapstick order, it is a comedy, carrying with it a bit of heart interest as well as fun. Indications are that the demand for this comedy will be great.

In this drama, Jackie Saunders, the famous screen star, takes the leading part of the Heiress, and does herself great credit. She is supported by the well-known Fred Whitman, while other members of the cast are strong supports. Andrew Arbuckle, as the father; Frank Erlanger as the Count and suitor, with other suitors, Robert Grey, Daniel Gilfether and Eddy Peters.

"PIQUE," A BIOGRAPH FEATURE.

One of Broadway's greatest successes, by the most famous of all American dramatists, will become a picture feature on February 16, when Biograph releases its superb three-reel production of Augustin Daly's society drama, "Pique."

The piece is admirably cast, with Thomas Jefferson, Betty Gray, William Russell and Gretchen Hartman in the leading roles. The action of the drama provides opportunity for sharp contrasts in scenic effects, the exteriors including the Scene from "Pique" (Biograph).

Brooklyn Navy Yard and the deck of a battleship, and the interiors ranging from a spacious cathedral nave to a thieves' kitchen. For the scenes preceding the embarkation of the hero on his mission in the Spanish war, a full corps of U. S. bluejackets was assigned by the Secretary of the Navy.

Completing the Biograph program for the week of February 14 are a spectacular single reel drama directed by D. W. Griffith, and a two reel thriller. "Just Gold," the re-issue, will be remembered by exhibitors as one of the most electrifying dramas of the Great Desert. Lillian Gish and Lionel Barrymore head a characteristic cast. "His White Lie" is the title of the two reel mystery drama, founded upon a man's assumption of the apparent guilt of his sweetheart, whose guardian is found murdered after an attack upon her. Claire McDowell, Gretchen Hartman, Charles Perley and Charles H. Mailes have the leading roles in an unusually strong cast.

"THE TRAGEDY IN VILLA FALCON" (Great Northern).

Announcement is being made by the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, New York, that they are going to release a series of detective dramas of heretofore unprecedented action and interest.

Alfred Hertel, the well-known Great Northern actor, whose interpretation of the famous "Gar-El-Hama" pictures is known all the world over, plays the leading role in this series, the title of which is "The Man with the Missing Finger." On about January 25th the first episode, entitled "The Tragedy in the Villa Falcon," will be released. This, as all the other episodes, is a complete, independent story in four parts, and is replete with the most unusually thrilling scenes and daring feats.

"MARTYRDOM OF PHILIP STRONG" IS EDISON'S MASTERPIECE.

"The Martyrdom of Phillip Strong," an Edison feature, founded on the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon's famous work "The Crucifixion of Phillip Strong," scheduled for release through Kleine-Edison Features, February 9, is, in the opinion of the George Kleine forces, the most extraordinary production the Edison Company has ever made.

It was reviewed last week at the Kleine Studios before a representative audience of Kleine branch managers and prominent New York exhibitors, and, at the close of the performance, was unanimously declared the strongest subject of its kind they had seen. The subject features Robert Conness and Mabel Trunnelle who fairly covered themselves with glory in the respective roles of the minister and his wife. Lovers of Sheldon's beautiful story will remember the many situations offering a wealth of opportunity for the strongest kind of dramatic work. The death of the minister's child, his renunciation of a life of luxury, and all hope of material reward in his chosen calling, his battle against the organized forces of riches and vice, and his final defeat at the hands of death itself, are elements of a drama unrivaled for soul-stirring, tear-compelling power.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG IN "THE YELLOW PASSPORT."

The long expected forthcoming feature of the World Film Corporation starring Clara Kimball Young is announced for release on February 7th. It has now been definitely decided to call the picture, which was directed by Edwin August "The Yellow Passport." "The Yellow Passport" provides for Miss Young in the character of Sonia Sokoloff, one of the strongest characterizations in which this beautiful emotional actress has appeared.

The World Film Corporation has provided for "The Yellow Passport" a most effective production both scenically and to the point of dramatic values. The scene showing the massacre of the defenseless Hebrews in the Russian village by the Black Hundred and the remarkably vivid and impressive character of the entire photo-drama bid fair from all accounts to make this one of the most worthy productions of the season.

The cast in support of Miss Young is also worthy of mention including as it does, Edwin August, John Sinpolis, Mrs. Edward Kimball, Florence Hackett, Nicholas Dunaew, Edward Kimball, Robert Cummings, Alec B. Francis, Adolph Lestina, John Boyle and others quite as well known.

Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has announced the following additions to the Western Universal companies:—Guy Hedlund, general stock; Lillian Peacock, C. Conklin and M. Morante, Curtis Company; Harry Morris, Thomas Jefferson, Thelma Francis, Billy Human and W. F. Musgrose, general stock; Bess Meredith and Galder Johnstone, scenario department, and Gilbert Warrenton, cameraman.

The following discontinuances have been announced: Barney Furey, Worthington Company; Walter Rogers, Jane Walle, Dixie Carr, Sydney Ayres, general stock; Edythe Sterling and E. B. Jackson, Hunt Company; W. H. Carer, Helen Reaume and Rex Hodge, Smalley Company; B. A. Molter and Joe King, Madison Company; L. T. Clapham, Ford Company, and Robert Rose of the McRae Company.

NEWMAN'S NEW CHICAGO ADDRESS.

The Newman Manufacturing Company, which manufactures a complete line of brass poster frames, easels, railings, ticket choppers, and other theater equipment, with factories in Cincinnati, New York and Chicago, report that its Chicago plant, located at 108 West Lake street, suffered a total loss by fire on January 14. Temporary quarters have been obtained at 68 West Washington street, Chicago. All of the contracts of its Chicago plant are now being executed by the Cincinnati factory of this company, where additional force has been put on in order to take care of the emergency, so as to cause no undue delay in filling their orders.

Mr. Walter J. Newman, who has charge of the temporary quarters in Chicago, states that there positively will be no interruption to business. He will be glad to receive his friends at the new location. The company reports an excellent business at its New York factory, located at 101 Fourth avenue, and at its Cincinnati plant, 717 Sycamore street, and the outlook for the year 1916 as more than encouraging.

LUCAS THEATER SUPPLY OPENS.

The Lucas Theater Supply Company is the name of a newly formed wholesale and retail supply house of Atlanta, Ga., which has taken over the entire business and holdings of Harry K. Lucas, better known as "The Supply King," who for the past ten years has been prominently identified with the motion picture industry of the South. Mr. Lucas has operated an exclusive supply house for several years, and will be actively at the head of the new organization, having been elected secretary and general manager. The Lucas Theater Supply Company has been appointed exclusive Southern distributor for the Simplex projector and is now making arrangements for territorial dealers. A tremendous stock of motion picture equipment and machine parts is carried, including an initial shipment of fifty latest improved Simplex machines, which is possibly the largest single order ever shipped to that section of the country.

HELEN HOLMES COMPANY IN NEVADA.

Helen Holmes and Director J. P. McGowan have taken their "Girl and the Game" company to the arid desert regions at Las Vegas, Nevada, where the work of producing Frank H. Spearman's thrilling railroad film play will be continued without interruption by unfavorable weather. This precaution has been taken to prevent delay.

For three weeks Los Angeles has been shadowed by dull-gray clouds. Sunshine has only been intermittent. Under these conditions, brilliant photography has been impossible. Rather than wait for good light, which is uncertain at this time of the year, the entire work of producing "The Girl and the Game" was moved across the Sierra Mountains on two hours' notice.

ARROW MAKES "THE WOMAN'S LAW" FOR PATHE.

The first Pathe Gold Rooster Play to be made by the Arrow is "The Woman's Law" in which Florence Reed, who has starred in Pathe's "At Bay" and "New York" will be featured. Supporting members of the cast are Duncan McRae, brother of Bruce McRae, the Pathe player, who appears in a dual role, and Anita Scott, Lora Rogers and Master Jack Curtis. "The Woman's Law" was adapted from the well known novel of American society life by Mrs. Maravene Thompson. The scenario was written by Harvey E. Thew and Albert S. Levino. Lawrence B. McGill is directing the picture. It is worthy of note that Miss Reed, Director McGill and Duncan McRae unite in saying that the scenario is the best they have ever seen or played.

PIONEER HAS BUFFALO BRANCH.

Announcement is being made by Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, that the volume of their business has increased to such an extent that they found it essential to establish a branch office in Buffalo, at 39 Erie street. This branch will be supplied with new prints of all features purchased by Mr. Hirsh, thereby furnishing the up-state exhibitors with an unexcelled service.

MACHINE TRANSPORTED BY DOG TEAM.

G. A. Metcalfe, well known on the Pacific Coast as a distributor of motion picture supplies and located in San Francisco, California, recently sold a Power's motion picture projecting machine to a mining camp located 150 miles inland from Seward, Alaska. This machine will be sent to Seattle and from there by boat to the Far North. After reaching Seward it will be transported by an Alaskan dog team and sled over the snow and ice to its destination.

ROSENBERG SECURES "NE'ER DO WELL" FOR NORTHWEST.

A chance meeting at the Sherman House in Chicago between Sol. Lesser, who controls the United States rights on the "Ne'er do Well," and M. Rosenberg, manager of the Northwestern Feature Film company, with offices in Seattle, resulted in a deal whereby Rosenberg acquires the rights for Washington and Oregon on the "Ne'er Do Well."

NOVEL PUBLICITY STUFF.

The last word in newspaper display advertising is offered by the Triangle Film Corporation in the form of the so-called "Triangle Ad Sheet" which has just been issued. This is a sheet about the size of a newspaper, which contains 10 model ads. They are distinguished from the usual type of theatrical ads by these characteristics: (1) The characteristic Triangle border around each advertisement and a Triangle displayed somewhere in the ad; (2) plenty of white space; (3) the upper part a 65 screen half tone of two or three attractive characters in the play; (4) the name of the play in large type followed by a few paragraphs in 10 or 12 point type; (5) blank space at the bottom for name of local theater and address. The ads will attract because of the exceedingly lively pictures at the top. Then the name of the play is firmly impressed on the mind of the reader, following which he is drawn to see the attraction by the convincing short argument that follows, and finally the address tells him where to go.

BIG CABARET SCENE A FEATURE OF "THE DEAD ALIVE."

It will seem as if an entire restaurant had been requisitioned by the Gaumont company when its production of "The Dead Alive" is seen on the screen. In this five-reel feature Miss Marguerite Courtot makes her bow as a Gaumont star. She is being directed by Henry J. Vernot, the author of "The Dead Alive." Over a hundred diners are seen grouped about the tables, and a cabaret performance is in progress. For this Gaumont secured a women's orchestra from one of the Jacksonville leading hotels, as well as four professional couples for ball room dances and four professional classic dancers. In the cast of principals appear Sydney Mason, W. J. Butler, and Henry W. Pemberton. There is a great deal of confetti throwing, and at the end of the scene the restaurant has a carnival air.

Posters issued with the first number of the Selig Tribune, the twice-a-week news film issued by the Selig Company and the Chicago Tribune, have caused much favorable comment. The Signal Film Corporation is entering into negotiations with one of the best writers of rag time in America, for a musical number, "The Girl and the Game," to be played in every theater where this picturized novel by Frank H. Spearman is shown.

E. J. Le Saint has begun the production of the fourth episode in "The Journal of Lord John," which Harvey Gates is adapting for the screen from the story by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. William Garwood is featured with Stella Razeto, Laura Oakley, Albert MacQaurrie and Carmen Phillips supporting.

"Celeste of the Ambulance Corps," the three-reel war drama lately produced by the Edison company, was made under the direction of Burton George. The material used in the picture is out of the ordinary, and Mr. George has transferred it to the screen in a very creditable manner.

Los Angeles, Cal. (Special).—With the closing of the Edendale studio of the Selig Company the developing and projecting departments have been re-established at the Selig Zoo studios.

Trade News of the Week

Gathered by Our Own Correspondents

MONTREAL NEWS LETTER.

By G. Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"Cabiria" Comes Back.

The Montreal public has been given a treat these last few weeks, when "Cabiria" was brought back to this city to play at more popular prices. This massive twelve-reeler played last year at the Princess theater in this city at prices equal to those demanded for large legitimate shows. The film is being handled in Montreal through the Kleine-Edison office, the man on the job being Mr. J. A. Darnaby. Mr. Darnaby states that the picture is meeting with fine success in this city. He further states that the subject has been booked solid for several months to come. We are not afraid to say that it is the finest film ever shown in this classic burg.

W. B. Naylor in Charge at Casino.

The Casino theater is now under the management of W. B. Naylor. Mr. Naylor is a newspaper man and showman combined. At one time he edited a local Sunday sheet. His theatrical activities have been seen in the Northern Ontario mining district, and in the city of Manchester, England. Mr. Naylor says that already the Casino has shown signs of improvement.

Maurice West Not Fox Booker.

The various friends of Maurice West, formerly manager of the Family theater, Montreal, will be interested to know that he is now connected with the Fox Corporation in the capacity of traveler. Mr. West is very popular and everybody wishes him success in his new sphere of activities.

IN ONTARIO.

Advance Deposit for Light.

Every moving picture theater manager in Toronto was visited recently by a representative of The Toronto Electric Light Company who notified the managers that all would have to make a deposit in advance for future service from the company. No reason is apparent for this move which is surprising in view of the fact that nearly every theater in the city also has wire connections for service with the Toronto Hydro-Electric Corporation which is a municipally-operated concern.

Two Hundred Long Distance Calls.

A very unique advertising feature for the Ontario Mutual branch with headquarters at Toronto, has been arranged by Manager Jack Harris. He has contracted with the Bell Telephone Company for two hundred long distance calls and he purposes having a personal conversation over the wire with that many moving picture theater exhibitors throughout the Province. The calls will be limited to fifteen minutes each and twenty calls will be made each day.

Toronto Theater Changes.

Mr. S. Fine, formerly with the Mutual Exchange at Toronto, has been made manager of the New York and Royal theaters in Eglinton, a Toronto suburb. These houses are owned by Mr. R. McClelland.

Ontario's New Theater Law

Makes Patriotic Shows Legal on Sabbath—No Restriction on Kind of Pictures Shown—Nothing Said About Terminating Privilege—Vaudeville in Picture Theaters—New License Schedule.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A NUMBER of important regulations embodied in "The theaters and Cinematographs Act" which govern the operation of moving picture theaters in Ontario have been straightened out through changes which were announced by the Provincial Government on Thursday, January 12.

Sunday Shows Made Legal.

A startling innovation is the legalizing of Sunday shows, but in every instance these must be for patriotic purposes only. The nature of the films to be exhibited at a Sunday performance is not restricted in the slightest, however. Nothing is said, either, as to the necessity for patriotic shows after the termination of the present war.

Vaudeville With Film Shows.

Another important amendment restricts the amount of vaudeville which may be included as a part of the regular program at a moving picture theater. Under the old regulations, a theater manager was permitted to stage one vaudeville act and some, it is declared, took advantage of the general wording of the clause by putting on an "act" which occupied periods up to fifty minutes and which required changes of scenery and relays of principals. Under the re-worded clause, no vaudeville act in a moving picture theater can exceed fifteen minutes and the number of people in the act allowed is limited to a team of two. No change of scenery is permissible.

Censors May Recall Films.

Power is given to the Board of Censors to recall any film which they have approved and the recall can be made at any time and for any reason. An exception is made in the case of films which have been examined and passed by the Theatrical Board of Appeal, whose decision with regard to any reels is to be considered final and binding upon all parties. This rule has been adopted, undoubtedly, through the mix-up in connection with the authorizing of the showing of the Johnson-Willard fight pictures in Ontario last fall. These pictures were never exhibited because the films were "recalled." A question as to the legality of this move was made at the time.

New License Schedule.

A change in the schedule of license fees which greatly benefits the moving picture theater proprietors in small centers has been made. Under the former regulations the cost of a theater license in a town of 10,000 population or less was $50 per year. The new schedule is as follows: For theaters in municipalities of 8,000 to 10,000 population an annual fee of $50 is required; 6,000 to 8,000 population, the fee is $40; from 4,000 to 6,000 population, $36; from 2,000 to 4,000 population, $20, and the theater fee in a place having less than 2,000 people is only $10 per year.

Electric Inspection.

The electric inspection department of the Provincial Hydro-Electric Commission is given absolute control over inspection of electrical appliances and wiring before and after building construction.

Moving picture men of Ontario, in general, consider these changes to be just and reasonable in practically every respect.

NEW WORLD FILM MANAGER.

Another announcement contains the information that W. A. Campbell is to become the new Toronto manager of the World Film and Mr. Wright has left to assume control of the World business in the Canadian West.

TORONTO'S FILM BALL.

Academy Hall, Toronto, was crowded on Friday night, January 21, for the occasion of the Moving Picture Protective Association's ball, which was generously supported by many of Toronto's moving picture theater managers. It was the first event of its kind in Toronto.

STARFILMS OPENS NEW OFFICES.

Starfilms, Ltd., controlling Metro releases in Canada and formerly trading under the name of Metro Features, Ltd., have opened fine new headquarters for Canada at 7 Phillips Square, Montreal. The entire building is occupied by the company and the fittings throughout are elaborate as well as practical. One convenience is a private projection theater with a seating capacity of thirty-five. Outside a fifty-foot electric sign flashes the names of the latest release.

S. LOTZ TO MANAGE ONTARIO GENERAL FILM.

All the branch managers of the General Film Company in Canada met in Montreal recently for an important conference when a number of changes in the Canadian personnel were made. Among those who attended were Messrs. H. Law and W. Fenton, of Toronto. As a result of this conference Mr. Law continues as Toronto manager of the General Film Company, but Mr. Fenton relinquishes his position as manager of the Ontario district and is succeeded by Mr. S. Lotz, formerly Montreal manager of the Mutual, it is understood.

HAVE CLUB HEADQUARTERS.

The moving Picture Protective Association of Toronto decided recently to open office and club headquarters on the second floor of the Mary Pickford theater building, Queen street and Spadina avenue. The President of this association is Mr. W. J. Liscombe; the secretary, W. Westcott and the treasurer, Mr. Appleton. The association formerly held its meetings in Occident Hall, Queen and Bathurst streets. Advance deposits for light 8pt caps and lc

Films on Steamboats

Maine Exchange Men Worried by Notice That the Federal Regulation Against Carrying Films on Steamboats Will Be Enforced—No Danger in Film Packages As Now Shipped—Will Cut Off Many Places.

By John P. Flannagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BANGOR, ME.—Maine exchanges are considerably exercised over the Federal regulation which went into effect last June and is now to be enforced, forbidding the shipment of moving picture films on steamboats. Up to the present time, this regulation has not been carried out by the powers that be, but the exchange men were notified last week that it is going to be carried out at once. Shipments by water is the chief reliance along the Maine coast and many inhabitants live on islands.

The exchange men assert that films, as they are now packed for shipment, are not dangerous by any means. They are packed in two containers, one within the other, and each fireproof. It is quite different from the old days when films were carelessly shipped with only a paper wrapper.

If the law is enforced, or if it cannot be modified, residents of the islands along the coast are going to be deprived of much amusement. Motorboats may be called to their assistance, it is true, but they are not dependable in rough weather and arrangements could hardly be made by the express companies for the use of small craft to deliver films. In some cases, stage lines may be used, especially for places not wholly isolated by water.

Places along the coast that will be affected by the law are Bar Harbor, Boothbay Harbor, Brooklin, Castine, Dark Harbor, Lubec, North Deer Isle, Seal Harbor, Sedgwick, Southwest Harbor, Sorrento, Southport, Squirrel Island and Sullivan, also inland points such as Kineo and Naples.

[Many of these coast towns are places of importance even in winter. Many more important towns might be named to which the direct and natural express and freight routes are by water. The regulation is another instance of half cocked official action. Legislators who don't like their work well enough to keep awake on it are a deadly nuisance to the people who honor them with positions of responsibility and pay them to be on the job. Well packed film is no more dangerous than a couple of barrels of kerosene on a ship.]

EXHIBITORS HONORED BY ELKS.

Moe Marks and Allen Newhall Presented with Life Membership.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LYNN, MASS.—Moe Marks, proprietor of the Strand theater at Lynn, and his manager, Allen Newhall, were presented with life memberships in the Lynn lodge of Elks during the Elks' Night celebration at the theater on Wednesday, January 19. The affair was one of the most brilliant of its kind ever staged in Lynn and the two guests of honor were taken completely by surprise.

Members of the Lynn lodge of Elks bought 1,400 seats in the house on the night of the presentation and what few seats were left went to those of the public who discovered that something unusual was going to take place. A special show was put on in addition to the regular attraction and the house was packed. Prominent Elks from all parts of Massachusetts and New England were guests in box parties or attended on invitations extended by members of the Lynn lodge.

Manager Newhall and Miss Mary Perrault sang a song as a part of the special performance and they had just finished when Mr. S. Walter McDonough, past exalted ruler of the Lynn lodge of Elks, stepped upon the stage and walked toward Mr. Newhall. The latter, not knowing what was going to take place, stood motionless and awaited developments. Mr. Marks was called to the stage and in the presence of both men, Past Exalted Ruler McDonough made a speech in which he praised both men for what they had done for the lodge and for the city of Lynn, for the willingness they had always exhibited in offering the use of the theater for charitable purposes and for their all round good fellowship.

When Mr. McDonough concluded those in the audience burst into a riot of applause which lasted several minutes. Both Mr. Marks and Mr. Newhall responded briefly. They were too surprised to make an extended speech, but what they said filled the bill and when they were through they were greeted by more applause. Mr. Theodore Cuthbert, another member of the lodge, was presented with an Elk's tooth and a gold chain. It was the second time in the history of the Lynn lodge of Elks that the lodge as a body had ever presented a life membership to one of its members. After the show Mr. Marks and Mr. Newhall were given a reception at the Elks' Club, which was largely attended.

OPENING OF LOEW'S ORPHEUM.

Mayor Curley of Boston Attends—Interesting Details.

Mayor James M. Curley and a host of other notables attended the opening of Marcus Loew's new $2,000,000 Orpheum theater on Thursday evening, Jan. 20. The house was sold out a week in advance and thousands of persons who applied for admission at the opening performance were turned away.

The new house stands on the site of the old Orpheum and is a triumph in moving picture auditoriums. It has a seating capacity of 3,200, the lower floor seating 1,750, the balconies 1,250, and 200 seats in the boxes. The theater is also equipped with a library and reading room.

The new Orpheum theater is a combined picture and vaudeville house and exceptional beauty has been obtained in the decorating of the interior. Ivory and white combined with pastel shades of rose and blue make up the color scheme. The decorations are of an Adam period, which have been carried out under the supervision of artists from Paris.

Solid columns of white Alaskan marble divide the mirrored walls of the Washington street entrance, which are further relieved by the sparing use of gilt and blue on the ceiling. Marble valued at $78,000 has been used in the decoration of the theater, which is under the direction of Manager Victor Morris and his staff of assistants.

The rotunda and mezzanine promenade in the rear of the first balcony is copied from that of the Paris opera house. Gold boxes filled with vines and flowers surround the rotunda, and a marble fountain splashes in the rear. A small rest room opens off the promenade.

The proscenium is entirely of glass, set in small golded panes, behind which thousands of lights twinkle. The hangings are of rose damask silk, which blend with the general color scheme. The mural decorations suggest spring with fresh green tints in grass and trees with blue sky and sunlight in every scene.

The mechanical part of the theater has been designed and elaborated in keeping with the beauty of the decorations. One of the largest operating booths has been installed for the weekly motion picture features. The old Orpheum theater was always a favorite with Bostonians and Manager Morris predicts that the new house will be even more popular.

V-L-S-E EMPLOYEES PLEASED.

The second annual profit-sharing period of the "Big Four" recently closed and all the employees of the Boston office received their checks last week. The checks this year are about the same in amounts as they were last year and the Boston crew are very much pleased. George Balsdon, New England manager of the V-L-S-E, says the new Hearst-Vitagraph news weekly is going big in this territory. He has taken on forty-eight new accounts since the first of the year and says that the Emory Brothers, at Providence, R. I., have just closed a contract to take the entire output of the V-L-S-E for a whole year.

James Moore Goes to Portland.

Manager James Moore, who formerly directed the affairs of the Modern theater at Providence, R. I., will hereafter manage Keith's, at Portland, Me., according to reports received in Boston last week. Mr Moore is well known in New England and his many friends wish him success in his new berth.

J. SNELLENBERG TAKES CHARGE OF CRITERION THEATER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

J. Snellenberg, proprietor of the Virginia theater, Atlantic City, N. J., has recently assumed charge of the Criterion, at that place, and has added considerable new equipment to the former supply. He was a recent visitor to Philadelphia and while here paid his respects to the Calehuff Supply company, 1301 Race street, and purchased several Simplex projecting machines before leaving. Mr. Snellenberg is a live wire and is an experienced exhibitor.

CHAS. SEGALL IN WASHINGTON.

Charles Segall, president of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League, headquarters 1339 Vine street, has been in Washington, D. C., attending the censorship hearings. His brother exhibitors in Philadelphia are anxiously awaiting his return in order to hear the full datails of the proceedings in the Capitol City.

Bad Storm Cuts Off Light Service.

During a recent storm in Philadelphia moving picture theaters in the vicinity of 52d and Market streets suffered considerable loss on account of the failure of the electric lighting system, which was totally disabled from 7 o'clock in the evening until 10 o'clock. The Nixon theater was the only house to show, this on account of having their own power plant. The Locust, the Fifty-second, the Grand and the Belmont theaters were all forced to remain closed and a large loss was suffered accordingly.

Ostrowsky, treasurer; Leo Hager, financial secretary; Max J. Affachiner, recording secretary; Henry de Verneuil, Sr., business agent; H. Potter, sergeant-at-arms. The trustees chosen are M. Affincher, A. A. Geddis, Leo McGuire. The delegates to the central council are M. Affachiner, Leo Hager and DeWitt Martin.

New Rochester House Rumored.

Rumors have been current in Rochester, N. Y., that an option has been secured on the Second Baptist Church, at North and Franklin Streets, that city, by men interested in the erection of a moving picture theater. Further details have not been given out.

Ticonderoga Theater Burns.

Dolbeck's Union Opera house in Ticonderoga was recently destroyed by fire. The loss on this and adjoining buildings totaled $40,000.

Against Federal Censorship.

The Buffalo Enquirer has printed interviews opposing the appointment of the national board of censors to pass on moving pictures. Among those interviewed were G. H. Christoffers, manager of the local Mutual Film, James K. Morgan, manager of the Pathe exchange, and George H. Verbeck of the Queen City exchange.

Dennis Shay Dies.

Dennis Shay, 70 years old, who for several years was employed at the Hippodrome theater, Oswego, N. Y., is dead.

Western New York Briefs.

In Ogdensburg, N. Y., Fred W. Gilroy, proprietor of the Star theater, has leased the Hippodrome theater to John J. Livingston, who has opened the house with moving pictures and vaudeville.

It is proposed to have the Crescent moving picture theater in North Aurora Street, Ithaca, completed by next September.

The Hudson theater in Schenectady has been sold to Charles F. Veeder for $13,714, to satisfy a mortgage.

An attempt was recently made to break into the safe in the office of Keith's moving picture theater, 261 Main street, Buffalo, but the intruder obtained no booty.

"BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" A HIT IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Strand theater is more or less noted for its unique entertainments and pleasing features, but Tom Moore somewhat outdid himself during the showing of "The Battle Cry of Peace," when he engaged Captain "Jack" Crawford to appear on the stage and give lectures on "preparedness." Captain Jack is a great hit. He was present at the premier of this film at the Vitagraph theater in New York.

At the right of the stage is a large tent in front of which there is what appears to be a campfire. The whole auditorium is draped with American flags. Another feature is the costumes worn by the attaches of the theater. Each of the eight girl ushers is dressed in a war nurse's uniform, while the male members of the force are dressed in army and navy uniforms in a most striking manner.

This production has been decidedly popular in Washington. So much so that Mr. Moore has extended his bookings so as to cover a full two weeks. Although Washington has a white population of only 245,000, it is a hard matter to get a seat in the Strand at this time.

The Lafayette Changes Hands.

The Lafayette theater, formerly operated by J. and W. S. Wickham, on E street, near Thirteenth street, Northwest, was closed recently.

F. C. Jackson, who recently purchased the Alhambra theater, at Seventh and F streets, Northwest, has taken over the active management of that house. The theater was formerly managed by Billie Airie, who is now at the Hippodrome theater, on New York avenue.

Books Four Houses in One Week.

Manager Frank B. Spurrier, of the V-L-S-E, is very much elated at having been successful in placing the productions of those companies in four of the large downtown theaters at the same time last week. He had booked the Cosmos, Garden, Strand and Crandall's and at each the attendance was very satisfactory.

Honest Business Bills

House Committee on District of Columbia Has Three Interesting Bills—A Bad Check Bill With a Prison Penalty—A Fake Auction Bill—A Fraudulent Advertising Bill—These Measures May Help Business.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—While Washington has had about all the contemplated legislation it desires for some time to come, and has not yet gotten over the strenuous hearings on the censorship bill, the members of the film industry here are very much interested in three bills which are soon to be introduced by Chairman Ben Johnson of the house committee on the District of Columbia. These bills are to curb the issuance of "bad checks," to eliminate "fraudulent advertising" and to eliminate "fake auctions." The last of these are not of such great interest, although the exhibitors along Ninth street would be very glad to have all auction sales prohibited along that thoroughfare. There is at this time one where free vaudeville shows are given to attract passers-by, and when the people get inside they remain there instead of visiting the theaters.

The Retail Merchants' Association is back of all of these measures. The "bad check" law which they favor would provide for the imprisonment of any person who passes a bad check within the District of Columbia, providing that payment on the check is not made good within five days after notice to the maker of the check. The exchangemen and others have had some little experience of late with checks which come back from the bank marked "insufficient funds," and it is believed that such a law would prove to be a deterrent to the man who unconsciously or otherwise overdraws his account and through carelessness perhaps fails to make good within the specified time.

The exhibitors are in favor of the fraudulent advertising bill, as it would tend to curb much in the way of extravagant statements which, although not so intended in many instances, work to the detriment of those who stick to the short and narrow path of truth. "The Greatest Show on Earth" would soon pass into oblivion unless such be a positive fact, and in the summer time "The Coolest Theater in Town" would have to keep up to the desired reputation.

In commenting upon these measures Harry M. Crandall, president of the local league of exhibitors, stated that he favored any sort of legislation that would improve conditions in this city. If there are men that sidestep their bills they should be made to pay for, for if they do not others in the same line of business are made to suffer and probably pay through increased charges the money that occurs as a loss to the seller, or in the case of the film business, to the exchanges. He also favored the fake advertising law, saying that it would place all exhibitors on a more equal footing without working a hardship on any.

Joseph Morgan, of the Princess theater, on H street, Northeast, proclaimed his advocacy of the fraudulent advertising law in no uncertain terms and pointed out a number of instances where matters were misrepresented in advertising, declaring that with such a law in force the sponsors of such advertising would be much more careful in their assertions than they have been. He stated that he hoped that the bill would be introduced and enacted at an early date.

EXPRESS COMPANY'S RULE 9.

Of Special Interest to Film Shippers by Southern Express Company.

In a letter addressed to the National Exchangemen's Association General Agent G. H. Killian, of the Adams Express company, informs the members of that organization of the adoption by the Southern Express company of a new rule regarding the transportation of motion picture films over the lines of that company which reads as follows:

"9. Moving Picture Films.

"Shipments from moving picture film exchanges generally bear printed instructions the shippers desire observed if the films are refused, or for any reason prompt delivery cannot be made.

"Every package of moving picture films has a schedule itinerary which, if interrupted, has a serious effect not only on the revenue which the film is expected to bring to the film exchange, but to the persons who have advertised it for display.

"If a package of films is refused or, for any other reason cannot be delivered the day of its arrival, it must be carefully examined and shipper's printed instructions, if any, must be complied with.

"If telegraphic advice of non-delivery is desired the message must be sent charges collect."

The non-compliance with instructions contained on the film cases by receiving agents of the express companies has caused a great deal of inconvenience to both exchange managers and exhibitors. The matter was taken up with the express companies in the hope that something could be done to bring about a remedy.

MADE EMPTY PLACE VALUABLE.

J. and W. S. Wickham, the brothers who operate the Dixie theater, at Eighth and H streets, Northeast, recently arrived at a very novel yet profitable way of utilizing a bit of waste space. The side wall on Eighth street as originally constructed extended outward for a distance of eight feet. This was blank and of absolutely no use except for retaining wall purposes and perhaps to shelter patrons at the entrance from winds and storms. Beyond this for some little distance to the street line is a grass plot. While the wall did not exactly constitute an eyesore, yet there was little or no need for it, so the brothers got together on a scheme to tear it out and build in its stead a sort of display window.

A glass box about eight feet square has been built with a base of marble and within it has been placed a motor-driven popcorn and peanut roasting machine. A display case has also been installed and shelves have been put in for the display of candies, tobacco, cigars and cigarettes. In addition to all of these things there is ample space for the showing of popular magazines, and the Moving Picture World is given a place of prominence. A door has been built in and arrangement has been made whereby a portion of the side can be opened in the summer season. There is a cash register and the store is presided over by a very attractive young lady.

In what was heretofore waste space a thriving business is now being carrier on. The stock consists of popularly known brands. In addition to adding to the attractiveness of the theater, it constitutes a convenience to patrons.

BOWLING DOWN DUCKPINS.

Tom Moore has become a duckpin fan and weekly he and his friends spend many pleasant hours on the duckpin alleys. He has organized what he is pleased to call the "Movie Duckpin League," and with Mrs. L. Trudy and C. Wylie represents the Garden theater, while L. Trudy, Mrs. Tom Moore and C. Plunkett hold up the honors for the Plaza theater. Garden beat Plaza to a standstill in last week's contest.

New Club Committees

Pittsburgh Screen Club Appoints Three New Committees—Arrangements for Coming Ball Promise a Brilliant Affair—Actors' Fund to Get Ten Per Cent. of Proceeds—Herrington Made Honorary Member of Club.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Pittsburgh Screen Club Ball, which is to be held Feb. 14, will be a most successful affair if enthusiasm counts for anything.

Co-operation on the part of manufacturers, who promise to send their stars, has been assured, and arrangements are being made to make the forthcoming event one of the most elaborate and comprehensive demonstrations of the importance of moving pictures it has been her lot to witness. It is expected that the capacity of 6,000 persons of the Motor Square Garden will be taxed to the limit.

A special meeting of the Screen Club was held Sunday afternoon, Jan. 16, in its headquarters, 406 Cameraphone building. At this meeting committees were appointed and much other preliminary work was done in connection with the forthcoming entertainment. It was decided to donate 10 per cent. of the net profits to the Actors' Fund of America. The following committees were appointed:

On Concessions—M. Feitler, M. J. C. Kornblum, C. W. Eckhardt, Chas. Seltzer, David Simon and Mr. Ehrlich, manager of the General Film company.

Entertainment—Chas. Seltzer, G. E. Ainsworth, C. W. Eckhardt, A. W. Cross and John McAleer.

Reception—P. Antonoplos, I. Aronson, H. Goldberg, H. C. Simeral, Louis Sitnek, M. Feitler, John Smith, J. G. Long, W. A. Kay, H. V. Grelle, M. Teplitz, R. Solz.

Mr. Herring, official organizer, reported that he had received thirty applications for membership since the last meeting.

Mr. Patterson presented a proposition to assist in getting out the official program and souvenir of the entertainment, also a plan to handle life membership for the club and to increase the sale of tickets for the ball. His proposition was accepted on motion of Mr. Kornblum, seconded by Mr. Long.

On motion by Mr. Kornblum, seconded by Mr. Smith, the photoplay editors of the various Pittsburgh papers were elected honorary members of the Screen Club.

On motion of Al. W. Cross, seconded by Mr. Aronson, the club voted unanimously to elect Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, an honorary member of the Pittsburgh Screen Club.

TROUBLE IN DUPLICATE TITLES.

Exchanges Lose on Films When Censors Ban Others With Same Name.

The Pennsylvania Board of Censors last week issued a circular designating a list of subjects which had been rejected since the board was formed and in this list are included the titles of many which were approved. It appears that there are many duplicate names in this state and several owners of pictures which have been approved by the board have suffered accordingly.

"The Italian Austrian War" and "Shackled Souls," owned by the Liberty Film Renting company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., have both been approved by the censors, and can be used by exhibitors, in spite of the fact that these titles appear in the list of condemned subjects. Mr. Silverman, the manager, will guarantee protection to any exhibitor running the above subjects, providing, of course, that they exhibit on their screen the state seal thereon, as required by law.

"The Mixup" and the "Kreutzer Sonata," handled by the Specialty Film company, of Pittsburgh, are also placed in the same predicament. Mr. Teplitz, the manager, states that he has written the board of censors for a letter showing that the two questions have been passed by the board and that the pictures of similar names, when presented by other companies, had been rejected.

M. BROWARSKY HAS ANOTHER PICTURE THEATER.

M. Browarsky, manager of the Rex, in East Liberty, and the Victoria, in Center avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., will add another theater to his chain in the early summer. The house is now in course of erection at Forbes and Murray avenues, by E. M. Diebold. It will be a $30,000 proposition, with a capacity of 400. A policy of high-class pictures with a daily admission of 10 cents will be inaugurated and special attention will be paid to music, the intention being to install a high-grade organ.

A. H. McClelland Heads Exchange.

Alfred H. McClelland, a well-known Pittsburgh film man, is now manager of the New Film Corporation, succeeding Leo F. Levison. Mr. McClelland is well known and popular among the exhibitors of western Pennsylvania and should make a success of the new firm.

Interesting Business Notes.

The Liberty Film Renting company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has received another consignment of twenty single-reel Keystone comedies from abroad. These are different from anything they have heretofore had in stock and they are all accompanied with paper.

Charles F. Miller, manager of the Blue Bird Photoplays, Pittsburgh, Pa., has issued a comprehensive little booklet announcing the Blue Bird feature program. The book consists of 8 pages and cover and presents in compact form the policy of the new firm, the first four releases and a hint as to the future releases of the company.

A. A. Weiland, of the Weiland Film company, Pittsburgh, Pa., has just returned from the East, where he made arrangements for the handling of a lot of exceptionally high-class feature productions in this territory. These include well-known subjects in five and six reels, played by very prominent stars.

The report has been circulated that F. J. Dion, of Franklin, Pa., will tear down his Orpheum theater at that place in the spring and build a 1,000 seat up-to-date picture theater.

John Hoffman, for seven years treasurer of the Grand Opera House in Pittsburgh, Pa., has joined the forces of the Hudson Feature Film company as a road man. He started on his new line of work last week.

GOOD BUSINESS AT CRESCENT.

New Orleans House Recently Converted to Films Entertains Big Audiences.

(By George Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.)

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Crescent K. and E. house recently converted to the pictures entered its second week January 13 with increasing popularity, indicating permanent success for the venture. The Crescent seats nineteen hundred people and at night the house has been uniformly well filled. At the matinees the crowds, except on Saturdays and Sundays, have not been so large, but, according to the management, profitable.

A great part of this popularity is credited to the excellent balance of the bill. In the opinion both of picture men and average film fans the Crescent management has not only put on the highest class productions in a first class manner, but has achieved a greater degree of balance than has any picture house in the Crescent City before.

The setting of the stage is proving a novelty, and a pleasing one to New Orleans. The lighting effects, disposition of the orchestra, etc., similar to that at the Strand in New York, have proven especially acceptable. W. F. Bosner, with a record of successful experience elsewhere, particularly in New York, is in charge.

The prices, 10, 15 and 25 cents, have not proven a deterrent to the crowds as was expected by some of the local picture men. Twenty-five cents has been charged on only a few occasions in New Orleans before. The management is advertising liberally.

The present program, the third offered at the Crescent, is typical of what may be expected, Mr. Bosner said. The show begins with two selections by the ten-piece orchestra, first the National Anthem and then "Poet and Peasant." Follows an educational, "Animal Movements Analyzed," then a travel picture. Then comes a soprano solo and a Nestor comedy. Then the feature, Mary Pickford in "The Foundling."

The matinee performances open at 2 and 4 o'clock, the evening performances at 7 and 9.

The following pictures with the dates on which they will be shown have been announced by the management: Marguerite Clark in "Mice and Men," Cleo Ridgley and Wallace Reid in "The Golden Chance," Blanche Sweet in "The Rag-Muffin," John Barrymore in "Nearly a King," Hazel Dawn in "My Lady Incog," Pauline Frederick in "The Spider," and Dustin Farnum in "The Call of the Cumberlands." This bills the house through February 5,

The Greenwall Becomes Triangle.

The Greenwall, some time legitimate house, but for the last several years given over to burlesque and cheap vaudeville, has been announced as the Triangle theater, to show first run of the Triangle pictures in New Orleans.

The Columbia Amusement Company, as told previously in the world, has launched the second big house in New Orleans. Announcement of which one of the old theatres would be used for the purpose was withheld for some days, though it was expected that this would be the house selected.

The pictures, it is believed, will change the luck of the house and bring it back to its old time good name.

It is one block off Canal and near the business center, but toward the bright light section, and its neighborhood is not above reproach.

The house is being refurnished and remodelled throughout and will, it is stated, be operated on the most modern plan. W. S. Hart and House Peters are to open the house January 16, with "Between Men."

V-L-S-E OPENS NEW ORLEANS OFFICE.

V-L-S-E has opened a New Orleans office at 316 St. Charles Street, R. King Evans, manager. The present office, it was announced, is only temporary. The firm will move as soon as a location with the necessary vault can be secured. New Orleans has been served from Dallas previously, but it was decided that New Orleans more central position made it more available for serving this territory.

BLUE BIRD'S LOCAL NEST.

The Blue Bird Photoplays, Inc., has opened a New Orleans office at 912 Gravier street, Maurice F. Barr, formerly local manager for the World Film, in charge. Sarah Bernhardt in "Jeanne Dore" will be the first release under Mr. Barr's management, it was announced. This picture will be seen on Canal street January 31.

Helen Ware in "The Secret Love," Ida Schnall in "Undine," the Smalleys in "The Devils' Brew," and Marie Walcamp in "The Flirt" will follow.

Start New Film Company.

The Southern Film Corporation, organized under the laws of Mississippi for the purpose of manufacturing and selling motion pictures, has begun business, headquarters at Biloxi. The corporation is the successor of the Dixie Film Company, which was organized a year ago, and which was unsuccessful. A number of officers of the former company will be connected with the new concern. D. W. McKinney, of Chicago, will be directing manager of the new concern, which will have a capital stock of $100,000 and offices and studios in Biloxi.

Visited Film Row.

E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, of Shreveport, La.; William Oldknow, of Atlanta, president of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, and C. A. Meade, manager of the V-L-S-E in Dallas, were prominent visitors in exchange row this week.

Gulf State Notes.

W. A. Pons has been named temporary manager of the local Fox office to succeed S. T. Stephens, who has become manager for Mutual. A permanent manager will be announced within a short time, it was stated.

Karl A. Bugbee, Metro manager, has announced that first, second and third run of Metro pictures has been contracted for by Josiah Pearce and Sons. The pictures will be shown in the Pearce houses, several of them in Canal street. Mr. Bugbee has recently returned from a swing through the Southern territory and reports himself enthusiastic.

The Nola Film Company, formerly the Coquilla Film Company, left last week for Gadsden, Ala., to make waterfall and mountain scenes. The picture is almost completed, most of the scenes having been made at its studios here.

"The Birth of A Nation," Griffith, repeated in Birmingham, Ala., its great record of popularity established in other Southern cities. It played past schedule. In Atlanta, Ga., it was to have spent one week, it remained three. In Richmond, Va., it also stayed longer by request. The picture ran for twelve performances in Birmingham, and according to advices from that city, it has created the greatest furor to date.

VIRGINIA NEWS LETTER.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of M. P. W.

Buys Grand at Salem.

SALEM, VIRGINIA.—Harry Webber, proprietor of the Grand theater, in Salem, Va., has recently sold out his interests in that house to C. E. Crockett and is now looking for a good location in a larger city in Virginia where he can exercise his wide awake and ambitious ideas to better advantage. Mr. Crockett will continue the operation of the Grand under the same policy as has heretofore prevailed with respect to service, etc.

Wells Take Another House.

The Wells' interests in Richmond, now controlling the Lyric, Isis, Bijou and Colonial theaters and the Academy of Music in that place, have taken over the Superior theater, located at 211 Sixth street, formerly operated by Mr. Turner. The new management will change the name of this latest acquisition and will also install a feature program with an admission charge of ten cents.

Norfolk Theater Change.

The coming of the new year saw the closing of the Photoshow which, for the past seven years, has been located on Main street, in Norfolk. This place is to be remodeled into a five and ten cent store. Markell and Johnson, former operators of the Photoshow, have taken over the management of the Wonderland, located on Granby street, which was formerly owned and operated by L. S. King.

Business Good Near Hopewell.

The continued activities at the Dupont Powder Works in Hopewell have had the effect of booming business both in the place and in Petersburg which is but a few miles away. It is said that the latter city is soon to have three new theaters for negotiations are known to be under way for suitable locations therefor. It is rumored that John A. Korman, of Washington, D. C., secretary and treasurer of the International Amusement Company, and conencted with enterprises in his home city, has leased a storeroom on North Sycamore street, opposite the Chesterfield Hotel, which he will have turned into a modern up-to-date theater. It is expected that it will be possible to seat about 350 people in this house as projected.

The Henry Pannill Company which was recently incorporated in Norfolk for the manufacture of motion picture projection screens reports that it is extremely busy at this time filling orders for a number of theaters in this section.

F. C. CARROLL SENTENCED.

LEXINGTON, N. C.—A couple who styled themselves Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Carroll, who left here about a year ago after going broke while running a picture show have submitted to a charge of grand larceny in Washington, D. C. Carroll gets 18 months in Levenworth and Mrs. Carroll will serve a like term in the Federal prison in Baltimore. Officers have been on their trail for a year or more and it is understood that they have been charged with stealing several moving picture films.

It is also reported that they are wanted in Clayton, N. C., and in several other places on charges of several kinds of fraud. Local attorneys have judgments aggregating several thousand dollars. Carroll is said to be originally from Lenoir, and his real name is alleged to be Phillips. During 1913 he operated the Art theater at East Radford, Va., under the name of F. K. Phillips.

To Educate Ohio Patrons

Cleveland Club Women Have Scheme to Boost Better Films—May Ask League to Lend Theaters for One Night a Week in Different Parts of the City—They Will Choose Programs, Managers Will Get All the Profits.

By Hurbert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, O.—Club women of this city are about to embark in the motion picture business. They propose to operate a motion picture theater in a different section of the city one night a week for eight weeks in furtherance of what they characterize as the "better film" movement.

The civics committee of the Federation of Woman's Clubs, representing nearly half a hundred organizations, submitted their proposal to the executive board of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at a meeting Friday, Jan. 21. The club women ask the exhibitors to give them the use of a different theater once a week for an eight-week period, they to select and pay for the films shown, the house owner to furnish the theater, lights and operator. The owner of the theater used is to keep the gross receipts of the day.

Members of the civics committee, of which Miss Bertle Lyttle is chairman, declare they hope to show the exhibitors that the so-called educational films can be made more profitable than others and to educate the public up to a better standard of pictures.

According to Miss Lyttle the Federation of Woman's Clubs will take the matter up at its bi-monthly session on Wednesday, when it is hoped to draft a definite program for the entire eight-week period to submit to the exhibitors. The latter will then be asked to designate the houses the club women will be permitted to use. Miss Lyttle admits that the organization she represents is depending largely on newspaper publicity to make the experiment a success.

BENJAMIN J. SAWYER ILL.

Benjamin J. Sawyer, attorney and president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has been confined to his home for a fortnight by snow blindness. He had been in poor health from overwork and his eyes were seriously affected from sun glare after a heavy snow fall two weeks ago. He is expected to be back in his office in a few days.

SPECIAL SHOWS IN SUBURB.

Mrs. W. C. Moore, of Lakewood, a Cleveland suburb, has started a movement for special Saturday morning children's programs in picture theaters. Jack Greenbaum, manager of the Alhambra theater, has instituted children's matinees Saturday afternoon with films such as "Rumpelstiltskin," or "Robin Hood," combined with comedies and educational features.

"The reason we do not continue these fairy tale pictures for the children," says Manager Greenbaum, "is because we cannot get them. The supply does not appear to equal the demand."

Reserve Company Begins.

The Reserve Photo Play company has commenced the making of motion pictures in its studio at 717 Superior avenue. It will produce comedies until spring, when a location in Rocky River, a western suburb, probably will be chosen for permanent work.

Feature Hits.

The Triangle film "The Missing Link" was the feature the first four days of this week at the Metropolitan theater. "The Beckoning Flame" was featured during the remainder of the week.

The Fox drama, "The Fourth Estate," has been attracting good audiences to the Standard theater this week.

The pictures "Germany on the Firing Line," claimed to be the official German war pictures taken under the direction of the Kaiser, were shown last week at the Colonial theater under the auspices of the Cleveland News. By reason of the cosmopolitan character of Cleveland's population unusual interest is being displayed in the pictures and the theater was crowded at every exhibition.

The Reel theater has announced that it will show Paramount travel pictures every Monday and Tuesday as added features of the regular bill. A special appeal is being made to school children.

A private exhibition of three features of the new Blue Bird service, soon to be released, was given before the films were sent to the state censors. The exhibition was at the Alhambra theater.

Three new photoplays are "Undine," a picture similar to Annette Kellerman's "Neptune's Daughter;" an English mining story, "That Lass o' Lowries," and "Secret Love," starring Helen Ware.

While Wilton Lackaye is appearing in person this week at the Hippodrome he is also being seen in the photoplay "Trilby," at the Cleveland theater.

Grow Warm Over Zoo

In Cincinnati, a Difference of Opinion Over Disposition of the Zoo Develops—Two Local Film Companies Want It—Andreas Burkhardt Patriotically Resists Commercialization of the City's Exhibit of Animals.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, O.—The offer of the Highland Film Corporation to purchase the Cincinnati Zoo, as reported in these columns last week, was in itself a sufficiently interesting matter to both the general public and the film world in these parts; but the Zoo question, in connection with the possible use of the famous institution by a producing moving picture company, has since developed into a rather remarkable three-cornered fight, in which not only the Highland Film Corporation, but the Veritas Photoplay Company, another Cincinnati concern, and the Zoo Commission appointed to consider ways and means of preserving the Zoo in its present form, are all involved.

The Highland Company and the Cincinnati Traction Company, which controls the Zoo, were reported to be approaching an agreement regarding the purchase price and other terms, when the Veritas announced that it had been considering a similar plan for some months, and had finally determined to make a bid for the property. Hard upon this followed an announcement by Andreas Burkhardt, president of the Veritas company, who also happens to be a member of the Zoo Commission, that he would resign from the moving picture company if it persisted in its proposed plan to acquire the Zoo, as he was unalterably opposed to any attempt to commercialize the property. Mr. Burkhardt, who is a leading merchant of Cincinnati, stated that when his company, the Veritas, first suggested the plan of taking over the Zoo, several months ago, he fought the proposal as being, in his opinion, inimical to the best interests of the city, and that he will continue to fight any attempt by a moving picture company to acquire the property for business purposes.

However, the directors of the company have announced that they intend to secure the Zoo, if possible, as they believe it can be used to splendid advantage in the production of animal and other pictures. The Zoo Commission, as a body, has tentatively approved the proposed sale of the Zoo to the Highland Film Corporation, with proper safeguard to keep the property in its present condition and accessible to the public. And there, at present, the matter rests, with new developments extremely probable.

OPEN SUNDAY IN CINCINNATI.

Cincinnati exhibitors are not worrying in the least over the recent pronunciamento from a Cleveland judge to the effect that under the still existing blue laws of Ohio, moving picture shows cannot legally be operated on Sunday. Amos Foster, the attorney for the local league, pointed out that the statute in question applies specifically to theatrical performances, and that if it is to be strictly enforced, a strict construction will not permit it to apply to moving picture shows, as they are not theatrical performances. However, as a matter of fact, ordinary theatrical performances are shown regularly on Sunday in every theater in Cincinnati, as well as in other cities of the state, and no suggestion has ever been made that such performances should be stopped. Like censorship, it appears that special measures must be applied to photoplay houses in the matter of Sunday shows, but nothing of this sort is as yet looked for in Cincinnati.

Will Test Air in Theaters.

Chemical and other tests of the air in moving picture houses will be made by the health authorities of Cincinnati, as a measure in the fight against the spread of the grip and other diseases. Few complaints have been received on this score, however, as most of the houses are equipped with modern ventilating systems, which keep the air perfectly pure as well as comfortably warm.

The Lubin theater management is meeting with pronounced success in its exhibition of Triangle and Triangle-Keystone plays, houses being uniformly large during the first week's run of the program. The Family and the Lubin, it is announced, will have a monopoly on the Triangle releases in the downtown district, the Family getting the first run, and no other house save the Lubin having them in the business section thereafter.

The management of the South Side theater, of Ironton, O., started off "The Girl and the Game" by a clever advertising stunt, which had a peculiar appeal. At the first performance all children were admitted for the unusual fee of two potatoes, which were contributed to charity for distribution among the poor. Several bushels of tubers were piled up, and a big crowd of juveniles interested in the serial at the same time.

ATLANTA'S NEW LYRIC TO BE MUTUAL HOUSE.

Manager Wells Intends to Reach High Level in Exhibiting Good Pictures.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA, GA.—As Manager Jake Wells announced Jan. 14, the Lyric theater was thrown open Monday, January 24, with a permanent policy of moving pictures; on the opening night a number of the Mutual Corporation's noted stars, including Marguerite Courtot, were present.

Two new machines, a new screen and unique scenic set have been installed, and the lobby is fashioned into an indoor palm garden.

The Lyric will be known exclusively as the Mutual picture house. The new Mutual franchise (a system of bookings, producing and advertising), has been awarded to it, and here will be shown the first Mutual masterpictures, de luxe edition. The performance lasts an hour and forty-five minutes. The admission is 5 and 10 cents. An eight-piece orchestra furnishes music.

NEW PIEDMONT THEATER.

Pete Mion announced Jan. 15 that the new theater he is erecting at Luckie and Forsyth streets will be named "The Piedmont," and will be opened the first week in March with a select program of vaudeville, drawn from the Marcus Loew circuit.

High class feature pictures will also share the Piedmont program. It will seat 1,200 persons and has been patterned after the most modern New York theaters.

MUSIC AT THE GEORGIAN.

The growth in the demand for music with amusements had led another Atlanta theater to install an up-to-date orchestra. Hank G. Cassidy, the newly appointed manager of the "Georgian" moving picture theater, has announced that an eight-piece orchestra will play at all performances of his theater in the future.

The Georgian organization will compare favorably with that of any other picture theater in the city. It will be under the direction of Whitney Hubner, one of the city's best known musicians, and programs embracing both classical and topical numbers will be rendered daily.

The Georgian is successful with its newly adopted feature-a-day policy. Last week's patronage was greater than that of any previous week in the house's latter day history.

Charity Show at the Alamo.

The woman's patrol, composed largely of members of the Order of Eastern Star, were in charge of Alamo No. 2 theater, Sunday from 10 to 10 o'clock. The proceeds are to go to charity.

R. G. Smith Takes Theater in Eastman.

The Princess theater in Eastman, Ga., which has been dark, opened January 10, under new management. R. G. Smith has taken charge and promises patrons a first class program of moving pictures.

CHATTANOOGA NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Giving Sunday Benefit Shows.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—The moving picture theaters of Chattanooga, Tenn., were again open on Sunday, Jan. 16, when benefit performances were given in the afternoon and evening for the benefit of the Labor Temple Fund. During the past few weeks the theaters have managed to stay open nearly every Sunday by handling benefit plays of some kind. In this way the exhibitors do not violate the so-called Sunday closing laws and manage to obtain a part of the overhead operating expense of the week. The Sunday closing law case is now awaiting trial before the higher courts and it is hoped that a satisfactory decision will be handed down shortly.

Using Much Local Space.

The Chattanooga theaters are among the largest advertisers the local press has at this time, and are using full and half-page advertisements in announcing their bookings. The Lyric theater recently used a full-page spread in announcing "An Alien," and the "Battle Cry of Peace." The Picto theater used a half page in announcing "Camille," and "Tongues of Men." At the Lyric the two big productions divided a week, admission prices being 15 cents for children and 25 cents for adults at both afternoon and night performances.

Advertise Definite Programs.

The Strand and Royal theaters, of Chattanooga, make a practice of publishing the full week's program to be shown on Monday, giving the public choice of nights and plays, instead of merely advertising the plays to be seen in the next day or two. Among the poorer classes of people only a certain number of dimes can be spent each week on pictures, and if the program is advertised in advance they may wait to see their favorites instead of going to some other theater.

IN LOUISVILLE.

Levi Klineline Takes the Gem at Lagrange.

A. W. Vaughan, of Lagrange, Ky., recently sold the Grand theater to Levi Klineline, Jr., who has arranged for better film service and expects to put the house on a paying basis. Arrangements have been made whereby a high class feature will be shown each week.

G. H. Whittemore, of Louisville, recently sold his moving picture theater at 28th and Dumesnil streets, to Charles M. Knott, formerly of Hillsborough, Fla.

The management of the Alamo theater, of Louisville, has changed its policy in booking the serial "The Strange Case of Mary Page," at the playhouse. This is the first time the theater has shown a serial. The story will be run in installments by the Louisville Herald.

BLUE LAW UNCERTAINTY IN LEXINGTON.

At Lexington, Ky., the moving picture men have about decided to pay the $10 fines assessed against them by the jury which tried indictments returned against four of the theaters by a grand jury last summer. It is generally thought that the technical violation of the old blue laws will not be brought up again nor the laws enforced, and that the theaters will be allowed to operate in peace on Sunday. A number of picture houses now operating on Sunday were not open at the time the indictments were returned.

The four theaters fined were the Ada Meade, the Colonial, Orpheum and Gem. The indictments charged the theaters with violating the old Blue Law statutes forbidding the conduct of places of amusement or work on Sunday. It was at first thought that the theater men would appeal the cases and get a state ruling on the matter. However, it is far better to let a sleeping dog alone.

The authorities at Lexington, however, are trying to enforce the Sunday closing ordinance, and recently issued orders to all of the grocers that they must close on Sunday, and fruit stands handling canned goods or groceries on the side have received similar orders.

SMALL PICTURE HOUSE CLOSES.

The past week saw the passing of the second regular moving picture theater of Louisville when the Columbia, formerly the Bijou, went out of existence. The building has been closed for several months under orders of the city building inspector, as the theater failed to provide rear exits, which could not be arranged for. The theater was small, seating only about 200 people. The Bijou shortly followed the Dreamland theater, which was the first of the city, and one of the first in the country to have a regular "moving picture" entrance. This theater at one time was controlled by O. T. Crawford, of St. Louis, who operated a string of theaters in Louisville.

MAYFIELD'S PRINCESS BEGINS.

After numerous delays on account of scarcity of structural iron, etc., the new Princess theater, of Mayfield, Ky., has finally been completed and opened to the public. The opening was held on Jan. 6, and in spite of a downpour of sleet and rain every seat in the house was taken for the opening show, which was held at 7 o'clock in the evening. "Carmen" was the attraction, and delighted the audiences. A high class pipe organ orchestra has been installed to furnish music. The interior is handsomely fitted up with expensive lighting fixtures, mirrors, etc.

W. F. Grau, formerly manager of the Dixie, is running the new playhouse. Others interested in the management are Oscar George and M. J. Wright. The house was built and is owned by W. A. Usher and Edward Gardner.

Mayor for Sunday Shows

Mayor Rupert of Frankfort, Ky., Writes Letter to Councilman Declining to Act in Matter of Closing Sabbath Shows—Takes Up the Question from Standpoint of Reason and Accord With Public Opinion.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FRANKFORT, KY.—Determined to take a stand that will have a tendency to put an end to the frequent controversies over the question of Sunday picture shows in Frankfort, Ky., Mayor Rupert, after a careful observation and inquiry convinced himself that a majority of the residents of the capital favor the Sunday show, and addressed a letter to Councilman C. F. Strassner as leader in the City Council on the fight against Sunday shows, in which he declines to take any action.

The letter to Councilman Strassner follows:

"Dear Sir:

"The agitation relative to the Sunday picture show again has become prominent. Antecedent events in police court and the county court are well known, and without entering into a discussion of past events I will take up this matter from the standpoint of reason, based upon my observation of public opinion.

"I have been waited upon by delegations favoring Sunday picture shows and also have given audience to those opposed. I have endeavored to give the matter earnest consideration and have, after mature deliberation, become convinced that a majority of the people of Frankfort favor the Sunday picture shows.

Why the Mayor Favors Sunday Shows.

"Arguments of many persons favoring the Sunday show urge that the pictures now being exhibited at all of the local theaters are of high class and tending to elevate the morals of the community. If pictures that point a moral and furnish elevating amusement are shown six days a week, why should they be prohibited on Sunday?

"Among the delegations that have visited me in behalf of the open Sunday show were many persons compelled to work throughout the week with only the Sabbath as a period of rest and recreation. Worn out with the days' labors, these persons cannot go out at night to seek their pleasures, but must respond to the demands of nature, and after a short evening in their homes retire that they may be restored for the next day's efforts. It therefore becomes imperative that they find their pursuits of pleasure confined to their only holiday.

Needed by the People.

"The man who works with the pick and shovel, no less than the man who bends over his desk, needs surcease from the daily grind; his physical and mental development demands recreation, else his intellect becomes stunted. Naturally he will spend his leisure in some manner calculated to enhance his mental activities. It may be a religious devotion, a ride with the family or a visit to the picture show.

"And that sounds the keynote. Constant attendance at religious exercises throughout the day, if such were possible, necessarily would become a monotonous grind. And how many of the people of Frankfort—the majority of whom are counted in the middle class—could afford to spend the afternoon or evening driving or riding about on the street cars with their families?

"It follows that if the doors of the picture shows are closed to them they must seek some other form of amusement. The result would be that men gradually would drift away from their homes and find amusement somewhere; somehow more than likely in a place far worse than a picture show.

Blue Laws Are Out of Date.

"The old Blue Laws long since have been abandoned. The people of Frankfort in many instances have registered their objection to closing Sunday picture shows. The law regulating labor on the Sabbath in my opinion was not designed to put a barrier in the way of innocent amusement. The law in Frankfort will be enforced, but with due regard to reason and justice. To enforce the law against Sunday picture shows would be to close up every drug store, soda fountain, livery stable, garage and many other conveniences necessary to the public welfare.

"The Sunday picture show in my opinion is as necessary to a majority of the people of Frankfort as any of these things.

"I trust that in the foregoing I have made myself clear, and I assure you my only interest now and during the remainder of my term of office will be for the interest of the masses.

"Most respectfully,
"JOSEPH RUPERT,
"Mayor City of Frankfort."

Mayor Rupert later expressed the hope that his position had been made so clear that agitation anent the picture shows would cease.

SMITH & NIXON BUILDING TO BE A PICTURE THEATER.

Local Capital Interested in Making a Fine Theater on Fourth Street.

T. J. Morrow, a local real estate man, and a number of local capitalists, are behind a new moving picture theater shortly to be constructed in the old Smith & Nixon building, 516-18 South Fourth street.

According to Mr. Morrow the plans have been completed for an edifice to cost about $100,000, and provide a seating capacity of something over 1,000 people. The building is a large one, substantially built, and the location is one of the best in the city. It was rumored a few months ago that the Keith interests were about to close a deal for the building, but the project did not materialize.

It is a question at this time as to whether or not the city can support another moving picture theater, some of the present houses barely making two ends meet, and it may be a question of the survival of the fittest. Some of the smaller houses will undoubtedly be doomed in event the new theater is built.

Kentucky Exhibitors Watching Two Bills

State Legislature Has Two New Measures—And Film Men Are Not Asleep as to the Dangers—Fire-Regulating Rule and Race Prejudice Measure.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Kentucky exhibitors will probably be busy for the next few months in watching the activities of the State Legislature which is now in session. Hundreds of bills of one form or another have been introduced, including two bills aimed directly at the moving picture industry.

One of these bills seeks to make it unlawful to present plays based upon antagonism alleged formerly to exist between master and slave or such plays as have a tendency to excite race prejudice. This bill was introduced by Representative Hobbs.

Another bill introduced is for the purpose of regulating public safety in places of amusement and providing for the powers and duties of the state fire marshal in enforcement of its provisions. It was stated several weeks ago in the Moving Picture World that such a bill would be introduced, and the general provisions of the bill were given at that time. This bill was introduced by Representative Greene, of Carrollton, Ky.

The exhibitors have made arrangements to obtain copies of this latter bill and will take steps to have some of the unduly drastic provisions eliminated. It is said that some of the provisions of this bill would work a great hardship on the smaller exhibitors.

To Amend Building Code

In Detroit, Chief Building Inspector Dupont Has Prepared an Amendment to Present Ordinance—Creates Third Class of Theaters, Seating Between 400 and 600—Building and Fire Requirements.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—Chief Building Inspector Henry A. Dupont of this city has prepared an amendment to the building code, which will go before the ordinance committee of the city council, and which he says will simplify the regulations as to moving picture theaters. It provides that assembly halls, without movable scenery, used for motion pictures, may be built to accommodate as many as 600 people. They must, however, be of fireproof construction and comply with many of the regulations heretofore not imposed on assembly halls, in which no moving pictures could be shown. Formerly all play houses were classed as theaters and as minor theaters, the former seating more than 400 people, the latter less. Mr. Dupont's amendment would create another class, a theater which has no movable scenery, and is used for moving pictures alone, seating between 400 and 600 people. Theaters of this description would be built of brick, stone, concrete, terra cotta, tile or cement blocks. Minor theaters may be built of any material.

Under the proposed amendment moving picture theaters now erected to seat 600 people, without being of the specified type of construction, would not be compelled to close up. No minor theater wishing to increase its capacity to 600 could do so, however, if it were already of non-fireproof construction. The main exits of this new class of theater would be computed on a basis of 20 inches for every 100 seats, and there would also be two additional exits three feet wide or more apiece. No standing room tickets would be allowed. Axes, water pipes, hose, chemical fire extinguishers and one fire alarm box would be required. All theaters seating between 400 and 600 now erected would be forced to comply with these requirements in 60 days.

LOCAL 199 ELECTS OFFICERS.

At the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Machine Operators Protective Union of Detroit, Local 199, the following officers were elected for 1916: President, John A. McDonald; vice president, Sam Johnston; Corresponding and Financial Secretary, A. M. Booth; Recording Secretary, William G. Kennedy; Treasurer, Max Ruben; Sergeant-at-Arms, Abe Feldstein; Business Manager, Jack Edwards; H. G Brewer, press representative. The Detroit Local maintains permanent headquarters at 202 Sun building, and meetings are held on the first and third Wednesdays of each month at the Musicians hall.

WYANDOTTE'S MAJESTIC OPENS.

The new Majestic theater in Wyandotte, owned by the Caille & Guthard interests of Detroit, was formally opened on Thursday evening, January 20, to immense crowds, hundreds going from Detroit to see the new house. In the first ten days booking the following companies have been considered: Paramount, Metro, Big Four, Equitable, World, Pathe, Triangle and Blue Bird. The opening picture was "The Whirl of Life" with Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, which Caille & Guthard control for Michigan. George P. Wilbur is the manager of the New Majestic, having come from the Grand in Columbia, Ohio. The Marx theater in Wyandotte closed Jan. 23. It will be entirely remodelled, redecorated and refurnished and re-opened sometime in February. This theater is also owned by Caille & Guthard. Mr. Guthard announces that the firm will also control a third theater in Wyandotte.

SUCCEEDS A. A. CAILLE.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Ferry Field theater, Grand River avenue and the Boulevard, Thomas P. Penniman, a Detroit lawyer and former assistant corporation counsel, was elected president to fill the vacancy caused by the death of A. Arthur Caille. Work on the construction of the theater delayed owing to the sudden death of Mr. Caille, has been resumed and the building will be rushed to completion.

NO INJUNCTION IN TRIANGLE SUIT.

Every motion picture exhibitor and exchangeman in Detroit was very much interested in the suit filed by H. I. Garson in the circuit court of Detroit asking for a temporary injunction to prevent the showing of any Triangle film in Detroit. It consumed practically all of the week ending January 15, and which involved Harri I. Garson, of the Broadway-Strand theater, P. P. Craft, The Duplex theater and the Triangle Theater Corporation, as well as the Triangle Film Company, of New York City. On January 15 Judge Davis refused to grant a temporary injunction feeling that to do so would involve too many parties in a loss and would disorganize the theaters already showing Triangle films. The regular trial will now proceed without delay.

At the present time three theaters in Detroit are showing Triangle films: the Duplex, Grand Boulevard and Woodward; Forest, Woodward near Forest avenue and Triangle theater, Woodward and Jefferson avenues.

THEATER TAXES ARE DUE.

Collector of Internal Revenue James J. Brady, of Detroit, says that returns from special taxpayers under the emergency revenue law are coming in very slowly. Taxes are now due for the period January 1 to June 30, 1916, as follows: Theaters seating not over 250, $12.50; seating from 250 to 500, $25; seating from 500 to 800, $37.50, and seating over 800, $50.

Atlas Company Moves.

The Atlas Motion Picture Company, of Detroit, has moved its offices to 709-710 Peter Smith building, but will retain its laboratories in the Liggett building. This concern which started in business about a year ago is meeting with unusual success, and is the only one of seven film producing companies starting in Detroit that has survived. The Atlas produces comedies, two and three reel features and commercial film. The officers are: P. R. Upton, president and general manager; F. J. Schaffer, vice president and laboratory superintendent; F. L. Upton, secretary and treasurer; H. G. Brewer, manager commercial department; George Earle, director general; L. Earle, scenario editor, and E. J. Taylor, assistant scenario editor.

Tickets for Triangle, One Cent.

The Liggett Drug Stores of Detroit on January 19, announced that it had purchased 50,000 admission tickets to the Triangle theater and would sell them for one cent each. The announcement made was as follows: "We have made exclusive arrangements with the Triangle Theater of Detroit to offer our customers an admission ticket for one cent. Come to any of our stores, pay us the regular price for any 15, 25 or 50-cent Triangle theater ticket and we will sell you another, duplicate of the one you buy, for one cent—that, is two 15 cent balcony tickets for 16 cents, two 25 cent orchestra tickets for 26 cents, and two 50-cent box tickets for 51 cents. The sale will last for one week only. The tickets are good any time." There are three Liggett Drug stores in Detroit.

Name New House the Madison.

The new theater which John H. Kunsky will erect at Broadway, Witherell and Grand Circus Park, Detroit, is to be called the Madison, this being an easy sounding name, easily remembered and because of the location being just a stone's throw from Madison avenue. A company has just been organized with a capital stock of $20,000 and the principal incorporators are John H. Kunsky and George W. Trendle. We might add in this connection that Mr. Kunsky and Mr. Trendle are financing the construction of this building without the sale of one share of stock to the public.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—"The Battle Cry of Peace" is proving a mighty attraction in Michigan. One of the advantages is the ease with which local aid may be interested for publicity purposes. A regular army instructor was at Grand Rapids with two machine guns to teach national guardsmen their use. He loaned the pieces to Gilligham & Smith to help exploit the films. The guardsmen in Grand Rapids attended the show at the Majestic Gardens two companies one night, another company and the band the next night, and another company and the field corps the next. BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—Thirteen hundred children saw "The Wizard of Oz" at the first Saturday morning "Children's Hour" at the Irvin theater in Bloomington and others cried because they could not secure admission. A second show was given at 1.30 to please the left-overs. Miss Minerva C. Hall of the music department of the Illinois State Normal University and Miss Nellie C. Thompson of the Illinois Normal Training School are behind the plan which was conceived last summer. They corresponded with cities in which the children's hour has been tried and in the course of the Christmas holidays paid a visit to the now-famed children's show at the Strand theater in Chicago and also visited twelve film exchanges. Takes in Eleven Shows

St. Louis World Representative Stays Downtown for an Evening and Calls at Eleven Prosperous Theaters—Could Have Got into Four More Without Paying—Finds a Lot of People Enjoying Themselves.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—We went out on Delmar and Kingshighway two weeks ago and wrote a piece about the theaters out there, and when that letter was printed a downtown manager took us to task. "Looky here," he said, "you'll make a lot of folks get corns on their feet walking way out there to look at picture shows, when we've got eleven of 'em right down here in a bunch; and if you count the Grand and the Hippodrome, that serve a sort of cocktail mixture of pictures and vaudeville, there are thirteen. There may not be as many silk hats and automobiles as there are out on High Brow Hill, but there are a whole lot of people downtown. Drop around and take a look at our thirteen shows that are humming for a twelve-hour stretch every day of the year."

Calls on William Sievers.

We did. We went downtown and took in eleven shows in one evening. We stopped first at the Central on Sixth and Market. The Central was one of the first downtown picture houses, and was opened by William Sievers. Mr. Sievers gained the experience at this house that made him see the possibilities of the business in St. Louis, and prompted him to build the New Grand Central, one of the most magnificent picture theaters in the west. Mr. Sievers has become a national figure in moving picture circles and is one of the most tireless workers for the upbuilding and dignity of the business. The Central is under the management of J. J. Sweeney, an old-timer in the moving picture game. "Damaged Goods" is in its fifth week at the Central, and there was a crowded house when we were there.

The Downtown Triangle House.

After the Central we took a hop, step and a jump to the American, the downtown Triangle house, managed by David E. Russell, the fellow we caught with 73 automobiles out in front of his theater two weeks ago. There were not so many automobiles in front of the American, but there was a nice big crowd indoors, and when the American looks crowded it means something, because it is a big house with double balconies, and you can stow away a thousand people in it and hardly see them. Sam Bernard, Mae Bush, Norma Talmadge and Jos. Jefferson were among the stars that formed the fourteen reel program at the American.

Hears Big Orchestra at the Lyric.

After the American, we dropped in at the Lyric, J. W. Cornelius's downtown house. The Lyric is always crowded, but a bigger audience than usual was looking at Clyde Fitch's comedy, "Captain Jinks," and listening to the fine music of the orchestra. The Lyric claims to have the biggest and best orchestra downtown, and the reputation of its music, under the leadership of Dave Silverman, has spread until it is considered an attraction in itself and billed as a feature of the house. A word or two of praise may also be said for the attendants of the Lyric. Claire Keller, the superintendent, and his force of ushers work about as noiselessly and efficiently as any body of theater attendants in the country.

Finds Ritz Nice and Warm.

Half a block from the Lyric is the Ritz, the newest and one of the handsomest houses in the downtown district. The Ritz is a cosy theater, with flowers and Japanese dwarf trees in the lobby, and is as warm as toast. A Metro subject, Gail Kane in "Her Great Match," was being shown to a big audience. The Ritz uses a diversified program, showing General service as a rule, with an occasional big feature.

Pay-as-You-Enter at the Gem.

After the Ritz, we went down to the Gem. The Gem is one of the theaters that helped to make moving picture history in St. Louis. It was opened by Frank Talbot, and was the first house to show independent pictures in the west. The Gem fell into evil ways when the Hippodrome opened across the street, and has been dark off and on for two or three years, but was opened recently by Bromley and Goll, who operate the Duchess on Grand avenue. The Gem has a novelty in the way of a pay-as-you-enter system. Mr. A. D. Branham, vice president of the Automatic Register Company, who controls the invention, was at the Gem and explained the working of the system.

When a coin is paid at the box office it is dropped in a receiver. This immediately sets up an electrical connection and registers the money in the manager's office upstairs, and the usher is notified by a flashlight. The registering device records anything from five cents to $500. There is a large globe suspended over the street and at the same time the coin is registered in the manager's office upstairs, the globe lights up and a bell is rung. This part of the scheme is a novel sort of advertisement and will serve to attract attention to people up and down the street. Mr. Branham says the registering device ca be carried anywhere the manager may sit, even in another building, and count the money coming in at the door.

Films at the Hippodrome.

We stepped over to the Hippodrome, which was reopened in December, and which is doing a nice business with its diversified program. The Hippodrome is a vaudeville house now, playing Kurt Jones attractions, but they run several reels of pictures in connection with the show.

Grand Was Crowded.

The Grand, on Market street, was crowded, and was entertaining the big audience with a bill of vaudeville and pictures.

Dixie a Fine House.

We were half way to Broadway when we stopped at the Grand, so we kept on going and dropped in at the Dixie, which opened on the first of December. The Dixie used to be the Sun, and was closed for a year, when the present manager, J. H. Kientzle, rebuilt the place and made a fine house out of it.

The Dixie opens at 9 in the morning and runs until 11 at night, and the manager says he is considering making an all-night show of it.

Business Humming at the Astor.

Down the street a few steps is the Astor. The Astor is a house that has been humming along at a good steady gait for a number of years, and was doing the usual amount of business when we got there. After the Astor we got to George Angelich's Rainbow, in the next block on Broadway. This is another of the all day run houses. The Rainbow gives a big program for five cents and enjoys a fine patronage from the railway and bank clerks in the neighborhood.

Manager Schwartz's Houses.

The Broadway, which is not on Broadway at all, but on St. Charles street, was our next stop. The Broadway and the St. Charles, diagonally across the street from each other, are both of the W. J. Flynn circuit, and are under the personal care of Manager Schwartz. These two houses are right in the heart of the big store district, and have a fine tired-shopper patronage. "The Angel of Poverty Flat" was on at the St. Charles when we left.

Neat and Cosy Strand.

Just around the corner brought us back to Sixth street again, and face to face with the Strand, the only downtown theater with a Paramount program. The Strand is smack up against its big neighbor, the Columbia, a Keith and Proctor vaudeville house, and it is under the management of Henry Buckley, who also manages the Columbia. The Strand is one of the neatest and cosiest little houses in the country, and is one of the few downtown houses that does not change program daily.

Chosen Items of Interest.

An item in the Searchlight, a paper published by the Lears Theater Supply Company, says that every building in St. Louis that has ever operated as a moving picture theater is now open, with the exception of a small house on Kingshighway and Page Blvd. Mr. Sam Lears, president of the supply company, is in a position to know about the closing and opening of show houses, as he furnishes supplies to a large number of theaters in St. Louis, as well as through the entire middle west, and his statement may be regarded as authentic.

C. A. Maberry, manager of the Delmar theater, 4936 Delmar avenue, has been suffering from appendicitis for the past two weeks. Mr. Maberry has just recently been reappointed manager of the Delmar, when it was sold to P. Stromberg by the Crawford interests.

S. W. Hatch, manager of the V. L. S. E. Exchange at 3630 Olive street, has been absent from the office for several days owing to an attack of ptomaine poisoning. Mr. Hatch had an attack of the same kind last summer, which laid him up for a couple of weeks.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Change in Management at Princess.

DENVER, COL.—An important change in the management of one of Denver's biggest and best motion picture theaters has been announced. As a result this district is robbed of one of its best liked and most capable exhibitors, while it reclaims the services of a beloved native son, who has made his mark in more than one branch of the photoplay industry.

On January 20, H. E. Ellison, manager of the Princess theater, resigned his post to take up the more important duties of executive head of the new Paramount theater at Salt Lake. He was succeeded here by S. Barrett McCormick, former newspaperman, film exchange man and scenario writer.

Doesn't Believe in Mixed Programs.

H. E. Ellison, recently appointed manager of new Salt Lake City house, has been identified with the exhibiting end of the Denver photoplay industry for four years, first as owner of the Colonial theater and later as manager of the Princess. It was in the latter connection that he won his greatest success. He made Paramount pictures "Go" in Denver. He was the first to introduce the "harmony" plan in this city. The Princess gets the highest standard admission price of any theater in Denver and under Mr. Ellison's management it has consistently played to full houses.

Mr. Ellison lays his success to the fact that mixed programs have found no place on the Princess screen. He believes that the moving picture patron either wants high class stuff or slapstick. None wants both. When he took charge of the Princess he chose the high class field and comedy has been completely barred except where it was of the high class society variety.

The best evidence of Mr. Ellison's success is found in the fact that L. M. Marcus has recruited him to take charge of his big Salt Lake Paramount theater.

"Billy" Ireland Gets Big Job.

Denver lost for the time being one of her oldest and best known theatrical men. It was announced this week that William A. "Billy" Ireland will become western manager of "The Birth of a Nation." For 20 years Ireland has been a familiar figure in the theatrical life of Denver. He started his career as an usher in the Tabor Grand under Peter McCourt. Later he became an office assistant, then treasurer and finally manager of the Broadway theater.

Clifford Boyd of Cincinnati has come to Denver to succeed Mr. Ireland as manager of the Tabor Grand, which will be operated as a ten-cent moving picture house.

Prohibition Helps Film Business.

Prohibition has proved a boom to the motion picture industry in the Denver district. One month of the dry era has passed in Colorado and almost, without exception, exhibitors of the photoplay throughout the entire state report an increase in business. And this, despite the fact that zero temperature has prevailed in all sections and weather conditions have been anything but favorable to the industry.

Victor Opera House to Show Films.

The photoplay has triumphed over the legitimate theater in another notable battle in Colorado. As a result of its victory, the Victor Opera House at Victor, Col., will be remodelled at once and turned into a motion picture theater. Hall Bros., former owners of the Fox theater in Victor, are back of the enterprise. They have sold the Fox to Jesse E. Jones, formerly of Canon City.

The Victor Opera House is one of Colorado's most famous playhouses. Some of the world's most famous stage stars have appeared there. In the early days of the gold excitement in this camp fabulous prices were paid for seats at the best attractions.

A Little Mountain Theater.

Milton Cohn, Denver exchange manager of the Notable Film Co. claims the distinction of knowing the smallest exhibitor in the world. He is D. D. Dodge of Vanadium, Colo. Vanadium is so young that it is not even on the map. It is the home of the rare mineral of the same name. It has one theater which is a makeshift affair with a seating capacity of only 75. Two Paramount pictures a week are shown there. Vanadium is located near Telluride in the mountains of Southwestern Colorado. It is not even a station on the railroad line and its films are thrown off on the mountain side while the train is in motion. To return the films it is necessary to carry them to the express office at Telluride by horseback.

Business Notes—New Theaters.

Harry Cassidy, travelling representative of the Mutual Film Corporation for the Denver district, has just returned after an extensive trip through Nebraska, Kansas and Eastern Colorado and reports a theater building boom.

W. H. McDonald of Terrington, Nebr., has broken ground for a $12,500 theater to be opened in the spring.

Nathan Desky of Brush, Col., has just completed work on his new $15,000 theater and will open with a high class motion picture show on February 1.

At Scott Bluffs, Kan., T. A. Bucy, who owns the Crystal theater, has completed plans for a new $25,000 playhouse. Work on the building will begin as soon as the weather permits and it is expected to be completed by early summer.

Suit Set for Spring Term.

CHIPPEWA FALLS.—The case of the Casino Feature Film Company of Milwaukee against the Elliott Sherman Film Company of Minneapolis, will be tried at the spring term of Circuit Court in Chippewa county at Chippewa Falls. The plaintiff brings suit to restrain the Minnesota company from exhibiting the "Unbroken Road," a five reel film, in Wisconsin.

Chosen Notes.

The Grand theater at Green Bay, Wis., is going after box party business by inviting societies and persons who are given to entertaining to reserve a box for Triangle plays several days in advance. Reports of these on the society page of local papers are good advertising.

Crushing and jammed business for motion pictures still continues at the Grand Opera House, Oshkosh, Wis. Riots calls for police to hold crowds back from breaking down doors for second shows is not a common occurence. Building next to theater has been rented for a rest room for patrons waiting for second shows. The "Birth of a Nation" recently played here to $6,619.50 in one week. Following one night stand attractions, "Mutt and Jeff," October 10, and "Seven Keys to Baldpate," October 11. Large advance sales.

Picture Show Zones

Minneapolis City Council Passes Ordinance Providing for Zones in Each Ward and Restriction of Shows to Them—No License for Outside Will Be Considered—Limits the Number of Theaters to 100.

By Grace L. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—An ordinance has just passed the city council of Minneapolis providing for zones in each ward to which motion picture houses must be confined. The ordinance was introduced by Alderman Williams and met with no opposition. Beside creating zones within which houses may be established it further provides that no applications for locations outside these zones will be considered, it limits the number of show houses in the city to 100 and provides that all applications for transfers must be advertised so as to give anyone who desires to do so an opportunity to object. There are at present 75 motion picture theaters in Minneapolis.

As several of the wards had not set their zone limits the limits on these are left open to be established later. The ordinance is indirectly the result of agitation in certain of the school districts in the residence part of the city to keep theaters from being established within certain limits of the neighborhood schools.

THE EXCHANGE ASSOCIATION.

Benjamin M. Goldman has been retained as attorney by the Associated Film Exchange Managers of Minneapolis. A circular letter was recently sent out to all exhibitors by the managers asking their co-operation in assuring protection against unscrupulous and unreliable exhibitors.

Van Meter to Manage Exchange.

J. T. Van Meter has become manager of the Minneapolis branch of the General Film Company. Mr. Van Meter succeeds H. H. Buxhaum, who was recently transferred to the Philadelphia branch. He has been with the General Film Company for more than five years, coming here from Milwaukee, where he was manager of the branch office. Previous to his Milwaukee experience he acted as booker for the same company in Chicago. One of the early improvements that Mr. Van Meter plans in the office system here will be unique in the city. This will be the regular showing a week beforehand of all film releases for the convenience of exhibitors. All film companies in the cities make occasional showings when requested, but so far none of them have regularly exhibited releases in advance. This will also give committees from the new censor board a chance to see films if there should be any question about them, and Mr. Van Meter says such committees will be welcomed at any time.

Will Show Local Post Office at Work.

A motion picture film showing the Minneapolis post office at work is to play a part in an educational campaign, which is shortly to be opened in the schools of the city to make school children acquainted with the work of the government. Lectures are to be given and the film shown in the eighth grade and high schools and in the night schools. Various branches of the work are to be set forth in the film which will be shown and explained by P. E. Foss, president of the Mail Clerks' Association. The association is paying for the making of the film.

Elaborate Stage Effects at New Strand, Indianapolis

Beautiful Settings and Music Add to the Effect of Films Shown at the Newest Picture Theater—A Credit to the City.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The Strand theater, Indianapolis, opened with the Paramount photoplay, "Mice and Men" featuring Marguarette Clark. An audience that packed the house witnessed the photoplay and musical entertainment.

No attempt has been made to present photoplays in Indianapolis on as elaborate a scale as was seen at the Strand. Persons who saw the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation," at English's theater recently were given an insight of how interpretive music by a large orchestra enhances the value and pleasure of a photoplay entertainment. Indianapolis photoplay patrons have had an opportunity to witness the best photoplays that are being produced. Nothing new to them was offered at the Strand. But those who witnessed the performance Saturday evening realized how interpretive music with a novel stage setting, improved and added to the ordinary presentation of photoplays.

The first picture was "Seeing Panama," followed by a solo by Viva Ethella. A reel of curernt event pictures followed, and Albert E. Short, cornet soloist, played "A Dream." The program concluded with a comedy film.

One of the innovations at the Strand is the way the picture screen is handled. The audience sees the screen only just before time to present the pictures. Plush curtains in the rear of the stage setting draw together, the picture screen is dropped in place and the curtains are opened. At the end of the picture the curtains are drawn together the screen is taken up and the curtain open again.

A large delegation of Chicago business and professional men witnessed the first performance Saturday evening, and several hundred of the leading citizens of Indianapolis were guests of the management.

The Strand Theater Company, Indianapolis, has increased its capital stock by an issue of $50,000 preferred and an increase of $125,000 common stock, making the total capitalization $200,000.

BUY THE ROCHESTER THEATERS

Clyde and Sidney Wilson, brothers, Knoxville, Indiana, have bought the three motion picture theaters of Rochester, Ind. They bought the Paramount theater from Ray Blausser, and the K. G. theater from Roy Shank for a consideration said to be more than $7,000. The Shank theaters will be taken over Feb. 7th and the Paramount theater is now being run by the Wilson brothers. Both of the brothers will move to Rochester shortly. Clyde Wilson is an experienced picture theater operator having had a house in Argos, Indiana, for several years.

AGAINST FEDERAL CENSORSHIP.

The Evansville (Ind.) Journal News has come out in a strong editorial against the bill in Congress to create a Federal censorship of motion pictures.

The editor says, "The moving pictures are, in fact, a pictorial press performing in a modern and entertaining and instructive manner all the functions of the printed press. We base our objections to this censorship bill upon the wholly sufficient ground that such a censorship is a direct violation of the guarantee that every American citizen has a right to publish anything he pleases, either by speech, or in writing, or in print."

J. E. Whitely Buys Colonial.

J. E. Whitely, manager of the Colonial theater, at Kokomo, Ind., has bought the house from Charles Lyons. Mr. Whitely will make no changes in the theater. When Mr. Lyons bought the house it was not considered a paying proposition. He employed Mr. Whitely as manager and under his direction the house has been making money.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Indiana Business Notes—New Houses.

George L. McClaine and other west side merchants at Laporte, Ind., contemplate the erection of a $35,000 theater.

W. C. Meloy, Shelbyville, Ind., plans to open the Strand at that point on Feb. 14. A $5,500 organ is being installed.

Gilbert Cuthbert and Sam Floyd have bought the Irwin theater, Goshen, Ind., of William C. Burridge.

B. J. Vought and W. L. Pracht, Defiance, Ohio, have bought the George Brookins house at Columbia City, Ind., of Mr. Brookins. The new owners formerly ran houses at Defiance, Ohio and Hillsdale, Mich.

The Washington Theater company, Marion, Ind., has incorporated with $35,000 capital stock. The directors are J. R. Beaver, Frank B. Metcalf and Ed. Coolman.

Ray and Hobart Bishop have taken over the Victoria theater, at Lafayette, from Mrs. S. Remington. Ray and Hobart Bishop are sons of G. W. Bishop, owner of the building in which the theater is located. The new management will take over the bookings made under the Remington management, and will add such others as they think desirable from time to time.

The New Forrest theater, Boonville, Ind., was opened with "Camille." The New Forrest theater will run Fox, Paramount, and Metro releases regularly and in addition to this the output of other film corporations.

Wisconsin Brevities.

The Civics Club in Madison will discuss moving pictures at its meeting on February 6.

The Odeum theater, 707 Tower avenue, in Superior, was damaged by fire. Loss, $1,000. Five reels of "The Roundup" were destroyed.

DALLAS NEWS LETTER.

Private Showing of "The Girl and the Game."

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DALLAS, TEX.—For the purpose of introducing "The Girl and the Game," to the exhibitors, advance showings were made for exhibitors only at five points over the state. Neat invitations were mailed out and the house managers invited to witness the showing. Charles M. Tetrick, special agent for the picture, was present at each showing and acted as personal host in conjunction with the managers of the house where the films were shown. Showings were at Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, El Paso and Amarillo. Mr. Tetrick is very much pleased over the results. Also, at San Antonio the Queen had a "Helen Holmes Day" with a free exhibition of the opening episode, and although it rained, the house was packed.

Mr. Tomlin boasts of always telling the exhibitors the truth and winning their confidence. He is looking forward to meet with big success in his new position The United customers were sorry to see him leave, but "what some lose, others gain."

Two Dallas Houses Becoming One.

Two adjoining theaters on Elm street, Dallas, the Palace and the Candy, are being overhauled and reconstructed into one house. These houses are among the several controlled by W. D. Nevills, and are in a group of 5-cent houses, and this break will certainly improve the appearance of that block. Mr. Nevills expects to make a strictly up-to-date combination house, which will be called the Folly, and will use pictures and vaudeville. A building permit was issued calling for the expenditure of $2,200, and it is understood that this does not include electrical and other special installations.

New House in Argenta, Ark.

Louis Rosenbaum is building a new house at Argenta, Ark., and it is reported will expend $75,000 on the building and equipment. He has purchased from H. K. Barnett, Dallas, equipment which includes two 1916 Motiographs, a motor-generator and a Minusa screen.

Fine Temple Theater Opens at Mishawaka, Ind.

Manager O. J. Lambrotte Opens New House With World Film, "Camille"—Seats 600 Persons—Some Interesting Details.

MISHAWAKA, INDIANA.—The Temple theater, Main street and Lincoln highway, Mishawaka, Ind., opened last week with "Camille," the World Film photo play with Clara Kimball Young in the leading role. The new theater is a great improvement for the busines district of Mishawaka. It is located on what was formerly the old post office site.

O. J. Lambrotte, former manager, is an experienced picture man and has a chain of theaters in Indiana.

The main street front of the building is of ornamental stucco with relief ornamentations. The entrance floor is of mosaic tile of black and white with a mosaic border. In the tile is the word "Temple." An electric sign over the entrance also carries the word "Temple." The selling booth is equipped with an automatic selling machine.

The interior of the house is finished in mahogany and cream. There is a beam ceiling finished in cream. In front of the screen to the right and left are electric fountains and from the basins emerge artificial fire-proof vines which climb up the sides of the screen. The seating capacity is 600, 100 of the seats being in the balcony.

The Lambrotte saxaphone orchestra of five pieces will provide music. On special occasions singers and musicians of ability will be engaged to help fill out the program. The orchestra pit is large enough for a much bigger orchestra and at times, it is expected to use more music. The Temple has contracts with the Triangle, the Fox, and World film exchanges.

Mention of Prominent People in Dallas Territory.

Paul Ginsberg, known as the "Universal Walker," who is walking from Kansas City to Dallas under the auspices of the Universal company, has passed Oklahoma City and is expected in Dallas this week (week of January 17-22.)

William Oldknow, general manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, the Southern branch of the Universal is making an extensive business visit in Dallas.

C. R. Baxley, of the Dallas Fox offices, has returned from a holiday tour and is back at his old desk.

O. V. Randall is now traveling representative for the V-L-S-E, Dallas office, vice R. K. Evans, recently placed in charge of that company's New Orleans branch. J. E. Huey, formerly booking clerk here for the same company, has been advanced to the road work also.

E. J. Farrell, district representative of the General Film Company, headquarters at Atlanta, has just been in Dallas. Mr. Prince, Dallas manager, met him at Oklahoma City and accompanied him south. Mr. Farrell goes from here to Houston and other points in this business tour.

Dr. John W. Ruskin showed his "Close-to-Nature" pictures at the Dallas opera house week of January 9-16, and while he had to buck an unusually cold spell, the results were not unsatisfactory. The pictures were decidedly pleasing to those who did see them, being wonderfully educational as well as novel.

Mrs. J. Reed Finley has been appointed amusement censor by the Dallas City Commission. Mrs. Finley has been acting as censor for some time and has shown a very liberal attitude toward all kinds of amusements. She has as yet outlined no policy under the new consorship law, but it is expected she will display the same sensible broadmindedness as has characterized her work heretofore. Mrs. Finley has promised to expound her system to the Moving Picture World representative as soon as she has her plans formulated.

R. K. Cross of Cumby, Texas, has purchased a 1916 Motiograph to be added to the equipment of his house at that place. Barnett made the sale.

The Hippodrome Theater at Tyler, Texas, is now under the management of Emmett & Emmett.

Fred W. Pearce, of the firm of Josiah Pearce & Sons, New Orleans, is visiting in Dallas.

MAKING VILLAGE THEATER PAY.

Interesting Account of Manager Shean's Methods at Gardner, Kan.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

GARDNER, KAN., is a town of 500 population, and J. C. Shean has the only picture show there, his house seating 200. Mr. Shean is making a success that many of his brothers in the large cities might well envy. And he does it by careful service—and "pulling stunts." In the small towns there are always a goodly number of patrons who can be depended upon for the regular programs, and who, so they say, pay the expenses of the usual offerings. The profits of the business are made on feature nights, when the prices of 5 and 10 cents are boosted to 10 and 20 or 25 cents. The managers have a full week to advertise the features and prepare for them—the town has a week to talk about the coming pictures and work up enthusiasm. Because of this centering of local attention on the big night, it is possible and profitable to sell reserved seats far ahead, the buyers of such reservations becoming boosters for the show.

Mr. Shean has a fertile imagination in respect to working up his feature nights. An example of his ideas was his booking of five big features as a series, to be run one a week. Reserved seats for the series, the purchaser getting the same seat each week, were sold at $1 for the five shows. Mr. Shean sold $110 of these reserved seats before the first of the series was put on, and so was in the clear on his film rental. As usual the box office sales more than equaled the reservations, taking care of miscellaneous expenses and giving a very nice profit.

EMPRESS AT PAOLA OPENS.

Paola, Kan.—Fred C. Smith, the "magnate" of Paola, Kan., has opened his new Empress theater, a moving picture house, but is continuing to operate the Mallory opera house with road shows. Mr. Smith had been presenting pictures at the opera house while his theater was in process of preparation. The Empress building was entirely remodeled for his purposes, at an expense, including equipment, of about $10,000. There are fresco panels on the outside, the lobby is tiled and trimmed in brass, the seats are upholstered.

The Empress has been rented for Sunday evenings by Rev. O. B. Thurston, pastor of the Congregational church, and evening services of the church will be held there during the winter. One reel of moving pictures, religious subjects, will run every evening before or during the service.

EXCHANGE HOLDS CONVENTION.

Kansas City "Clan" of V-L-S-E. Meets and Lays 1916 Plans.

Manager E. R. Pearson of the V-L-S E. exchange in Kansas City calls his entire force together at least once every three months for a "two or three days 'pep meeting.'" So much enthusiasm and lovalty has been worked up among his "Clan" from the results of these conventions that no doubt in the near future this plan will be adopted by other Big Four managers.

Tuesday after Christmas the clansmen began rolling in and by noon the session was on. Every phase of the industry was discussed with a view to further developing the "partnership plan" between the exchange and the exhibitor. Particular attention was paid to the "definite policy" idea, which is being suggested to all exhibitors.

A pleasant surprise came with the arrival of Assistant General Manager A. W. Goff. This was the first visit ever paid this office by one of the New York officials, certainly conclusive proof of the confidence placed in Manager Pearson.

Those present were unanimous in their approval of the open booking system as the only possible method by which features 100 per cent. strong will be assured. In spite of the low prices placed on the two or three weak features turned out by V-L-S-E, Inc., they continue to be in the vaults, while the strong drawing cards are booked solid at the higher prices. This practically desolves into an automatic merit system as no manufacturer will release a subject now unless absolutely certain of its drawing power.

Those present were E. R. Pearson, manager Kalem Company; S. W. Hatch, manager St. Louis; Jno. Noehrn, St. Louis booker; Joe Gilinsky, representative; J. E. Storey, representative; F. F. Nine, Kalem Company booker; R. L. White, representative; H. E. Stahler, representative; A. J. Reed, representative; L. J. Scott, publicity department, and A. W. Goff, assistant general manager.

TO MAKE FILMS AT OVERLAND.

Company Formed to Produce Near Kansas City.

The Overland Park Film Mfg. Co. has been organized in Kansas City, and chartered in Kansas, for the production of motion picture films at Overland Park, about 25 miles from Kansas City. This place is a town on the Strang electric line, having lakes, medicinal springs, an aeroplane field where many exhibitions have been given, and numerous advantages for a moving picture settlement.

The prime movers in the project are William B. Strang, president of the Strang line, and Capt. Hubert H. B. Holland, a film producer. Captain Holland's chief aids, already arranged for, will be Kenneth D. Langley and Albert McGovern, formerly a producer for the Lubin company.

POPULAR HOUSE UNFINISHED.

W. W. Marsh, druggist of Kansas City, Kan., owns the major part of two or three blocks of property near his drug store on Central avenue, the center of a small community somewhat isolated by residence districts from the main business section of the city. He built the Midway airdome on a vacant bit of property about three years ago. So successful was the enterprise that last year he erected a handsome and substantial theater. This building is 18 feet high, with 18 inch walls and is 50 by 110 feet. Inclement weather last fall forced the use of the building before it was finished inside, and Mr. Marsh decided to postpone the completion until the airdome can be used next summer. The patrons have faken the present conditions good naturedly, and there has been no diminution of patronage. The walls, however, have not been decorated and instead of a suitable floor, the ground has merely been covered with four inches of cinders. Fortunately, the patrons have been used to the cinder floors in the airdome, and the winter has not disclosed any serious discomfort in them. The ceiling will remain as it is, with the great beams uncovered.

A distinctive feature of this theater is the balcony, at the front end of the theater building, from which windows overlook the street. This balcony will have 100 seats. The body of the auditorium accommodates 700. At present the benches from the airdome are used, but suitable theater chairs will be installed when the floor is finished.

The admission to the show has been 5 cents, and programs have been given every evening, including Sundays, with no matinees. When the balcony is put into service, however, 10 cents will be charged for the seats in it, and they will be reservable, the general admission downstairs remaining at 5 cents. Four reels are usually given, though on serial nights the program has six reels.

New Arkansas City House.

The Strand theater at Arkansas city, Kan., will open December 30, having made arrangements to use the Paramount releases. F. C. Fierce is the manager and W. D. Conrad, the owner.

Buys Equipment for New Omaha House.

R. D. Shipley was in Kansas City last week contracting for the equipment to be used in the new theater he is constructing in Omaha, Neb. Mr. Shipley offered a prize of $25 for a name for the house and finally selected "The Muse." It will have a seating capacity of 720 on the main floor and 250 on the mezzanine floor.

Chanute Has Another Picture Show.

Chanute, Kan.—D. O. Reese, formerly a traveler for the Paramount, is giving Chanute, Kan., another moving picture theater. He has leased the opera house, on the second floor of a substantial building, and he opened recently with "The Battle Cry of Peace." Chanute is a town of 10,000. Manager Johnson of the People's theater, has heretofore had the exclusive service of the public as to moving pictures.

Local Censoring in Atchison.

Atchinson, Kan.—An ordinance has been introduced in the city council of Atchison, Kan., providing for a welfare board of five members to be selected by the mayor and council, and serve without pay, whose chief duties shall be the supervision of moving picture shows and dances.

Would Repeal Censor Law

San Francisco May Get Rid of Censorship as Result of Movement for More Drastic Measure—Negroes Demanding a Stricter Censorship—Newspapers and Others Think Present Board Is Illegal.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—The proposed amendment to the moving picture censorship ordinance now in effect in San Francisco, drawn up recently at the instance of a negro society and designed to grant additional power to the board of censors, occupied the attention of the police committee of the Board of Supervisors at its meeting on January 13th. This meeting was well attended by persons interested in the matter and it soon became apparent that not only would the lawmakers be requested not to pass this amendment, but that a strong effort would be made to repeal the present ordinance. After a short discussion A. P. Alberga, president of the Negro Welfare League, the organization which submitted the amendment, announced that this body had decided that the measure was too drastic and asked that it be withdrawn. Other negroes, however, insisted upon its passage and the entire matter was later laid over for a week, the police commission deciding in the meantime to see "The Clansman," the film that precipitated the trouble.

Why Censorship Laws Should Be Repealed.

Attorney Walter Rothchild, representing the local Newspaper Publishers' Association, advocated that the entire ordinance regulating moving picture exhibitions be repealed upon the following ground:

That censorship of anything in the nature of public expression is contrary to the letter and spirit of the constitution of California.

That the censorship provided under the existing ordinance is put in the hands of an extra-official body, the legality of which, as well as the propriety of whose acts, is questioned.

That the production of moving pictures has reached a stage where censorship is unnecessary, because producers have found it better to do their own censoring.

That if the present method of censoring were permitted to continue, and more drastic amendments be admitted from time to time, it is conceivable that the attempt might be made to extend the principle of censorship to all forms of public expression—books, magazines, newspapers, speeches and the legitimate stage.

Present Board May Be Illegal.

Irving S. Ackerman, himself a theater owner, representing the Allied Theatrical Managers of San Francisco, argued against the proposed amendment, showing how it could be made to operate against many films which it was not designed to reach. P. A. Peshon, a member of the board of censorship, told of the methods of inspection employed, stating that in no cases were private exhibitions demanded. Con Deasy, a member of the Supervisorial committee, admitted that he believed that the board of censorship was an illegal body, and John Dunnigan, clerk of the Board, said that the proposed amendment was too drastic a one to be passed. The leading feature of the meeting was the strong fight made by the newspaper interests against censorship in any form.

METRO'S NEW LOCAL MANAGER.

Louis Reichert, formerly assistant manager with the General Film Company, and identified with the film business for the past fifteen years, arrived here recently from New York to accept the position of manager of the San Francisco branch of the Metro Pictures Service. J. J. Unger, the special representative of the concern on the Pacific Coast, is making his headquarters here and returned this week from a business trip to the Los Angeles branch.

A POPULAR EXCHANGE MAN.

The accompanying picture is an excellent likeness of Leon Netter, first assistant to Sol Lesser, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, and should not be confounded with that of Sydney Grant, who recently appeared in the Paramount release "Jane," and who has been appearing here with "So Long, Letty" company. Mr. Netter is one of the most popular film exchange men that San Francisco has produced, and is likewise one of the most successful. Contrary to the usual rule in this particular line of business he has limited his experience to one firm, that of which Mr. Lesser is the head, and through pains-taking work has raised himself to the position of first assistant to this rapidly rising film man.

Leon Netter.

Four years ago Mr. Netter entered the employ of the Golden Gate exchange as office man and his rise had been rapid. He has filled all of the positions offered him in the firm and when the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., was formed, he was made manager of this important branch of the business. Of late much of his attention has been devoted to the Kleine-Edison releases, but he is now preparing to devote his energies to a vigorous campaign on the "Ne'er-Do-Well."

During the frequent trips of Mr. Lesser to New York the business has been in full charge of Mr. Netter and the rapid growth of the concern is due in no small degree to the far-seeing business principles employed by him. He enjoys a wide acquaintance among exhibitors and his pleasing personality makes him a general favorite. He is a member of the Screen Club of San Francisco, in which he takes an active interest, and is always to be found in the lead in matters that tend toward the betterment of the moving picture industry.

NEW EXCHANGE PROMISED.

Charles Klopot, of Los Angeles, has just returned to the Pacific Coast from a business trip to New York on which he purchased about eight hundred reels of selected pictures. He states that within sixty days he will have an exchange in operation in San Francisco and that another is planned for Phoenix, Ariz.

INDEPENDENT TO MOVE.

The Independent Film Exchange, which for more than a year has been conducted at 114-116 Golden Gate avenue, in the heart of Film Row, is to move shortly to 124 Golden Gate avenue, where quarters will be shared with the Union Film and Supply Company. The space that is to be vacated will be occupied by the end of the month by the Apex Film Service recently purchased by Marion H. Kohn and Morris Levison.

Mutual Representative to Visit Coast.

J. J. Rotchford, a special representative of the Mutual is expected here shortly by Manager X. K. Stout, of the San Francisco branch, and before his return to the East all the Coast and Western branches will be visited. This branch received a short visit a few days ago from J. R. Crone, the former manager, who came up from Los Angeles for a brief stay. He stated that the Vogue Films, Inc., now had two companies at work and that a third was being organized.

Manufacturer Visits San Francisco.

E. R. Anderson, of the Minusa Cine Products Company, of St. Louis, Mo., was a recent visitor here calling upon members of the supply trade and conferring with the distributor in this territory, G. A. Metcalfe. He also took advantage of the opportunity to visit his former home at Benicia.

Fox Exchange Makes Improvements.

A number of substantial improvements are being made at the San Francisco branch of the William Fox Corp., among these being the installation of an elevator between the main floor and the basement. This is being put in to expedite the handling of film between the vault and the shipping room. The poster department is also being enlarged. Manager William J. Citron was recently accorded a visit from Harry Leonhardt and W. R. Sheehan, who have since left for New York.

Blue Bird Feathers Its Nest.

Blue Bird Photo Plays have fitted up attractive quarters at San Francisco at the Universal Exchange and the first release, Sarah Bernhardt, in "Jeanne Dore," will be made on January 24th. A manager for the local branch has been selected in the person of Charles I. Lunta, formerly of Los Angeles.

Camera Company Incorporated.

The American Movie Camera Company has been incorporated at San Francisco by W. A. King, A. J. Martin, H. S. Stern, F. C. Russell and A. B. Johnston, with a capital stock of $200,000. Offices and demonstrating rooms have been opened in the New Call Building.

New Theater at Turlock, Cal.

The new Turlock theater at Turlock, Cal., erected to take the place of the old Wonderland theater destroyed by fire some months ago, was opened the first of the year by George Bailey, proprietor of the former house. The new theater is of fireproof construction, of very pleasing design, and has a seating capacity of 700 in the main auditorium and 140 in the balcony. The opening attraction was "The Battle Cry of Peace" and this was presented in a very impressive manner, an orchestra having been secured for the occasion. Before the performance commenced Rev. F. M. Brooke delivered an address on preparedness and the meaning of the film that was to follow. The production was well received and capacity houses were the rule during the two-days' engagement.

Sol Lesser to Go East Again.

Sol L. Lesser, head of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., will leave for New York on January 22nd, and plans to remain in that city for six months disposing of rights to the "Ne'er-Do-Well," and attending to other business matters. He will make a short stop at Chicago on his way East.

San Francisco Business Briefs.

A new theater known as the M. & F. has been opened at Twenty-fourth and Castro streets, San Francisco. This house has a seating capacity of 400 and the operating room has been equipped with two Power's Cameragraphs No 6A and a motor-generator set by G. A. Metcalfe.

A Simplex projection machine has been installed in the Acme theater on Stockton street, near Broadway, by I. Marks & Son.

The Big "A" Poster Renting Company has opened offices at 120 Golden Gate avenue.

"Camille" has been booked for the Portola theater for next week and Manager Roth is expecting much of the production.

Miss Laura Marron, whose acquaintance in the local film field is equalled by but few in the business, and whose popularity is equally as marked, has accepted a position with the New Film Corporation on Golden Gate avenue.

Two late model Motiographs have been installed in the operating room of the Portola Theater, by Edward H. Kemp. This theater has been almost a continuous user of this make of machine since it was opened several years ago.

Joseph A. Huff is now acting as secretary of the Screen Club of San Francisco and is assisting to make the daily luncheon plan a success.

W. W. Lewis, who received a medal at the Exposition at San Francisco for the best projection, and who has been an operator here for several years, has joined the traveling force of the Nicholas Power Company.

K. S. Cashin, of Fresno, Cal., was a recent visitor here and purchased a Caille ticket selling machine and change maker from G. A. Metcalfe and arranged for the installation of a Baird projection machine in the new theater he is to open in the Raisin City about Feb. 1, and which will be known as the Klassay T. While here he discussed the proposition with officials of the State Exhibitors League of starting a local at Fresno.

A contract at about $70,000 has been awarded by I. Oppenheimer, A. Karski and I. Levy for the construction of a moving picture theater at California and Polk streets. The auditorium will be 75 by 137 feet and will be reached from Polk street through an entrance and lobby 25 by 80 feet. It will have a gallery and loges and will have a seating capacity of about 1800. Work will be commenced at once and it is planned to open the house about the first of July.

TOO MANY FEATURES.

For the past two months Astoria, Ore. has been in the throes of an epidemic of features. During that time nearly every brand of features made have been represented in the town. A few weeks ago there was not a mixed program to be seen and with the exception of a serial and the usual comedy at the end of the show, a five-reel feature was the rule. The competition for features put the prices of service up and the exhibitors in the seaport town are realizing that "all features" is not the thing and have gone back to mixed shows for several nights a week.

Oregon State-Wide Briefs.

C. F. Snider has opened a new house in Paisley, Oregon.

Jay Harrington, road man for the Mutual, recently returned from a successful trip through Eastern Oregon where he booked the "Girl and the Game." Mr. Harrington says he booked the picture in every house on the line.

S. C. Ayers, owner of the Globe theater, Albany, Oregon, has purchased the Palace theater, Roseburg, from W. J. Woods.

The National theater, Portland, will add musical numbers to its pictures. Estyll Ladd, former dramatic soprano of the Merry Widow, Pink Lady and other attractions is under contract with the National for an indefinite period.

C. M. Hill, from Seattle, has established temporary headquarters in Portland to promote his picture, "Smashing the Vice Trust."

S. H. Evans, owner of the Opera House, Walport, Oregon, was a recent visitor in Portland. This theater which has heretofore been closed during the winter months will remain open throughout the year.

S. Bernstein has purchased the Gem, South Portland.

G. A. Reed, manager of the Portland Mutual, recently returned from a conference of the Northwest Mutual managers held in Seattle.

Producers Invited

Portland, Oregon, Chamber of Commerce Wants Picture Industries in Oregon—Says Southern Oregon Is Ideal for Producing Photoplays—Film Men Ask Assurance of Fairer Treatment in the Matter of Censoring.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Recently it became known that several large motion picture companies, now located in California, were contemplating moving their studios to new locations and the Portland, Ore. Chamber of Commerce has begun correspondence with the motion picture people to interest them in southern Oregon. The commercial body represents that the southern part of the state in the vicinity of Ashland is ideal for picture production by reason of the abundance of pictureable scenery and the fact that a goodly portion of the year in that locality is composed of clear days.

Local film men, representing large film concerns, discussing the move by the Portland Chamber of Commerce, said they believed that Oregon with its wonderful scenery should be the home of many producing companies, but from the treatment now being accorded the films and the industry by the Portland censor board, whose rulings are followed in many of the smaller towns throughout the state, they could not consistently make any recommendations to the concerns whose pictures they were marketing until they were assured that fair treatment would be given to the producers should they come to Oregon.

MAYOR ALBEE DENIES PLEA.

As anticipated, the recent conference of the Portland picture men with the city commissioners and Mayor Albee resulted in the denial by the mayor of their plea for an appealable censorship ordinance. The mayor still maintains his position taken when the question of appeals was first raised that the present board is a board of appeals. D. Solis Cohen, attorney for the film men; I. Leeser Cohen, of the Portland Amusement Company; Louis Christ, manager of the Picford theater; F. M. Simonton, of the Standard Feature Film Company, and others argued that the present board was an appeal board in name only and asked for a real appeal board independent of the censor board. Their plea was denied. Commissioner Baker championed the cause of the film men without avail, but Commissioner Dieck is apparently on the mayor's side. The mayor proposes to fight vigorously any attempt to create another appeal board. Mrs. E. B. Colwell contends that the board of which she is the secretary is an appeal board in practice if not in theory under the ordinance.

SNOW DEMORALIZES BUSINESS.

Nearly a foot of snow on the streets of Portland and a heavier snowfall general throughout the state, an unusual occurance, made the picture business in Oregon a losing proposition during the week of January 9. Business fell to a point where the receipts did not pay for the film service. The Majestic, at Kalama, Wash., remained closed during the storm as did the picture theaters in Clatskanine and many of the other Oregon towns and in the Portland suburbs. In Astoria, where most of the business houses are built on pilings, the theaters remained open, but enjoyed little patronage owing to the difficulty in keeping the houses warm. The only optimist on Film Row during the week was George Bligh, of Salem, who journeyed from the capital city to tell the news that "Inspiration" at Ye Liberty did S R O business with a snowstorm raging outside.

W. A. Van Scoy, local cameraman for the Pathe Weekly, drove out to Crown point on the Columbia highway and after battling with the east wind for several hours succeeded in obtaining excellent pictures of well-known scenes along the highway clad in the mantel of winter.

SALEM GETS ANOTHER THEATER

Judge P. H. D'Arcy, who owns two pieces of theater property in Salem, Ore., is erecting another theater on Court street, on the site of the Wexford theater, recently burned. The building will be 100 by 120 in size, and part of it will be occupied by stores. The auditorium will seat 800 and Judge D'Arcy intends to make the house the finest picture theater in the valley.

MADE A LOSING THEATER PAY.

W. A. Long, owner of the Star theater, Oregon City, Oregon, worked for 25 years in the paper mills on the Pacific Coast in the capacity of millwright before entering the picture field two years ago. He has made a success of his venture and the Star theater is now one of the best paying little houses in the Williamette valley. Mr. Long attributes his success in the picture game to the use of new pictures. When he took over the house he found it had been using films six months to a year old. He immediately demanded new pictures which increased his film bills from $35 to $120 a week, and today many of his pictures are shown on release date. Oregon City has a population of 5,000. Mr. Long says that many exchange men believe because a town is small, the local exhibitor can palm off films of ancient vintage on his patrons. But Mr. Long has found it otherwise, and says his audiences are composed of moving picture fans who read the papers and magazines and appreciate new pictures and the house that shows them.

W. A. Long

TEA AT THE COLUMBIA.

Manager E. J. Myrick of the Columbia theater, who has a habit of surprising Portland's moving picture fans, made the announcement to his audiences recently that a tea room had been added to the theater's comfortable conveniences and since its opening it has been liberally patronized by the afternoon shoppers attending the Columbia. The tea room is in charge of a Japanese maid in costume and is fitted with electric tea-making apparatus and the finest chinaware. The service is free to the patrons of the house.

INNOVATIONS AT THE SUNSET.

Since Charles E. Couch has taken active charge of the Sunset theater, Portland, the patrons of that pretty little house have enjoyed a series of surprises for pictures are being presented a la Strand, New York. Dimmers have been installed to handle the lighting effects and the house decorations are arranged to suit the pictures shown. The Sunset has closed a long term contract for first run Metro pictures, but will also use features from the open market. During the week of January 16, "Rosemary" was the bill and and the auditorium and lobby were decorated with daisies and rosemary. The ushers wore costumes of the period represented by the picture as did the quartette singing "Rosemary For Remembrance."

Peanut Shells and Popcorn Crunching Annoy

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Rustling popcorn bags and the cracking of peanuts create an unpleasant state of mind in moving picture patrons, who are not partaking of same, and it is not conducive to the fullest enjoyment of pictorial entertainment, according to Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Wash., and he has started a crusade against these two common pests of picture show houses.

Manager Ruffner is attempting to nip the nuisances in the bud through the use of slides on the screen containing hints which even the most obtuse can assimilate. One slide reads as follows:

"If the rattling of a popcorn bag or the cracking of peanut sheels disturbs you, ask the usher for a hammer."

Another runs like this:

"What Sherman said about war includes the rattling of popcorn bags and the cracking of peanuts."

"If you must rattle popcorn bags or crack peanuts, first stop and think of conditions in Europe."

"Popcorn bags and peanuts are two of the biggest menaces the moving picture manager has to contend with," says Manager Ruffner. "You can't refuse admission to people merely because they carry popcorn and peanuts, yet the continual noise they keep up inside the theater is annoying, disturbs everybody nearby and takes attention from the picture. We are going to try education to change conditions. So far our slides have been received in silence, but we believe the results will come."

TELEPHONES AND PICTURES.

About 10,000 men and women and children of Spokane viewed the Bell Telephone Company moving pictures showing the construction of the transcontinental telephone of the Bell company and cities along the way, in the Auditorium theater, Spokane, Wash., January 11 to 13 inclusive. At each performance 500 persons had telephones in front of their seats so that they could hear singing through a graphaphone in the New York office of the company, also hear waves over the telephone a distance of 3,500 miles, as pictures of the Atlantic ocean were thrown on the screen.

Three performances were given nightly and several policemen had to be kept at the doors to handle the crowds which stood for an hour at a time packed into the street despite the fact that the thermometer registered little above zero.

Preceding the showing of these pictures a talking moving picture address, telling of the progress of the telephone since its inception March 10, 1876, to date, and showing the first telephone was given. The work of the graphaphone and the moving picture machine were worked out to perfection, the words being formed on the screen by the lips of the speaker at the exact instant the voice came from the graphaphone.

BUT, OH, YOU JANITOR!

The Pantages theater which has just finished showing the serial "Neal of the Navy," has contracted for the Mutual special feature, "The Girl and the Game," with Helen Holmes in the leading role. The first installment shown the week of January 9 drew well.

When Sarah Traux (Mrs. Charles S. Albert of Spokane), appeared at the Liberty theater in a Triangle production recently, Manager Ralph Ruffner got from Mr. C. S. Albert a number of pictures of her and had them in frames in the lobby. After taking them out of the frames the janitor burned them before Mr. Ruffner noticed them resulting in Mr. Albert losing a valuable collection of pictures of his wife covering many productions she appeared in on the speaking stage.

FILM HITS IN SPOKANE.

Pictures which drew well at the picture houses were: "The Mill on the Floss," with Mignon Anderson in the leading role at the Class A theater; "The Immigrant," with Valeska Suratt in the title role, at the Clemmer; "Father and the Boys," featuring Digby Bell, at the Rex; "The Man From Oregon," with Howard Hickman, at the Lyric; "A Submarine Pirate," with Syd Chaplin, and "The Edge of the Abyss, with Willard Mack, at the Liberty, and "Excuse Me," featuring George Marion and Vivian Blackburn in the leading roles at the Casino theater.

The Majestic theater has contracted for the second showing of the Pathe Gold Rooster plays in Spokane and will run one each week beginning January 19.

The Best theater showed the production "In Her Father's Footsteps," with Ethel Grandin in the leading role.

SEATTLE NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Seattle News Service.

Anita King Makes a Stir in Seattle.

The visit of Miss Anita King, photoplay actress, known better as "The Paramount Girl," was a gala affair in Seattle. She arrived from Los Angeles Wednesday morning, January 5, to help in the dedication of the new Coliseum theater, which will feature Paramount-Lasky pictures. Immediately she was challenged by the photoplay editor of the Seattle Star to edit his page. She accepted, and her finished product in the issue of the Star Friday, January 7, was certainly a hit throughout the city.

Not only was she editor for a day, but she also induced Mayor Gill to pose for the camera with her. Sunday afternoon, January 9, she talked to a number of girls who, at her invitation through the newspapers, came up to her apartment at the Washington Hotel to discuss photoplays and the possibilities for girls. At the Coliseum theater, Miss King faced combined audiences of approximately 15,000, Saturday and Sunday during four appearances. She gave short talks which were very well received. Motion pictures showing her in various places in Seattle were also shown.

"Battle Cry of Peace" in Seattle.

With a brass band at the head, 400 members of the National Guard marched from the state armory in Seattle to the Moore theater, to witness the first performance of "The Battle Cry of Peace," at the Moore theater. They were the advance guard of thousands of citizens who saw the picture during the week preceding New Year's. Seldom has a picture created as much discussion as this one, and few photoplays brought out so large a number of representative citizens to the theater. "The Battle Cry of Peace" was first booked at the Moore theater by Tom North, Seattle branch manager, of the V. L. S. E. It was again booked at the Clemmer theater for an engagement beginning Saturday, December 8.

Fannie Ward in "The Cheat" won the distinction in a hot contest, of opening the new $500,000 Coliseum theater Saturday, January 8, 1916. Her chief competitors were Mary Pickford in "The Foundling," and Geraldine Farrar in "Temptation." Managers Jensen and Von Herberg of the Coliseum spent many hours debating the matter, but could reach no conclusion as between the three great actresses. Finally lots were drawn, and Miss Ward won.

THE Moving Picture World more than five years ago pointed out the legal right of every exhibitor to show motion pictures on Sunday in the State of New York.

The Court of Appeals has now definitely established the right to show motion pictures on Sunday anywhere in New York.

The Moving Picture World has aided in the fight against narrow and fanatical Sunday laws in every part of the country both through the personal work of staff members and through the preparation and dissemination of its pamphlet "The Modern Sunday and the Motion Picture."

The Moving Picture World has prepared and is distributing free of charge a complete record of the laws and decisions affecting the Sunday question in New York. This record is of great value to every exhibitor in whose territory the Sunday question is being agitated.

Our literature on the Sunday question has been sent to hundreds of our readers, whose testimony as to its value is on record in the office.

All this work is part of the special service which The Moving Picture World is rendering to the industry at large and to the exhibitor in particular.

A SPECIAL DELIVERY (Jan. 27).—When Plump is informed that the stork is expected to visit his home shortly, he rushes to summon medical assistance. His peculiar actions and wild haste arouse the suspicion of the police officials, who have been on the lookout for some burglars who have recently been operating in the vicinity of the sanatorium.

Runt, the pride of the police force, follows Plump, but in the tussle is severely worsted. The nurses in the sanatorium are in a very nervous state owing to their dread of burglars and the least noises drives them into a panic. Plump reaches the sanatorium followed by Runt and other policemen, whom he has summoned to assist him. Plump's entrance at the sanatorium in a wild and dishevelled condition throws the nurses into a frenzy of fear, and they attempt to phone for help only to learn that a real burglar has entered the house during the excitement and has cut the telephone connection.

The screams of the nurses have been heard by Runt and his fellow-policemen and, rushing to the house, they overpower the unfortunate Plump and drag him off to the station, where the head nurse lodges a complaint of burglary against Plump. He begs the officials to release him and explains his predicament, and is finally able to convince them of the truth of his statements. On his release he rushes madly to his home, accompanied by the doctor and the head nurse and, as if Fate, desirous of making amends for his misfortunes of the earlier part of the night, Plump is rewarded by the appearance of the doctor bearing in his arms not one, but three bouncing boys.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

THE HEART BREAKERS (Three Parts—Jan. 28). Bernice becomes an heiress by her sudden inheritance of a fortune and throws four ambitious men of doubtful ages into consternation. They invade her home with heart-rending proposals, each armed with a diamond ring. Bernice, taking a hint from her over-indulgent father, accepts them all. She then escapes to the beach home of her aunt, leaving Dad to adjust matters. He disposes of the heart-breakers by declaring that his daughter has run away, owing to mental breakdown brought about by the unusual excitement.

Jimmy Morris, a reporter, gets a line on the affair, loses his job and goes to his mother's home at the beach, chagrined and disappointed. Jimmy meets the heiress, believing her to be a maid, which belief she strengthens. While fishing, Jimmy plots with his supposed 'maid' to get the heiress' story about her strange suitors. Jimmy promises to divide the fee for the scoop.

Jimmy and his 'maid' have a startling romance, all of which is disturbed by the coming of the heiress' parents, who decide to take her home. Jimmy confesses his love to the heiress, though believing her to be a maid. The heiress at last finds herself in love. Bernice at home, tells her father of Jimmy. Father, who is a silent partner in the newspaper company, orders Jimmy installed in a good position.

The four heartbreakers, startled at the return of the heiress, gather at her home. Her plea of disinheritance and demand that her suitors fight duels for her hand, cause their departure in dramatic fashion, while Jimmy, coming to meet his 'maid,' finds he has won the heiress.

BIOGRAPH.

THE CHAIN OF EVIDENCE (Feb. 1—Two Parts).—The young villager stands his uncle's ill treatment as long as he can, then determines to seek his fortune in the city. Bidding his sweetheart good-by, he sets out. The next morning his uncle is found dead, and the city police, warned by telegraph, arrest the boy. At his trial the chief witness against him is the ticket agent at the station, who testifies that the accused purchased a ticket with a torn ten-dollar bill, which is offered in evidence. The bill is identified by a tenant of the dead man, who declares that he met his landlord on the street and paid him the money, receiving a receipt, which he produces.

In his own defense the prisoner testifies that he found the money in the street while on his way to the station. His story is not believed, and the jury brings in a verdict of guilty. At that moment the local blacksmith enters the courtroom, accompanied by his widowed sister, and asks to be sworn. He deposes that on the night in question he had called on the dead man in his home and aid him a sum of money, arrears of rent owed by the widow. Threatened with dispossession, his sister had appealed to him for help; and after paying the money he had told the old skinflint what he thought of him.

The old man, starting up in wrath, had been stricken with apoplexy and had fallen, striking his head. While riding for a doctor, the blacksmith had been thrown by his horse and had lain in a coma. He produces the receipt for the money as confirmatory evidence, and the prisoner, set free, is clasped in his sweetheart's arms.

THE SMUGGLERS (Feb. 2—Three Parts).—Captain Thorne places his motherless child in a boat and entrusts it to the waves when his ship founders at sea. The boat drifts ashore, and the child is found by a man, who rears it as sister to his own son. Reaching womanhood, the girl falls in love with a young secret service agent who is on the lookout for smugglers. She is persecuted by one Bill Hicks, a false friend of her brother, who is leader of the smugglers. The girl's adopted brother discovers in an old desk some papers which give a clue to his identity, and also bonds to the value of many thousand dollars.

He incautiously takes his friend into his confidence, and is killed by the smuggler. The secret service agent, entering on the trail of the smuggler, is arrested for murder. His sweetheart contrives his escape from prison, and is waiting for him in a boat. The boat is picked up by a yacht, commanded by Captain Thorne. Hicks, fearing lest suspicion overtakes him, has left the village after the arrest of his rival, and after various adventures has become a member of the yacht's crew. Recognizing the castaways, he denounces them. The captain does not credit his story, and in a fit of revenge, prompted by mania, he sets fire to the yacht.

The girl, locked in a cabin, is rescued by her lover, and they escape to a neighboring island. Hicks also succeeds in making his escape, and tries to kidnap the girl. Her screams bring rescuers, and while trying to escape Hicks is killed. The papers found on him are recognized by Captain Thorne and the girl, and through this documentary evidence father and daughter are reunited.

Kitty, hearing of her lover's failure to convict Roth, urges her father to accompany her across the border. There she causes Roth to fall in love with her. He asks her to take across the border some valuable diamonds. She agrees, for the diamonds have been stolen from her aunt. She places the diamonds in a piccolo which she plays.

At her home Roth calls for the diamonds. Kitty Randolph shows him how she has smuggled them through the customs. A number of changes has been made in the list of Vitagraph releases as published in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD by that company. "When Lin Came Home," which was originally scheduled for shipment on Jan. 7, was postponed until Jan. 10. On Jan. 7 "His Wife Knew About It" was released and a description of this picture was published on page 2426 of the issue dated Dec. 25, 1915.

The Vitagraph Unit Program subjects entitled "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel," a four-part picture, and "A Cripple Creek Cinderella," a one-reel comedy-drama, which were announced in the pages of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to be released on Jan. 10, have been postponed until Feb. 7. Synopses of these pictures were published on page 128 of the issue dated Jan. 1.

Several other Vitagraph-Unit Program subjects were mentioned in the paper for release during the month of January. These have all been removed from the days of release announced and the only Unit Program pictures put out by the Vitagraph Company for January are those released on Jan. 3 entitled "Who Killed Joe Merrion?" and "When Holligan and Dooligan Ran for Mayor."

THE WRONG MR. WRIGHT (Feb. 4.)—The cast: Jack Wright (Garry McGarry); John Wright (Charles Wellesley); Alma Wright (Jewell Hunt); Hotel Clerk (Harry Fisher). Author, Fred H. James. Produced by C. Jay Williams.

Jack Wright, a lumber magnate, and Jack Wright, a lawyer, apply for rooms at the same hotel, and the clerk gets them mixed up, with the result that when Alma, the daughter of the lumberman, arrives at the hotel she finds evidences of a man's occupation, and as she is preparing for bed the stranger himself appears. She ducks behind a screen and many ludicrous incidents follow rapidly, during which the bell-boy appears with a tray of tea and toast which he tells Jack has been ordered by "his wife."

Jack finds "his wife" behind the screen and they introduce themselves. She becomes hysterical at her terrible predicament and sobs that she is utterly disgraced, but he comforts her and reminds her of when they were both school children, how he had a little sweetheart by the name of Alma Wright; she remembers and he proposes on the spot. She accepts him, and just as he is leaving her with a good-night kiss Pa Wright appears. Then there are some exciting moments until explanations and introductions clear up matters, and the Wrong Mr. Wright becomes the Right Mr. Wright, with Pa's blessings.

BILL PETERS' KID (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Feb. 5).—The cast: Winnie Peters (Mary Anderson); Dick Stowell (William Duncan); Bill Peters (William Bainbridge); Sam (Fred Behrle). Author, Marie A. Wing. Produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

Brought up in the rough mining district without a mother's care, Winnie, known as "Bill Peters' Kid," has developed into a wild, unkempt, tomboy girl, with a liking for all sorts of strange pets, such as horned toads, turtles and Pedro, a young and tame timber wolf, but withal, is lovable and good. When Dick Stowell, a city man, comes to take the position of mine superintendent, and gets lost in the desert in a blinding sandstorm, where he is found and picked up by Bill Peters, his finer sensibilities receive a shock at the rude way in which food is prepared and eaten in the cabin.

However, he falls in love with Winnie and she with him, but he treats her as though she were a child, which makes her angry. After making Sam Duncan, who is in love with Winnie and jealous, apologize for certain remarks, Dick tells her "the women he knows do not kill rabbits, get angry and stamp on flowers." Old Man Peters is fatally wounded in a mine explosion, and his dying wish that Winnie be sent to the Frisco convent for education is carried out by Dick.

She returns a full-fledged young lady and Dick is more in love than ever, and when she mischievously dresses up in her old rags and tattered hat she wore when he first saw her he starts to reprove on the spot. But she impishly demands at the point of her rifle if he "likes little girls who kill rabbits and stamp on flowers," and at his "Yes" surrenders into his arms.

BETTY, THE BOY AND THE BIRD (Feb. 7). The cast: Betty (Zena Keefe); Jim Derwent (Gerald Gordon); Her Aunt (Mrs. Nellie Anderson); The Leading Lady (Josephine Earle); Stage Manager (George Stevens); Father (Tefft Johnson); The Boy (Johnny Cahill). Author, Wilfrid North. Produced by Tefft Johnson.

Betty, of the chorus, on her way to rehearsal, stops to rescue a bird from the clutches of a boy with a bean-shooter. Jim Derwent, son of the theater owner, is passing in his car and sees the girl boxing the boy's ears, while her aunt looks about for a policeman, and he stops to see what is the matter. He recognizes Betty and, after explanations, Jim drives them to her home, where the bird is cared for. On her arrival at the theater the stage manner gives the girl a "bawling-out," then fires her; but Jim gets his dad to countermand the manager's decree.

Next day Jim calls—more to see Betty than the bird—and a charming romance is soon under way. The leading lady at the theater has a "night out," reports sick, and Betty has a chance to take her place. She makes good, and the former leading lady is deposed. But Betty soon has the opportunity to become Jim's own leading lady, and when he promises to love her pets and herself, too, she becomes his bride.

FREDDY'S LAST BEAN (Feb. 11).—The cast: Freddie (William Dangman); McKann (William Lytell, Jr.); Longshoreman (Herbert Barry); Landlady (Helen Gurney); Longshoreman's Wife (Mrs. T. Talford). Author, Agnes C. Johnston. Produced by Frank Currier.

Freddy is reduced to his last dollar and the landlady has stated emphatically that unless he "comes across"—out he goes. Despite his gnawing hunger, Freddy is a true sport, and cannot resist taking a flyer on a 100 to 1 shot on the ponies, with the result that he goes flat broke. On his forlorn way home a longshoreman has a family row and slings a can of beans through the window, which hits Freddie on the head.

Happy once more, Freddy picks up the can and hastens home to enjoy his unexpected feast. But a chorus girl who rooms across the way weeps and weeps until poor Freddy can stand it no longer, and, before partaking of the lucious beans, he shares them with her, with disastrous results to the beans. Then a friend visits him, and before Freddy can take a mouthful starts in on a long tale of the delicious meal he had the night before, meanwhile quietly spearing beans with a toothpick and eating all but one lone, solitary legume.

Freddy shows him the door, then enjoys to the full that one little bean. Immediately afterward, McKann, a food expert, visits him, saying he must get up an article on beans right away. The stores are all closed and there is not a bean in the house. He offers the dazed Freddy ten dollars for one bean, and the poor lad collapses completely.

FROM OUT OF THE PAST (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Feb. 12).—The cast: John Wilson (William Humphrey); Mrs. Wilson (Belle Bruce); Ethel (Jacqueline Brawn); Ethel, grown-up (Carolyn Birch); Jack (Bobby Connelly); Jack, grown-up (Garry McGarry); Helen Nash (Eulalie Jensen); Dr. Hudson (Harry Northrup); His Wife (Lillian Burns); The Man (Charles Wellesley). Author, Ruth Handforth. Produced by William Humphrey.

John Wilson, a prosperous merchant, resumes a liaison with Helen Nash, a woman he had known before his marriage, and cares for her and little Jack, her son, with the understanding that the child is his own. Ethel, the child of his marriage, and little Jack meet and become playmates. Wilson quarrels with Helen and leaves her forever. She dies from heart failure, and Dr. Hudson, hurriedly summoned, finds a letter which is to be opened by Jack when he is twenty-one. Dr. Hudson adopts the child, and he and his wife raise the boy as their own.

Later, meeting Ethel Wilson, now grown up, the two are attracted and become engaged. Dr. Hudson reveals to Wilson that Jack is not his son, but the son of Helen Nash, one of his patients, and the doctor gets a shock when Wilson confesses he is the father of Jack. This makes Jack and Ethel brother and sister; so they are at once separated—only Jack being told of the terrible fate he had so narrowly escaped. Then Jack's 21st birthday arrives and he opens the mysterious letter. It proves to be a confession from Helen that he (Jack) is not the son of Wilson, but the son of her husband, Dick Nash, whom she married very shortly after Wilson first met her. The barriers of blood relation being removed, Ethel and Jack are reunited, and receive the blessings of their respective parents.

RED FEATHER.

A KNIGHT OF THE RANGE (Five Parts—Feb. 7). The cast Cheyenne Harry (Harry Carey); Bess Dawson (Olive Golden); Bob Graham (Hoot Gibson); Gentleman Dick (William Canfield); Sheriff (Bud Osborne); Nick (A. D. Blake); Buck (Bill Gettinger); Dolores (Peggy). Scenario by Harry D. Carey. Produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Cheyenne Harry is the champion cowboy in Lariat. Boy Graham comes next. He is in love with Bess Dawson, the postmistress of Lariat. Gentleman Dick, the gambler of Lariat has long had his eye upon Bess, but has feared Dolores, his sweetheart, to such an extent that he had never openly showed Bess attention. Harry has long been in love with Bess, but has kept the matter a secret.

Gentleman Dick makes a secret call on the girl and tries to force his attentions upon her. In the struggle she drops the letter and the engagement ring she has just received from Bob. Dick finds the ring and puts it into his pocket. Dolores, in the distance, sees Bess apparently accepting Gentleman Dick's attentions, which causes her jealousy to flare up. After the round-up all the boys hurry up to Lariat to spend their heard-earned money. They all enter the saloon and accept a treat on the gambler, who tells them that a game will shortly open to all comers. Bob notes his ring on the gambler's finger and asks him about it, but is abruptly refused an explanation.

Harry tries to keep Bob from drinking and nearly succeeds until Bob again sees the ring. Bob then challenges the gambler to a game with the ring as the stake, and during the game he becomes almost drunk and loses his hard-earned salary. Harry sends for Bess, who arrives just after the game is finished. Meanwhile, the gambler, having won all Bob's money, gives him back the ring, telling him that he does not wish any hard feelings. Bob confronts the girl with the ring, but refuses to listen to her explanation.

Gentleman Dick has two pals in his crooked work—Buck and a Mexican—and they are determined to get Bob in with them, in order to let him "hold the bag." Bob, new penniless, drunk and on the outs with his girl, readily joins them in their plans to hold up the incoming stage. Buck, the Mexican and Bob leave camp to intercept the stage, and when Harry comes in search of Bob he is met by Dolores, who has heard of their plans to rob the stage. She tells him all, and Harry rides hurriedly after the men to save them if possible. The three hold up the stage and rob the passengers. In the division of the spoils the ring is dropped from Bob's pocket and the Mexican, in order to handicap him, succeeds in loosening one of the shoes on Bob's horse to such an extent that the animal becomes lame.

Harry comes upon the scene of the robbery and a short examination shows him where the bandits went. He hurries on and soon comes upon Bob with the lame horse. He denounces him, but tells him that because of the girl he will help him to escape. The sheriff and his men have made an examination of the place where the holdup took place and find the ring dropped by Bob, which is recognized by several of the men. Harry goes to Bess's home and while he is in the room the sheriff and his posse return and she hides him in a closet. Unable to get any satisfaction from the girl, they leave for another search. Bob returns to the girl's house and finding Harry there he accuses him of trying to "double cross" him. He tries to kill Harry, but is unsuccessful.

The sheriff meets one of the cowboys, who tells him that Harry did not take part in the hold up. The sheriff then shows the ring which he found and is told by Gentleman Dick that he gave Bob the ring that afternoon. Bess hides Harry in the barn to hold the posse for Bob's escape, but she is very bitter in her denunciation of Bob for allowing Harry to take the blame for his act.

Bob returns to the saloon and tries to kill Gentleman Dick, but the bullet strikes a pack of cards in his pocket. Bob leaves, thinking he has killed the gambler. The sheriff starts out in pursuit and soon overtakes the fugitive. In the fight which takes place Bob is killed. Bess takes Harry into the house and finishes binding up his wound. While there Gentleman Dick comes in, stating that she has lost her sweetheart, and that he has come to make application for the job. Harry hears the conversation from the next room. He enters and tells Gentleman Dick that the place is already filled. There is almost a fight between the two, but Bess holds Harry back. She realizes that she now loves Harry. The gambler returns to the saloon and tells the loungers they had better clear out as he has something to settle with "Cheyenne" Harry. They understand and he is left alone.

In spite of Bess's protests Harry returns to the saloon. In the fight that follows Dick is killed and Harry walks into the arms of the sheriff. While Dolores is weeping over the body of Dick, who was never faithful to her, the sheriff returns Harry's gun to him, telling him that he had better keep it. As the story fades Harry comes into his just reward for his long fight to give the girl what is best, and Bess comes to his eager arms.

The cast: Tom Larnigan (Harry Carey); Bruce Larnigan (Hobart Henley); Mrs. Larnigan (Nannie Wright); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Roger Maxwell (Marc Fenton); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Kitty Rockford (Nina Cunard); Carl Weisner (Hector V. Sarno); Dunn (J. F. Evers); Ben Travers (Jack F. Connolly); Jack Stevens (Malcolm Blevins).

Before starting for Pennsylvania to investigate the coal conditions Tom takes his mother and Bruce for a visit to the country. During his absence from the New York flat Dunn has Bill Bean, the electrical genius, arrange a series of small infernal machines in the flat so that it is impossible for Tom to enter without being killed. Stone meets Tom on his return from the country and invites him to call and discuss the coal situation before he starts to the scene of activity. Tom promises that he will do so. Stone smiles, for he knows that Tom is on his way to the flat. Stone assures Weisner, head of the Coal Trust, that Larnigan will never start for Pennsylvania.

Weisner is skeptical and informs Stone that if he does go he may be killed, as a strike is in progress. Weisner, a little later in Maxwell's home repeats the statement of it being an easy matter to kill Tom should he come to the coal country. Dorothy Maxwell and Kitty Rockford overhear the conversation. They decide to go to the coal country and lend their aid to Tom.

Tom arrives at the flat and stops to talk to the landlord. He is saved from death by a cat which, in pursuit of a mouse, runs across the mat under which the key to the infernal machine is placed thereby closing the circuit which causes the explosion. The spies of Stone report the explosion and Stone in turn reports it to the trust. Stone, in his apartment, is congratulating himself that at last he is rid of the Larnigans, when Tom pays him the promised visit. Stone recovers from his surprise and insists on Tom spending the night in his apartment. Later, when Tom is asleep, Dunn calls to receive Stone's congratulations on the success of the infernal machine. He is astounded to learn that Tom has escaped and is asleep in the next room. Dunn is persuaded to climb in Tom's room by means of the fire escape and finish him. Stone goes to the office of the apartment and reports that a burglar has been seen in the hall.

When Dunn climbs in Tom's room he is captured and strapped to the bed. Tom then leaves for Pennsylvania and conducts a quiet investigation away from the scene of trouble. He finds hundreds of loaded coal cars on a siding and to prove that there is no intention of moving them the railroad construction gang has built their tool shanty across the track at the foot of a grade. This is proof that the shortage of coal ad the high price is not due to the strike. Weisner comes upon him taking notes of the situation and in the fight that ensues Tom is knocked unconscious and his body thrown into the shanty. The men who assisted in beating Tom and Weisner rush to the top of the grade in order to ascertain how quickly the cars can be moved, as Weisner wishes to refute Tom's report.

While the section hands are counting the cars Weisner glances down the grade at the little shed where Tom lies unconscious. A diabolical idea comes to his mind. He quickly uncouples the car nearest the edge of the grade from the train and begins to lever it with a crowbar towards the edge.

Meantime the strike breakers have been set upon by the strikers and in turn are charged by the militia. Dorothy and Kitty flee from the scene of battle and after a sharp ride come out on the track of the grade siding. Dorothy learns of Weisner's trick and with the aid of Kitty Tom is dragged out of the shanty just as the car crashes into it.

Weisner's foot was caught by the air brake as he started the car on its downward plunge and he was dragged to death. The militia quells the riot with the usual loss of life, but Tom's report starts government action and the coal situation is relieved. Tom reports his success to Bruce and another name is added to the victory book.

She gets work at the children's hospital and later she and Forrest renew their friendship. The acquaintance ripens into love, but Annette, thinking of her past, refuses to marry him. He finally persuades her to marry him in spite of her past. A year and a half pass and Annette and Forrest are very happy with the baby. Through a friend Morrell and Forrest become acquainted. Morrell eventually comes to the house and is surprised to find Annette as Forrest's wife. He keeps the secret of knowing Annette from Forrest and tells her that unless she consents to pose for the unfinished statue he will tell her husband of their former relations. Annette, frantic, consents to go to his studio dressed only in a drapery. As soon as she gets inside she realizes the trap Morrell has set for her. He tries to thrust his advances upon her, but she holds him off. Her husband enters in the midst of the struggle and he accuses her of intimacy with the sculptor. She tries to explain, but Morrell tells Forrest his suspicions are justified.

Annette hurries home and a big scene follows between husband and wife, wherein she is ordered to leave home. She starts to take the child, but Forrest tells her she cannot take it. Torn with anguish because of her broken happiness she determines to have the child at any cost and tells her husband that the child is not his. He allows her to take the child with her. Some time later the child becomes very ill and Annette is told that the only hope for recovery is an operation by Dr. Stephens. She is in despair, but finally goes to him and tells of the child. He refuses her appeal and she, frantic for fear she will lose the child, seeks out Morrell and tries to force him to go to the office. The child is left alone with the doctor and his professional sympathy overcomes his scruples. His better nature asserts itself and he operates on the child with success.

Morrell refusing to accompany Annette to the doctor's office, is threatened by her with death, but he wrests the gun from her hands and as he looks at her cowering figure what little manhood is left in revived and he promises to go and clear her name. When the two arrive the child is pronounced out of danger. Morrell tells Forrest that Annette has been true to him since her marriage and he only accused her of wrong-doing to serve his own purpose. A reconciliation takes place between husband and wife.

That evening as the two friends are strolling down the street they see posters advertising the appearance of a well known actress. The party lasts all night, and the girl insists upon accompanying Arthur to his apartment. They arrive about 9 a. m., and Arthur is trying to make an excuse to get rid of the girl so as to prepare for his wedding, when matters are complicated by the arrival of Fritz with the wedding bouquet. The girl asks the meaning of the flowers, and Arthur is unable to give a satisfactory explanation.

Arthur takes the occasion of his friend's arrival to hurriedly get on his wedding clothes. When he returns Flora, the actress, gets a suspicion of where he is going. She previously had told Arthur that if he proved false to her, in spite of his evident affection, she would kill him, and Arthur, taking her at her word, leaves his friend Fritz to make his excuses while he hastens to the girl's house.

As soon as Flora finds that Arthur has gone she flies into a tantrum and the furniture of the apartment suffers as a consequence. Poor Fritz, unable to escape, makes the best of his predicament and calms Flora with an invitation to breakfast.

Jones, camp foreman, is much given to the red liquor and at sight of Jensen's little wife is filled with unholy desires. More than once he tries to force his attentions upon her, but she succeeds in repelling him. Finally, he becomes so strenuous that she tells her husband, who promptly responds by seeking out Jones and delivering him a punch upon the jaw, thus winning his eternal hatred. Jones tries many plans to discredit Jensen and even sends Yorksen in San Bernardino a letter charging Jensen with drunkenness and idleness. the two very things of which he is the least guilty.

Yorksen, not believing this charge against his countryman, decides to investigate and arranges for a tour of inspection of the company's camps. Fearing Yorksen's visit may unearth the truth, Jones sees he must get Jensen out of the way. By his careful arrangement, a tree falls on Jensen severely injuring him and rendering him unconscious for several days. The Gordons are a happy family in their bungalow, being blessed with a little girl and a small baby. In a shack in another part of town, happily dwells Mrs. Green and her husband. Although they live in the poorer part of town, they are happy in the possession of a baby pickaninny. Mr. Green works in a livery stable and his wife, to help out with the family income, takes in washing. Unable to do her work with the baby squalling, she has a little colored girl take the baby out for a walk.

Doris, the little girl of the Gordons, secures permission to take her dolly out for an outing and meets the colored child with baby Green. The little coon admires Doris' doll and the two exchange babies. Doris takes the coon baby home and puts it in bed beside the other baby, while the little negro returns with the doll. Mrs. Green misses her baby and goes on the war path looking for it. Mrs. Green finds the negro child with her own and almost has hysterics. The little negro girl asks Doris to give her a baby back and Doris trades her baby sister for the doll, thus complicating matters.

When Mrs. Gordon finds her baby gone and the negro child in possession of the bed, she frantically calls for her husband to hurry home as some one has stolen their child. Mrs. Green meanwhile gets her husband and they search for their child. Eventually the two searching parties come together and learn of the various transactions in baby trading. Explanations follow and each mother is happy in the possession of her rightful child. As the story ends, both Doris and the little negro girl get the punishment for their reckless trading "on the curb."

"ARTISTIC INTERFERENCE" (Feb. 8).—The cast: Jack Wilmer (Robert Hilliard); Louis Blake (Bill O'Neill); The Miniature Painter (Edward Weins); Ethel Miller (Edna Pendleton); Her Married Sister (Nellie Slattery); Her Little Sister (Lois Alexander). Written by Anna D. Williams. Produced by Louis Henderson.

Jack Wilmer and Ethel Miller, sweethearts, are seated in the garden of Ethel's house when her married sister and little neice appear. They have come from the studio of an artist who has just finished a miniature portrait of the little girl. When alone Jack proposes and is accepted. As he is kissing her, Louis Blake, Jack's chum, who is also in love with Ethel, comes behind them unobserved. He is torn by rage and jealousy at losing the girl, but he congratulates them when they announce their engagement to him.

Ethel goes away for a short visit from town. During her absence Louis meets one day at the club the director of a moving picture company and is urged to act as substitute for a young man who has been taken ill. Louis refuses and suggests that the director offer the part to Jack. When the matter is explained to Jack he refuses, but consents at last when he is persuaded that it will be quite a lark. But when he is put to the test, and is directed to ardently embrace a pretty actress who rushes out of a cottage to welcome him, he balks and acts with such backwardness that the actress takes the initiative and throws her arms around him.

While in this compromising position they are photographed not only by the picture operator, but also by Louis who has brought a small kodak with him. Louis sends to Ethel by a messenger an envelope containing an anonymous communication and the snapshot he has secretly taken of Jack and the actress. Ethel decides that Jack is unfaithful to her and when he arrives that evening she sends down word that she cannot see him. Very unhappy, Ethel, while wishing that she had a portrait of Jack to put in her locket, remembers the charming miniature of her little niece. She hastens to the artist who promises to paint it from the photograph and deliver it very soon. The artist is led to believe that the miniature is a likeness of her departed lover.

Jack, by a curious coincidence decides to go to the same artist to have him paint a watch case miniature of Ethel from a large photograph in his possession. So to the surprise and amusement of the artist, there walks into his studio the next day the supposedly dead lover to have a portrait painted of a young lady who is supposed to have joined the angelic choir. The artist surmises that there has been a lovers' quarrel, and he determines to bring the two young people together.

When the two miniatures are finished he purposely mixes up the two portraits and the two bills with the result that Ethel receives her own portrait with a bill for same made out to Jack for $300. Jack receives his own portrait with a bill of $300 charged to Ethel. Each of the lovers is touched by the other's obvious devotion and unchanged affection, and in this softened mood they meet and are reconciled.

THE TRAIL OF THE WILD WOLF (Two parts—Feb. 11). The cast: Jim Dawson (Paul Panzer); Gerrier, the Wild Wolf (Wallis Clarke); Luke Campbell (Frank Smith); Doris Campbell (Sydell Dowling); Meg Campbell (Edith Roberts). Written and produced by Robert F. Hill.

Luke Campbell, a Canadian trapper, has two daughters, Doris and Meg. Gerrier, known as the Wild Wolf, comes to Luke's cabin during the trapper's absence. Doris repels his advances, but he kisses her. Luke encounters Gerrier and warns him to keep away from Doris. Meg rushes off to welcome Jim Dawson, who comes in and presents Doris with a fur cap.

The scene shifts to a logging camp. The cook comes over to Gerrier, and tells him that the woman upstairs is dying. Gerrier goes to the bed on which lies the corpse of a young woman, who has apparently committed suicide. She is another victim of Gerrier, who instructs the cook to get rid of the body by shoving it through a hole in the ice.

We next see the occupants of Luke's cabin engaged in shelling and popping corn. Presently Doyle of the Mounted Police arrives and he receives a cordial welcome. He tells Luke that several women have been stolen lately by Lumber Jacks, and warns him to watch out for Doris and Meg. Soon afterwards Doyle rides off and Jim, after bidding the sisters good night, walks down the trail. We next see Gerrier setting traps in the snow. Meg comes into the scene carrying a gun, and Gerrier shows surprise at seeing her. He tries to make love to her, but Meg makes faces at him and runs away.

As Gerrier is about to set another trap, he sees Luke coming along the trail with a gun and he runs behind a tree, not wishing to be seen by him. Luke falls into the trap and tries in vain to free himself. Gerrier approaches with a malicious smile. After telling Luke that he trapped him so that he can visit Doris, Gerrier goes away.

We next see Doris leaving the cabin. Gerrier sees her do this and crawls around to the cabin door and enters it. He goes to the mantle and takes down a shot gun hanging above it, and removes the charge. Then he returns the gun to its accustomed place. When Doris returns to the cabin, Gerrier closes the door, grabs her, puts his hand over her mouth and gags her. Then he throws her over his shoulder, and walks out of the cabin. Doris struggles violently and finally gets one of her hands free, which enables her to drop hairpins one at a time as Gerrier is carrying her off on his shoulder.

In the woods we see Meg shooting a rabbit. She meets Jim and dares him to catch her as she runs away. They reach the cabin very much out of breath and look for Doris. As they cannot find her, Jim tells Meg that something must have happened to her. Thereupon Jim removes the gun from the mantle, and Meg takes her own gun. On leaving the cabin, Jim finds the hairpins on the ground and they both follow the trail. Out in the woods, Gerrier, still carrying Doris over his shoulder, goes up to Luke and gloats over his capture. The old man struggles to free himself, to protect his daughter. Gerrier sneers at him and, in spite of the struggles of Doris, he carries her off.

Following the trail of the hairpins, Meg and Jim arrive in the woods. They hear Doris calling out for her father. They soon come upon Luke, and Meg starts to release him, while Jim, following the direction pointed out to him by Luke, sees Gerrier carrying Doris at some distance. Jim aims at Gerrier and fires, but as there is no discharge, he examines the gun and discovers the empty barrel. Disgusted he throws the gun away, and crawling up behind Gerrier, he throws the force of his body upon him. This causes Doris to fall from Gerrier's arms. Gerrier starts to draw a gun, but Jim wrenches it from his hand and a fierce fight ensues in the snow.

Doyle, of the Mounted Police, arrives just as Jim has succeeded in getting the best of Gerrier, who lies knocked out on the ground. Doyle takes charge of Gerrier as Luke and Meg arrive on the scene.

MUSTANG.

THE EXTRA MAN AND THE MILK-FED LION (Three Parts—Feb. 4).—The cast: Buck Parvin (Art Acord); James Montague (Lawrence Peyton); William Jennings (Charles James); Ben Leslie (Joe Massey); Charlie Dupree (Hardy Gibson); Jack LaRue (Ashton Dearholt); Myrtle Manners (Dixie Stratton); Tommy (S. William Marshall). Directed by William Bertram.

Buck Parvin gets his friend, Tommy Dennis, a job as extra man, and Tommy's troubles commence with little loss of time. Promptly he falls in love with Myrtle Manners, charming leading lady, and dreams about her, sleeping and waking, until he just simply "can't tend to business." Buck, seeing how the land lies, tips Tommy to the fact that there will be no extra man in Myrtle's pictures while LaRue plays her lead, but Tommy just won't believe him. Tommy leaves a bouquet at Miss Manners' door, but Buck happening along grabs the credit for it, of course. Thus, through several pictures, Tommy adores Myrtle from afar, and then, one wonderful day, he gets her a sandwich and is rewarded with a smile. Hope then springs up anew in his heart.

Monty gets orders from Seligman to "cut out the jungle stuff, but to get some sort of a scenario, using all the animals." Monty is in a quandary, but LaRue helps out with the suggestion that "you never see animals anywhere except in a circus" and so circus stuff goes. Monty bargains with a visiting circus to take the scenes. One of the scenes is to be a thriller, where LaRue rescues Myrtle from the lion's cage, but, even though it is a milk-fed lion, LaRue refused to take any chances with his precious hide. After the first scene they are "stumped."

Miss Manners sees her opportunity to register big, and is willing to take the chance, but she is just a little bit nervous. Lovesick Tommy, not far off, ever watchful, tries to reassure her. However, he is terribly anxious, and when the lion growls, and Myrtle becomes overalarmed, he madly breaks through and rushes to her release.

Of course, the scene is "crabbed," and Myrtle, far from appreciating his heroism, tells him what she thinks of him, in no uncertain terms. Poor boy, he tastes the cup of bitterness to the full—for Monty not only curses him roundly, but hands him his walking papers.

After the final rehearsal for his wedding with Helen Galsworthy, Billy Van Deusen is persuaded by the boys to have a last fling, and they all go down to a cafe. Helen's father, irresistibly drawn to the game of cards, breaks away from his family and on his way to the game drops in on Bessy Footlights and her company. The show is going badly and Bessie's press agent, Jimmy Flash, suggests that she create a little publicity, whereupon Mr. Galsworthy advises that Bessie select some rich young "Johnny" to be the "goat." Bessie agrees and after the show she picks Billy, still celebrating at the cafe. A note is dispatched to him, beseeching him to rescue a lady in distress at her apartment at twelve. The plot is all arranged, one of the men playing the part of nihilist and threatening Bessie with a bomb. Billy to the rescue! After putting the villain to flight, Bessie induces him to linger, and in the meantime Jimmy Flash rushes the sensational story to the paper.

Mrs. Galsworthy, rummaging through her husband's discarded clothes, finds a note in the pocket revealing the place where the card game is taking place, and starts out with Helen to "break it up." Galsworthy is just leaving, when he sees his "better half" and bolts into Bessie's apartment, where he hides under the shower in the bathroom, but not before Mrs. Galsworthy sees him disappearing through the door. She demands to see her husband, although Bessie tries to convince her that she is secreting no husbands. But Mrs. Galsworthy is insistent.

While Bessie is arguing, Billy recovers to some extent from the effects of the drink, and goes into the bathroom to ease his aching head. He turns on the hot water in the shower, to the intense discomfort of Mr. Galsworthy, who proceeds to vent his injured feelings upon Billy. The press agent arrives with a newspaper bearing an account of the story in glaring headlines. Mother and daughter Helen read the paper aghast. Billy and Galsworthy emerge from the bathroom fighting. Galsworthy is dragged off home and Billy turned down cold.

THE LAIRD O'KNEES (Feb. 6).—The cast: Charles Hampton (Orral Humphrey); Billy Barlow (Johnny Gough); Mrs. Bellegraham (Gladys Kingsbury); Rhoda, Her Daughter (Queenie Rosson). Directed by Orral Humphrey.

Vaudeville business has "sure gone to the bad," and Hampton and Barlow, a couple of vaudevillians, are down on their luck. Not so with the wealthy Widow Bellegraham, whose ambition is to marry her daughter Rhoda to a title. She reads that the Laird O'Knees, a Scotch baronet, is to arrive, and plans to capture him, if need be, by force. Leaving a vaudeville agent's office, where they find "nothing doing," Hampton and Barlow come upon a fellow sadly the worse for alcoholic refreshment dressed in Scotch kilts and in the enforced company of a "cop." Hampton follows and finds that the man has been advertising Highland Lad cigarettes. He is stripped of his regalia and Hampton, seizing the opportunity, applies for the job.

Hampton fares forth in his "kilties" distributing cigarettes and is discovered at the pier by Mrs. Bellegraham, who mistakes him for the Laird O'Knees and forthwith drags him away in her limousine. He doesn't know what it's all about, but discretion being the better part of valor, he humors the lady's fancy by accompanying her. When he learns what a personage he is, he telephones Barlow, who advises him to stay in the game and win the girl and her money. Barlow arrives at the Bellegraham home and is introduced as his traveling ocmpanion—the Hon. Fitzroy-Fitzgibbons.

Mrs. Bellegraham proudly presents her distinguished guests to society, and a write-up with their pictures appears in the papers. This comes to the attention of two interested parties—Mrs. Hallroome, minus her room rent, and the manager of the cigarette office, shy one advertising medium and kilts. Both arrive at Mrs. Bellegraham's at a most inopportune moment for the pseudo Laird, and embarrassing identifications follow. Hampton suggests that he tried to explain all along, but the lady wouldn't give him a chance, and departs with dignity, leaving Mrs. Bellegraham crumpled, and Rhoda enjoying the joke.

MAMMY'S ROSE (Feb. 4).—The cast: Beth (Neva Gerber); Frank (Frank Borzage). Directed by James Douglass.

Mammy, a withered old colored woman, sits in her cabin dreaming of long past days, while outside the night is bleak and dreary and the rain is falling fast. Her eyes rest upon a picture of Frank and memory after memory flits through her mind. She recalls how she tended him when an infant; how, even as a boy, he loved Beth, living on a neighboring plantation. Then their engagement and how happy all who loved them were.

Vivid memory brings great sorrow into Mammy's face as she pictures the ravages of the war, which broke out shortly after Frank and Beth were married. Frank was called to defend the South. Then came the time when the little one was expected and Frank receives a letter from his mother asking him to hurry home. With all possible speed he hastens to Beth's bedside, but a stray troop of "Yanks" passing see Frank's horse.

Mose, old Mammy's husband, tries to prevent them from entering the house and is shot down. Frank, hearing the shot, endeavors to make his escape, but is apprehended and a bullet lays him low. From the balcony he falls to the ground, where Mammy finds him. With superhuman strength, Beth rises from her bed, while her mother struggles to keep her back, and rushes to Frank's side, where she and Mammy support him in their arms, and there he dies.

As Mammy lives over these memories a chill passes through her body and she falls back dead. Beth, who had been crazed by the tragedy, has gone to Frank's grave in the rain, when she sees a vision of him and beckons him to follow her to Mammy's cabin. Arriving there, she finds Mammy's soul flown, and the shock kills her. The spirit of Frank enters the cabin, and he and Beth and old Mammy are together at last.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

THE DRIFTER (Gaumont—Five Parts—Feb. 7).—The cast: Harold Derwent (Alexander Gaden); Faith Willis (Lucille Taft); Ed. Bracken (Albert Macklin); Madge (Iva Shepard); Eddie, a Jockey (Stockton Quincy). Scenario by John B. Clymer. Directed by Richard Garrick.

Despite the fact that Harold Derwent is a senior at a Divinity School and in love with Faith Willis, a co-ed, he cannot overcome his passion for gambling. He is a fortunate race-track gambler and pretends to himself that when he becomes a minister he will justify his conduct by giving part of his earnings to the poor. The gambling phase of his character is betrayed to the college authorities by a fellow student, and Harold is forced to leave college. Despite Faith's hope that he will redeem himself, he believes that he is unworthy of her, and goes out into the world alone.

Several years later Harold's success in "beating the bookies" has made him one of the spectacular figures of the American turf. He is found at all the race meets, accompanied by Madge, a scheming woman, who pretends love for him while he is on the crest of his gambling wave. However, fortune turns against Harold, now known as "Pittsburgh Hal," and his fortune ebbs away. Madge leaves him. Harold gives the last horse in his string to his faithful jockey and announces that he is through with gambling. At the railroad station he hands all his money in at the window, asking for a ticket for as far as his money will take him. Securing a ticket for Royalton, on the train he meets William Ashton, who is just going to take charge of the "Church of Our Faith" at Royalton. The men are struck by their remarkable resemblance to each. When the train is wrecked the minister is killed. Tempted by the opportunity to get back into the ministry, Harold takes the name of William Ashton and becomes pastor of the Royalton church.

He receives a letter from Ashton's wife, who had hurried to the bedside of her dying father. Later, Faith, who had married Ashton, comes to join her husband, and, of course, recognizes Harold. For his sake she remains silent, seeming his wife in the eyes of the parishioners. A thief confesses to the minister that he has committed a burglary. Harold goes with him to the hiding place of the jewels and finds them strangely familiar. When he returns the plunder he discovers that the jewels are Madge's. Madge immediately recognizes her former lover. Proceeding to blackmail him, she secures all the money he possesses. Finally she persuades him to bet $15,000 held as a trust fund on a race at the Royalton meet. Harold turns the money over to the jockey, not recognizing his old boy, Eddie.

Madge produces a child, which she claims is the son of Harold. The minister does not know what to do, but hopes that he will be able finally to purchase Madge's silence by his winnings from the race. His horse loses, the jockey being injured and taken to a hospital. A minister is sent for and Harold responds. He now recognizes Eddie, who tells him that he did not bet the money, but hid it in a stall. Harold recovers the money, and at the same time Eddie's mother comes to ask for the baby which she had lent Madge, the child being Eddie's little brother.

Thus Madge is foiled just when she saw her scheme successful. She plays her final card, declaring that the minister and the notorious "Pittsburgh Hal" are one and the same. Faith stands by the man whom the church knows only as her husband, and her word is believed against that of Madge. Faith and Harold go to a distant city and are quietly married. Then they return to the Church of Our Faith at Royalton and continue their good work, Harold having been forever cured of his passion for gambling.

BETRAYED (Thanhouser—Five Parts—Jan. 29.)—The cast: Indian Girl (Grace De Carlton); Her Brother (Robert Whittier); Brother's Friend (Roy Pilcher); His Sister (Gladys Leslie).

Heart-of-Oak, an Indian, shakes the dust of a Western reservation for a college career in the East. Heart-of-Oak is the son of a noted chief, and has taken the preservation of his race deeply at heart. His younger sister, Little Fawn, worships him. At college the Indian quickly becomes a favorite. He wins a place on the 'varsity crew, and finds a friend in a fellow oarsman, Granville Wingham, a young American of wealthy parents. Granville's sister, Carolyn, also has a high regard for Heart-of-Oak—though the attachment never becomes romantic, Carolyn being betrothed to a young man whom she has known since childhood.

Little Fawn wins a scholarship in the Indian school in the West, and surprises her brother by announcing that she is ready to return East with him the second year to share his studies. Carolyn befriends Little Fawn in her strange surroundings. At the sophomore ball, dressed in an Indian costume, she innocently captures the admiration of Granville. On their return West for the summer Little Fawn secretly cherishes memories of the handsome white student who has covertly made love to her.

Wingham, the elder, owns a ranch near the reservation. His son and daughter visit the property. They see a great deal of Heart-of-Oak and his sister. With deep foreboding the Indian watches Little Fawn and his friend. He talks gravely with the girl, telling her that for the sake of her own people she should not think of marriage outside her ancestral race. The Indian puts his trust in his college friend, whom he believes to be the soul of honor.

When the disillusionment comes Heart-of-Oak tracks the runaways into the wilderness. The deep-rooted passion of the redskin for revenge takes possession of this educated Winnebago, who reverts to the type of his savage forebears. Ordering his sister into the hills, he closes in ferocious man-to-man battle with her lover—until the white man, bound and helpless, lies at the mercy of his erstwhile friend. Meanwhile, Carolyn has been summoned by the ruthless Indian. His vengeance is to be complete. But Little Fawn, driven back to the place by anxiety for the man she loves, is in time to sacrifice her own life for the safety of the white woman. His fury quenched by the sight of his sister, dead at his feet, Heart-of-Oak commands his victims to return to their own people—that he may be alone with his next of kin.

THE SOUL'S CYCLE (Centaur -Five Parts—Feb. 12).—The cast: Nadia, the daughter of a rich Greek, and later Agnes, the daughter of a rich American (Margaret Gibson); Lucian, a Greek nobleman, and later a rich Wall Street broker by the name of Arthur (John Oaker); Syrus, the Father of Nadia (George Claire, Jr.); Theron, a Grecian Senator who sells his soul to Evil and is condemned to roam the earth with the beasts—later the lion (George Stanley); Henry Kimball, rival for the hand of Agnes, and the Evil One of the later story (Roy Watson). Written by Theodosia Harris. Directed by Ulysses Davis.

In the ancient philosophies and religions the idea of reincarnation and transmigration of the soul played a large part. This photoplay is founded on the assumption that in the immortality of the soul many cycles must be re-lived to round out its perfection, and when one defiles the divine law he must go back to first principle, and even into the animal form, to work up again to his former estate.

The story involves two epochs. It begins in the old Grecian time and revolves around one Theron, a Grecian Senator who has grown old, and to whom honor has come, but not love. Nadia, the innocent young daughter of a Greek nobleman, inspires passion in his breast, and he sells his soul to the evil of hatred and revenge when she scorns his advances and gives her heart to the poetic Lucian. The father of Nadia is ambitious and connives with the Senator to crush youth and love. "Love laughs at locksmiths" and the young people elope. Then the Senator sets loose the dogs of hatred and has them brought by his slaves to a burning crater, into which he throws them. For this sin the unseen arbiter of souls condemns him to enter the body of a lion and to roam the earth even unto the end of time, unless he shall save youth and love even as he has killed them.

The story then switches to events of a century later. Youth and love have been reincarnated into a lovely young daughter of an American millionaire and into the soul of a young broker on Wall Street. The young broker has, as trophy of his African travels, a magnificent lion, which he installs in his mansion. When he and the young girl meet they seem to live over a dream of some olden time. Love draws them together and they are married, but the rival of the young broker allows hatred to possess him and sets about to ruin him.

In the meantime, the young wife has a profound influence over the magnificent beast. At the crisis of her husband's fortune a vision of a terrible abyss comes to her as a warning, and she persuades her husband to change his order for stock. This vision is the unseen message of the Senator, speaking through the lion. The other young broker, thinking to triumph over his helpless victim goes to the house and tells her that her husband is ruined. The husband returns and chastises him for an insult to his wife. Leaving the room, the villain enters the room where the lion is caged. A hideous revenge forms itself in his mind. He lets the lion loose, but instead of killing the young people the lion seems to have elected himself their protector, for he leaves the room at the young wife's command and returns to the other room and kills the rival, apparently stamping out evil and saving youth and love. His crime of centuries ago is thus atoned and the spirit rises for a moment triumphant; but the endless cycle of justice goes on and the modern man must work out his destiny even as has the ancient.

FALSTAFF.

LUCKY LARRY'S LADY LOVE (Jan. 25).—The cast: Larry (Boyd Marshall); Lulu (Louise Emerald Bates); Her Father (Riley Chamberlin); Lulu's Admirers (Bert Delaney and George Marlo).

In telling her neighbors how she became acquainted with her husband, Larry, the wife says: "Mr. Jenkins was calling on me, and up to that time I rather liked Mr. Jenkins. But a terrible bear escaped from its keeper, and got into the house. Mr. Jenkins should have protected me. but he proved to be a terrible coward.. Then Larry arrived. He calmly walked over to the bear, picked up its leash, and returned the animal to its owner.

"That same night he came to the rescue again. There was a burglar in our house, and Larry learned of it. He found the burglar and knocked him unconscious. But the money and jewelry belonging to my father which the burglar had stolen and which the police admitted they could not find, still remained a mystery. Larry said he would find it and he did; the money and the precious stones were at the bottom of the well."

The "Mr. Jenkins" referred to tells a different story. He is known locally as "Gloomy Jenkins," and he hates Larry. He tells this yarn:

"I made a fool of myself about that bear, but I knew it was a bear. Larry is very nearsighted and when he came into the house that day he dropped his glasses. He thought the bear was a dog, and nobody is afraid of dogs. That is how he scored the first time.

"I gave him the other chance by trying to play a practical joke on him. Lulu's old man hates music. I—I mean a friend of mine—tried to serenade the girl, and the old man threw shoes at him. I thought it would be fun to get Larry beaten up, and I let him know that the girl doted on music. So he got his flute and went around there to play.

"He scared the burglar nearly to death, and he tried to escape. Then he tumbled over Larry, and would have got away, only one of Larry's buttons caught on the other chap's sleeve. When Larry got free, the burglar fell against the well curb, and a handkerchief full of the old man's jewels dropped down. None of us saw it. Then Larry tried to escape, but he stumbled and the burglar fell over him, and the old man and the police arrived in time to believe Larry had done something noble."

But none of his neighbors believes the story of "Gloomy" Jenkins. He did not get the girl and he is bitter. That explains his hateful words.

A CLEVER COLLIE'S COME-BACK (Feb. 1). The cast: Wife (Frances Keyes); Husband (George Marlo); Mandy (Mattie Keen); Collie ("Lady").

The pedestrian smiled as he saw the group of dogs in the vestibule of the apartment house. One of the animals, a collie, was barking, the others seemed to be listening. And the spectator passed on, never dreaming of the little drama that was being enacted under his eyes.

The collie, as it later, developed, was telling his canine friends that he was going, very much against his will, to remove to the country. His owner, it seemed, had discovered a place in the rural district, and was taking his family there.

"I'll make them hate the country," boasted the collie, and the other dogs laughed. (It is very humiliating to make a bombastic statement, and hear the dogs laugh in consequence.)

Well, the family moved to the country, and found that they had taken a haunted house. The husband and his wife were not superstitious, their baby was too young to be, and the only person who worried at first was Mandy, their old darkey servant. Just the same it did not take them any time to believe in ghosts, and they soon moved to their city flat.

"My dear, it was terrible," the wife confided to an interested friend. "There must be something in Spiritualism after all. One night Mandy aroused us with her screams for help. She said a ghost had pulled all the bedclothes off her, and another ghost had blown out the candle. My husband and I laughed at that, of course, but while the dear boy stood in the corridor, some horrible thing blew out his candle. Then when we got back to our room, we found that the baby was missing. After a search we discovered him hidden in our bed. He never could have got out of the crib alone. The next day I left him in his carriage and it ran away. When I overtook the carriage it was empty. Then Mandy came in with a steak she had bought in the village, and somehow it changed into a pair of her corsets. There were other terrible things happened, and we moved."

As the hostess escorted her guest to the door, the latter glanced at a number of dogs in the lobby. The collie seemed to be addressing them. "What funny dogs," said the visitor, "they seem to be laughing."

She did not know that the collie was saying: "Well, didn't I make good?" and explaining to the other animals how he had starred as a ghost.

HARRY'S HAPPY HONEYMOON (Feb. 3).—The cast: Harry (Jay Yorke); His Bride (Isolde Illian); Her Mother (Lydia Mead); Mischievious College Boy (Charles Emerson); Matt, His Chum (Lord McCaskill).

A bride and groom escaped from their persecutors and boarded a train, free, for the moment, from pursuit. The wedding guests, however, learned the name of the town at which the couple intended to spend their honeymoon. The town also boasted a thriving college, whose students were noted as the "prize cut-ups" of the state. One of the guests, a former graduate of the college, wired the students, describing the honeymooners and asking the boys to make their stay in town as lively as possible.

The wedding guests, however, had not reckoned upon a baby, a very strenuous child, who got on the train with his proud mother. The bride took a great fancy to the child, much to her husband's disgust. The strenuous child managed to throw the bridegroom's hat out of the window, and later the child followed it with his nursing bottle, tore the flowers from the bride's hat and made a nuisance of himself generally.

The mother of the baby got off at a railway station to get some milk for her child and the train started before her return, so the bride and groom were left with the baby on their hands. At first it proved to be somewhat of a blessing, for when they arrived at their destination and discovered that the college boys were waiting for them, the devastation of their headgear by the baby, convinced the would-be hazers that they could not be the sought-for honeymooners, but merely a staid married couple. They went to the hotel and there their troubles began.

A child had been kidnapped several days before, and the description of the child and the man and woman suspect tallied very closely with that of the honeymooners and their little charge. The town constable called upon the bride and groom and placed them under arrest. At the psychological moment, however, the frantic mother turned up and claimed her child, while the college students made prisoners of the bride and groom and did their best to make their visit to the town as spectacular and memorable as possible.

BEATEN AT THE BATH (Jan. 27).—The cast: The Girl (Barbara Gilroy); Her Fiance (Jay Yorke); Wealthy Banker (Arthur Cunningham); Robber (Billy Swan); Maid (Francis Keyes).

The girl was the daughter of a prosperous business man, and the young man whom she promised to wed was a clerk whose salary was barely large enough to support himself. The two young people felt that "father" should help them solve their little problem by taking the young man into his office, but when the subject was broached to the elderly gentleman he refused. He had other plans for his daughter, as a wealthy and very desirable suitor had appeared. The new-comer was an elderly banker, and his possession of an ample supply of this world's goods was all that "father" desired for his child. The girl did not care for her elderly suitor, but another woman did. She was the elderly housemaid in the girl's home. She did not attempt to disguise her feelings, much to the alarm and dismay of the unwilling captor of her heart.

"Father" told the young man that if he desired to win his daughter he must show $1,000 in savings. He made this condition fully aware that the youth did not have anything like that amount saved. For two months the boy worked and saved, but was still eight hundred dollars short of the required amount. One day he went to a Turkish bath, and his visit there resulted in winning success.

That day a stranger jostled the wealthy banker in the street and disappeared with the elderly suitor's watch. The only clue to the robber was a brief glance of his back. The vanishing back was clad in a coat of very loud checked cloth, and when the banker saw it disappear into a Turkish bath he felt sure that he had run his quarry to earth. The very unsympathetic clerk at the bath refused to let the banker search the establishment unless he first took a bath. The banker garbed himself in a sheet and entered the hot room. There he found the youthful suitor and another man whom he did not recognize, but who was really the owner of the loud checked suit and the man who had relieved him of his watch.

Inquiries made by the banker soon made the thief aware that he was in danger, and, watching his opportunity, he secured possession of the young man's key long enough to open his dressing room and secure possession of his clothes.

In the meantime the elderly banker was having a most agonizing time, for a burly bath attendant, bribed by his rival, had locked the doors of the hot room and turned the heat on full tilt. The elderly man danced up and down the hot room until his tormentors took pity on him and released him, but he was immediately seized by the attendant and rushed into another torture chamber.

When the young man went to his dressing room he discovered that his clothes had vanished and in their place was a suit of loud checked cloth. He complained of the disappearance at the office and then left the bath, but not before the elderly banker had recognized the suit and come to the conclusion that his youthful rival was the man who had stolen his watch. The youth met his sweetheart, her father, and the faithful housemaid on the street and was chatting gaily with the girl when the banker entered with a policeman. The young man was arrested and searched and the missing property found upon him. It would have gone hard with him if the real culprit had not been arrested, and the boy's innocence proved.

So the banker had to face a suit for false arrest which the boy could have brought against him, or settle out of court, and he wisely did this, giving the youth his check for $800. "Father" had to give his consent to his daughter's marriage to the man she loved—while as for the banker—well, he ran fast and far, but not fast and far enough to out distance the affectionate maid servant, who captured him and bore him off triumphantly to the altar.

THANHOUSER.

THE BURGLARS' PICNIC (Three Parts—Jan. 26).—The cast: Twins (Marion and Madeline Fairbanks); Their Father (Jack Gilmore); Professor (William Burt); Crooks (John Lehnberg, Billy Swan); Deputies (Everett Sullivan and Charles Turner).

The twins lead a midnight expedition from Miss Beardsley's into the woods to revel in a moonlight picnic. One of the professors sees them vanishing thither, carrying a big basket. In dressing gown and slippers he gives chase. The old, near-sighted professor loses one of his slippers and cuts his foot on his broken glasses. Discovering his plight, the girls take pity on him. They try to overtake him. Meanwhile, the professor comes upon a deserted house. He mistakes two figures on the porch for the runaway twins. One of them takes to the woods. The other darts indoors, followed by the professor When the twins reach the place they discover under a window a bag of loot, and on the sill a bloody footprint.

Realizing that burglars have got the professor, and feeling that they are to blame, Marian and Madeline bravely enter the house. Then is enacted a thrilling drama, in which the rest of the picnic party fortunately arrives to reinforce the twins, and by the time the police arrives the burglars are found suffocating under an avalanche of girls.

At Christmas time, going home on the train, the twins see their burglars again. They are marched on board by two deputies, taking them to state prison, and one of the crooks attempts to attack Marion and Madeline. The other one, however, seems so sincerely contrite, that the twins induce the deputy to loosen the shackle about his wrist. The train is wrecked. The two deputies and one of the burglars are killed. But the twins are saved. They conceal the identity of the other burglar from inquisitive reporters and take him home. Their father gives the man a chance on his estate. The governor is prevailed upon to pardon the former crook. Today he is the twins' father's chauffeur.

THE KNOTTED CORD (Three Parts—Feb. 2).—The cast: Detective (Bert Delaney); Millionaire (Ernest H. Ward); His Daughter (Mignon Anderson); Chief of Knotted Cord Gang (Yale Benner); Secretary to Detective (William Burt).

For months the Knotted Cord Gang left a wake of death. Two millionaires had been strangled and beside their dead bodies the police found a knotted cord. Neilson, a young detective, worked night and day on the case. One day he received the sign—the knotted cord that always warned of the death to come. That same day another millionaire was threatened with death. Neilson went to the chief of police and asked the supercilious head of the force if he was going to work with or against him. The chief said that he would accompany the young detective to the millionaire's house, but did not believe that any harm would be done, as the residence was surrounded with police. At the millionaire's home Neilson met the daughter of the millionaire—and the greatest incentive of all came into his life.

A policeman on guard before the library door told them that no one entered the library for two hours and the millionaire was at work inside. The young detective knocked at the door. There was no response. He burst open the door. And inside the millionaire was dead—strangled by the knotted cord of death. The police were baffled. But the keen eyes of the young detective found the clever way the murderer had secured admission. Under the great grand-father's clock in the corner the floor had been cut away. A furnace man was missing and he had been gone an hour before the police discovered the murder. Wildly they went on his trail. When the young detective left the millionaire's daughter, after doing all he could to alleviate her grief, to start upon the trail the crafty power of the gang was shown. The girl's maid was their agent. She told them all that had happened. The young detective's secretary carried word to the chief of the murderers. And when the detective, by clever work, almost trapped the maid the jealous chief of police frustrated him.

The plotters resolved on a bold stroke. They gave the maid instructions to imitate the daughter's voice, call the detective on the phone and lure him to the Old Hill shack. The young detective got the message. He rushed to his car and in. But in a sleigh that was waiting the arch criminals waited to see that their plan worked. They saw him rush from the house and into his car. His secretary came after, watched him off, then joined them. The snow and a shorter route gave the plotters time to set their trap. They caught him, and in the lonely shack prepared for him a crafty deathtrap that would enable them to be far away and out of danger when he was murdered.

But their desire for vengeance over-reached itself. The girl was to be told where to find the detective when it was too late. But she got the word in time and went hurriedly to the rescue. But at the last minute of time, she was thrown head-long from the sleigh, and lay unconscious on the road.

At the shack the detective's secretary burst in, released him, and then threw up his hands at the order of the police chief. The detective, smiled, and puts his arm around his secretary's shoulder. "He only pretended to betray me so I could round up the whole gang," he explained. "We had to be careful every minute for fear of spies."

Then the girl came in, her arm broken, her face white with fear for the safety of the man who had been the one ray of light in the darkness that had come into her life. He ran to her, put his arms about her. In her eyes he saw the thing he wished to see. In answer to her look of joyous surprise at seeing him safe he smiled.

"I knew it was a plant when they pretended to telephone from a place like this," he explained.

And in strong cells the members of the gang, who had been caught in the city by the secretary and the police before they came to the rescue, cursed fate—and the young detective.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME, NO. 6 ("Helen's Wild Ride"—Two Parts—Jan. 31).—Helen goes to Rhinelander's hut to deliver a telegram, and while the construction boss is reading it, she takes great delight in playing with the little black and white puppy which is Rhinelander's sole companion. Rhinelander is highly elated over the telegram which reads: "Monthly payroll on Number Four." When Helen returns to Signal, he accompanies her in high spirits, leaving the dog to "keep house a few minutes."

The canine sniffs around and finally grabs the telegram in his teeth. His attention is diverted by a squirrel which he chases outside a considerable distance. His course takes him past Spike, brooding over his misfortunes. The telegram drops at Spike's feet. He picks it up, reads it, and reports to Seagrue, who decides that the money must be held up until a general strike can be pulled off in Rhinelander's camp.

Spike telephones two confederates, Sykes and his chum by the name of Dan, and they arrive at Signal the following morning on Number Four, simultaneously with the package of money.

Rhinelander instructs the agent to keep the money in the station safe over night, as he has no safe place for it. Accidentally a bottle of ink is turned over on the money but Helen succeeds in cleaning off some of it before the money is put away. The two cracksmen are joined by a third, known as "the Bat." A consultation is held at Rhinelander's camp with Spike, with the result that that evening they break into the telegraph office, manipulate and open the safe and deliver the money into Seagrue's hands. Seagrue sends Bat, with the money, to Oceanside to keep under cover, while Spike and the two other thieves stir up a strike the following day after Rhinelander finds that his payroll has been stolen. Accidentally the camp is set on fire and great clouds of smoke envenlope the railroad line which runs past it.

Sykes and Dan buy railroad tickets from Helen at Signal and start back to Oceanside. Helen is astonished to note an inkstain on the money, which gives her a clue and she jumps on a little speeder car and follows the train. She dashes at a terrific speed through the great clouds of smoke coming from the fire, finally overtakes the train and springs on the rear platform. The conductor and brakeman aid her in searching for the thieves, but are too methodical. As the train crosses the bridge over the San Pablo, Sykes and Dan make a tremendous leap into the water below. Helen sights them and jumps off the train on the bridge. Too late she notices they are swimming for the nearest bank. The jacknife bridge is already opening to admit a waiting boat and she reaches the end of the draw after it has risen many feet above the abutment. She makes a daring leap and picks herself up, badly bruised and shaken, and catches a street car on which the thieves are endeavoring to elude further pursuit.

In the city she summons an officer and follows the thieves to the house where they join Bat. Bat rushes Sykes and Dan to the roof, slamming his door. A tremendous struggle on the roof results in one of the thieves falling from the building while the officer and Sykes crash through a skylight into Bat's room. Helen saves the officer by jumping into the room in time to level a revolver at Bat's heart. Practically all the money is discovered on his person and is returned to Rhinelander by Helen, via a swift automobile dash with the officer. Peace is once more restored in the half-burned camp.

VOGUE.

SAMMY'S DOUGH-FULL ROMANCE (Jan. 23).—The cast: Sammy (Sammy Burns); Lena (Lillian Hamilton); Mr. Schultz (Benjamin Horning); Baron von Swindleheimer (H. J. Richardson); Baker (Raymond Zell).

Sammy, expert baker, is in love with Lena Schultz, daughter of his employer. Schultz, however, aspires that Lena shall marry a title. He encourages the advances of the Baron von Swindleheimer. Lena becomes suspicious of the genuineness of the "Baron's" claims to the nobility. So she advises her sweetheart of her father's conspiracy. Sammy interferes and finds himself thrown out of a job. Schultz advertising for a new baker, the lovers concoct a scheme. Sammy, in disguise, obtains the position and proceeds to ruin Schultz's business by putting too much yeast in the biscuits, over-doing the baking-powder act, and kneading limburger cheese in the bread.

The customers riot. Schultz and the bogus baron go after Sammy with a gun. The baker, however, retaliates by browning von Swindleheimer to a fine crisp in the oven. Then he begins to shoot holes in the doughnuts. The baron is rescued, and shakes the flour from his soles forever. Lena persuades her father that the only way to save them now from bankruptcy is to reinstate Sammy. With the return of the expert baker, the same wonderful bakings bring back a bigger custom than ever. Sammy agrees to continue his services on condition that Schultz takes him into partnership and gives him Lena for his bride.

"HE THOUGHT HE WENT TO WAR (Jan. 30).—The cast: Bill Jenkins (Chas. H. France); Dorothy Fairfax (Lillian B. Leighton); General Fairfax (Russell Powell).

Bill Jenkins goes to sleep and dreams that he enlists as a soldier. He is a stupid subject and the commanding officer has to resort to violence to get him to obey orders. The general's daughter joins the regiment, much to the delight of Bill. When the call for mess is given, Bill is the first to arrive at the mess tent. As General Fairfax arrives with the troops. Bill is hastily devouring a pie. General Fairfax orders him to the guardhouse. Later the general notes a distant attack being made by one of the enemy's troops on his daughter. Bill, by a great effort, has parted the bars of his prison and volunteers to save the daughter single-handed. He dashes on horseback without weapons.

After traveling some distance, by driving the horse backwards at a terrific speed, he spies a cool spot under a tree. Leaving his horse to browse he lays himself down to slumber. The daughter works out her own salvation and returns to the camp. When Bill returns he starts to relate wonderful feats he has performed. The general, knowing his tale to be untrue, orders him to the guardhouse again, while the daughter pleads for him in vain. Jenkins is to be shot at sunrise. The daughter, visiting the tents, removes the cartridges from the rifles, extracts the bullets and replaces the cartridges. Bill is marched to the execution grounds. He is aware of everything that has happened.

The grave is dug. When the soldiers fire Bill pretends to be shot, and after dusting of the stretcher with his hat collapses upon it. Not wanting to be buried alive he springs away quickly and attempts to escape. Then he is put into the mouth of a cannon and shot into the enemy's camp. He escapes again and returns to General Fairfax, who decides to execute Bill himself. He starts to prod Bill with his sword when Bill wakes up from his dream and finds the saloon-keeper poking him in the ribs with a long stick.

CUB.

THE GIRL OF HIS DREAMS (Jan. 21).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Father (Jefferson Osborne); Mother (Janet Sully); Gladys (Belle Bennett); Ragamuffin (Louise Horner).

Flirtatious Jerry "makes a mash on" pretty Gladys while both are viewing a billboard displaying handsome posters of Julius Caesar, advertised for production in a ten-twent'-thirt' house. Particularly impressed is Jerry with the resemblance of the picture of a beautiful Roman maiden to Gladys. Agreeing to meet again, they separate, Gladys for home, Jerry for a nap, which he proceeds to enjoy in a straw-filled packing case he finds in a nearby alley and (as it must happen for always-getting-into-trouble Jerry) alongside the cache of a lot of loot hidden there by a couple of burglars.

Jerry dreams he is a Roman emperor and that he and Gladys are having a great time, winding up with his slaves putting him to bed in the royal chamber. It is this handling of him, the patting of the royal bedclothes about him, that wakes him, and he discovers that some one is really handling him, for a couple of policemen are putting handcuffs on him, believing him to be the burglar they are looking for. This is not the end, however. He proves an alibi, his release, and joins in the search of the cracksmen.

Then follows some thrilling as well as comical scenes. Jerry discovers the robbers' den; valiantly attacks them; they knock him unconscious, set fire to the place, and escape. Jerry revives when a flood of water is poured on him from the firemen's hose, and the instant he escapes from the building there is a terrible explosion caused by combustibles in it. Jerry keeps going after the crooks, gets them; the loot is recovered; it had been stolen from Gladys' home, and Jerry makes himself solid.

AROUND THE WORLD (Jan. 28).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Cannibal Chief (George George); First Cannibal (Louis FitzRoy); Second Cannibal (Jefferson Osborne).

Peacefully slumbering Jerry is disturbed, first by a cop and a nurse girl wheeling a baby, and then by a colored cop with a negro woman, who also has a baby. Incensed, Jerry determines to have his revenge and changes the babies. Jerry then comes upon a sargeant. He conducts him back to the park bench. Upon the appearance of the sergeant the two cops rush off. The negro woman exits with the white baby, while the white nurse leaves with the colored baby. Consternation reigns when the parents discover the substitution. The black cop and the white cop catch a glimpse of Jerry in the background. They soon catch him.

A fight ensues. Two white cops rush up and in the general mix-up Jerry makes his getaway. He soon comes upon an aeroplane, gets into the car and soars upward. Jerry arrives over an island inhabited by cannibals, who have all the modern improvements. The cannibals discover Jerry and notify their chief by telephone. Acting under the instructions of the chief, who arrives upon the scene in his racing car, the cannibals fire and the machine falls to earth.

Jerry is carried to a large kettle and forced to witness a cannibal dance. He knocks the chief into the kettle and dashes off. In his mad dash for life Jerry comes to the chief's tent. Darting inside he comes upon a beautiful princess, whom the chief is holding captive. She hides him in a suit of armor. The chief enters the tent. While he is questioning the princess, Jerry prods him with a spear. The chief angrily accuses one of his men. Jerry then prods the other man and causes a general fight. Taking advantage of the confusion, Jerry escapes with the princess. The chief's racer is standing outside the tent. Jerry helps the princess into the car and drives safely away just as the chief and his men run out of the tent.

NOVELTY.

MR. BUMPS, COMMUTER (Jan. 21).—Bumps oversleeps. An escaped convict enters his room, attaches to Bumps' ankle his own ball and chain, the lock of which he has picked with a hair pin; exchanges his striped garb for the suburbanite's suit, throws the rest of Bumps' clothes out of the window—and makes a clean get-away. Bumps, no help for it, on hearing his train whistle, scrambles into the convict's costume and races for the depot

He soon has the constable and the prison guard at his heels. Missing the train, a hand engine is pressed into service. After many exciting adventures, Bumps reaches the office at 4:30. Caught flirting with the head stenographer, Bumps is uniquely punished by his employer, who forces him to take the young lady shopping and spend all his money on her. At the station he meets his wife. She has a ticket, but no cash for her husband's fare. He is obliged to foot it home—and carry all Mrs. Bumps' bundles.

GAUMONT.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 19—"The Dells of Wisconsin"—Jan. 23).—In the summer time the dells of the Wisconsin River offer an ever-changing picture of vari-colored cliffs rising sheer from the boiling water of the river, of weird canyons and gulches and grotesquely carved rocks, of overhanging banks, green with foliage of trees and vines, and brightened by the presence of modest wild flowers, and again a panorama of rolling fields and meadows, from which, here and there, rises the smoke of a farmer's house.

In the winter time the winding river, the rocky crags, the tinkling waterfalls have been turned by frost and cold into fairy grottoes of delicately wrought ice. The vines hang dead and brown, and the trees, all but the pines, have lost their handsome summer gowns.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (On same reel as foregoing).—In the second half of the reel, "Pa" McGinnis will carry through some of his mirth-provoking attempts at "Keeping Up With the Joneses" in Harry Palmer's animated cartoon by that title.

THE RED CIRCLE (No. 6, "False Colors"—Balboa—Two Parts—Jan. 22).—Detective Lamar gets his first valuable clue in connection with the Red Circle in this chapter. Lamar is less suspicious of June than at any other time because June herself loses a valuable necklace through the operations of the person or persons with the "Red Circle" brand. This chapter shows June concealed after her theft of some terrible war secrets and the arrest of the victims charged with annoying women in their search for the hand with the "eed circle." At a ball that evening June and Lamar are seated on a settee when in a mirror before them they see a red circled hand come from behind some draperies in back of them and unfasten and successfully get away with June's necklace. Next morning Mary, June's old nurse and companion, points out to them a woman she had seen washing a red circle from her hand the night before. Lamar follows the woman to the city.

THE RED CIRCLÆ—No. 7—("Two Captives"—Two Parts—Balboa—Jan. 29). A red circle birthmark comes and goes on the hand of June Travis, who learns from her nurse that she is a member of the supposedly extinct Borden family of crooks. The secret is kept from Mrs. Travis, June's "mother." Detective Lamar, baffled by June's benevolent crimes, trails Alma La Salle, a society thief, who under orders from "Smiling" Sam, a jewel fence and reformed crook, robs guests at the Beach hotel ball, using a painted red circle as a blind. June, too, is a victim, losing a necklace.

Leaving the hotel the next morning Alma is arrested by Lamar on suspicion of being implicated in the thefts. His suspicions are confirmed when, at the police station, the officers find jewels hidden in the heel of an old shoe which she carries. Thus Lamar decides that "Smiling" Sam is implicated and raids the shop of the latter.

Meanwhile, on the beach near her home, June spies a monkey with an organ grinder and immediately while the master is asleep, releases the animal. Mary throws the officers off the scent and again June manages to escape. But Lamar is sorely troubled at the latest red circle crime. Interesting developments follow in the next chapter.

THE HORRORS OF WAR (Pathe—Three parts—January 24.)—The opening scenes show the bombardment of a Turkish town by the Russian fleet in the Black Sea. This view was taken from the deck of a Russian battleship and the details of loading the huge guns, firing them, and watching the results of their deadly accuracy are all horribly apparent. A whole town bursts into flames, and a new target is sought. A steamer is sighted in the distance making hurriedly for port, and at once it becomes the mark of broadside after broadside of volleys. The first shots tear up the water about the ship and the next instant the vessel is slapped as by a vindictive Triton—a cloud of smoke—she lists grotesquely—shivers and splinters as a few more shells find their mark, and then settles sickening, head first to her final port.

Another scene shows a narrow mountain pass walled on one side by unscalable cliffs and sheering off on the other into a gaping precipice, piled high with the dead of a whole Turkish force which, unable to advance or retreat, was cut to pieces by withering artillery fire. A touching scene is one where a mother and daughter of a dead soldier mourn beside his freshly turned grave.

The deadly French 75-centimetre gun in action, a giant steel bridge wrecked to prevent the advance of the enemy's troops, the throwing of hand grenades over the short distance that separates the French from the German trenches, a barbed wire entanglement designed to tear to pieces the advancing enemy, a single war missile powerful enough to kill a regiment, a horse hurled by a shell explosion high into a tree-top, the new French aeroplane gun in action trying to bring down an enemy aviator, and the decoration of those who gave their eyes as toll to Mars, are but a few of the vivid scenes that make up this film.

HEAD-DRESSES OF HOLLAND (Photocolor—Jan. 24).—This subject gives us a good idea of just what kind of millinery appears most pleasing to the Dutch women. In the country the women still wear the caps for which they are famous. To be sure, there are a great variety of these, some in lace, some trimmed with feathers, some with silver, and so on down the line of possible and sometimes impossible trimmings.

THE AU SABLE CHASM "Picturesque America" (Globe—On Same Reel As Foregoing).—Besides Niagara Falls, New York State has other natural wonders that the careful tourist does not fail to see. One in particular is worth every moment of the time spent in viewing it. This is Au Sable Chasm several miles from Port-Kent-on-Lake Champlain. The length of the canon from Rainbow Falls at the entrance to the "Sentinel" where the passengers take the boat through the Grand Flume, is something over a mile. The walls rise perpendicularly over a hundred feet on either side. Stone galleries and bridges make the trip a safe one.

HAZEL KIRKE (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Jan. 28).—Hazel Kirke, daughter of Dunstan Kirke, a miller, is sent off to be educated by Squire Rooney, who has promised to marry her upon her return. All this in repayment for a small sum which Rodney advanced to save the old mill from the auction block. Five years later, near the end of her school years, she meets Arthur Carringford. At home again, she renews her promise to Rodney. Some days later, Arthur on a hunting trip, meets with an accident near the mill, and is confined there for some weeks, during which time a new friendship springs up between the two. Some time later, when Rodney and Dunstan see Hazel and Arthur embracing, Dunstan denounces them and sends them away.

Arthur's mother, to save the family fortune, wishes Arthur to marry Maude, her ward, who is loved by Pittacus Greene, and whose fortune was squandered by the elder Carringford before his death. She sends Pittacus and Arthur's valet to dissuade Arthur from marrying Hazel, and they arrive as the two are coming away. At a nearby village, the valet, thinking the ceremony is to be a fake, goes to a saloon for a "minister." He then notifies Mrs. Carringford by letter. A few weeks later that lady arrives during Arthur's absence and tells Hazel that she has been duped.

The girl, distracted, runs away and upon Arthur's return the panic-stricken mother tells of the plot and passes away from a heart attack. After a day or two's search for Hazel, Arthur rides toward home, stopping at a small church. The parson proves to be the one who married them and he tells of his good work in the slums of nearby towns disguised as a "tough." The two ride off to the mill hoping to meet Hazel. Unknown to the young people, Dunstan's terrible denunciation of them has left him sightless and it is before Hazel's blinded father that the two are reunited with parental blessing, only after Arthur has rescued Hazel from the icy millpond waters into which she had thrown herself.

SHOOTING AT RANDOM (Starlight—Jan. 29).—Heinie and Louie manage to steal a good-size gun from a local "three balls" shop and take it up the trail to Nimrod. Mrs. Flyhigh, a well-known society leader of the neighborhood, is out taking the air the same afternoon and runs afoul of a footpad. The latter is in the act of robbing the fair lady, when the gun, which Heinie happens to be cleaning at the moment, explodes and wounds the desperado, causing him to take to his heels.

Of course, Heinie "saves" the lady's life with a well directed shot, and although that was not his intention when the gun went off, he receives full credit for it. She takes him to her home and is giving him the proper adulation that heroes are wont to receive, when Louie, who has been left out in the cold, runs for Mr. Flyhigh, telling him that his wife is entertaining a stranger.

Friend husband runs for his gun and Louie, to help along the good work, buys a bomb at a local bomb factory. This he hurls into the once happy home and blows it to atoms.

Making "Movie Fans"

Most progressive newspapers are now conducting motion picture departments wherein are printed reviews of the various plays, together with comments about studios and stars. But there is only one paper in the United States (so far as can be learned) that is making extensive use of its advertising columns to create "movie fans."

The Chicago Daily News is publishing a series of advertisements ranging in size from 200 agate lines to one-half page, telling its hundreds of thousands of readers why they should attend motion pictures and read The Daily News directory of motion picture theaters.*

Naturally this is not only increasing The Daily News' productivity for Chicago motion picture theaters, but for film manufacturers. Even without this stimulation of interest in motion pictures The Daily News is the logical medium in Chicago for the film manufacturers. For The Daily News has a circulation of over 400,000, of which more than 92% is concentrated in Chicago and suburbs. As there are approximately 450,000 families in Chicago, it can readily be seen that, disregarding the non-English speaking and the illiterate, The Daily News is read by very nearly every worth-while family in the city.

The Daily News sells more papers in Chicago and suburbs by over 100,000 than any other daily newspaper, and over 80,000 more than any Sunday newspaper. Therefore it is the only newspaper through which you can reach all these worth-while families.

Moreover, The Daily News sells its space at a less cost per line per thousand readers than any other Chicago newspaper.

So that with the added stimulation of the motion picture news in the news columns, and the extensive motion picture campaign in the advertising columns, The Chicago Daily News is an advertising medium that commends itself in a very special way to the maker of motion pictures.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

Over 400,000 Daily

THE GODS OF FATE (Lubin—Five Parts—Jan. 24).—The cast: In the prologue—Little Kent (Thomas Koil); Little Jane (Rita Toofy); Little Gordon (Herbert Crothell, Jr.). In the play—Gordon (Richard Buhler); Jane (Rosetta Brice); Estey (Francis Joyner); Miller (William H. Turner); Mrs. Miller (Inez Buck). Written by Daniel C. Goodman. Directed by Jack Pratt.

Estey, a young widower, and the father of Little Jane, is employed in the locomotive works. Always of an inventive turn of mind, Estey invents a vacuum air brake which he intends to sell to the company. At the moment of the brake's completion, Estey is seized with an attack of heart failure, and falls dead at his work bench. Miller, Estey's bosom friend, also a widower and father of Little Kent, calls at Estey's home and, finding Estey dead, steals the drawings and the model of Estey's air brake. He buries them in the cellar of his own home. Later Miller, anxious that his child shall have a mother's care, and needing a housekeeper to manage for him, marries a widow named Luther, who is the mother of Little Gordon. Realizing that there is no one to dispute his claim, Miller claims Estey's invention as his own and sells it for a large sum to the railroad company.

Miller's conscience troubles him, however, and he tries to get right with himself by adopting Estey's little daughter, Jane. Thus we have a house divided, to wit: Miller and his son Kent, his wife and her son, Gordon, who has fallen in love with Jane that is now to live with them.

Twenty years after we see Miller still a workman, having spent all the money he falsely obtained from the sale of Estey's patent. Gordon is now grown to manhood, and is employed in the office of the locomotive company. Kent inherits his father's evil tendencies, and is a hanger-on at the saloons and dance halls. Jane has blossomed into a sweet young woman, beloved by all.

Gordon and Jane are still friends as they were in childhood and Kent, conscious of this mutual regard, resents the friendship. When his conscience troubles him, Miller looks at the plans that he has kept hidden in the cellar. Jane, suspicious of her stepfather's actions, follows him to the cellar and sees the plans, but is not conscious of what they are. Kent, who has come home intoxicated, watches Jane as she goes to the cellar, alone one night, and, sees her with the plans in her hands. He frightens her away, gets the drawings and learns of his father's theft of twenty years before.

In the meantime, Mrs. Miller, seeing the love of Gordon for Jane, and knowing their true relationship, pleads with Miller to tell all and give the children happiness that is rightfully theirs. Miller, fearing the consequences of his act, threateningly demands her silence. Kent finds employment as a switchman on the railroad, and one day sees in his mirror the reflection of the locomotive works on fire. Knowing thah his father is in the building, Kent rushes to see if Miller has escaped.

Miller, always haunted by his guilty conscience, thinks that this will be a good way to end it all, but he is rescued from the burning building and is carried to the hospital, where the doctor pronounces his burns fatal and tells him he has but a little while to live. Miller makes a hurried will and leaves everything to Kent.

Jan, finding the plans again, sees written on the back of them a note from her father saying that if anything should happen to him, all his inventions and everything he owned should go to her. Then Jane realizes who she is. Kent, upon learning that Jane is not his sister, tries to get possession of the plans. One day, as Jane and Gordon are on the limited train going to the city, Kent, knowing that Jane has the plans in her traveling bag, determines to get them at any cost, and deliberately throws the switch, with the result that the limited crashes into a freight and is wrecked.

Gordon and Jane, pinned under the wreckage, are found by Kent. He tries to get the plans and is arrested. Later Gordon and Jane are convalescent and we see them looking forward to a life-long happiness together.

THE CROWN PRINCE'S DOUBLE (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Feb. 7).—The cast: Prince Oscar of Ostrau and Barry Lawrence, a clerk (Maurice Costello); King Gustave (Howard Hall); Baron Hagar (Anders Randolf); Peter Hart (Thomas Mills); Minister of State (Thom Brook); Detective Brennan (Daniel Leighton); Shirley Rives (Norma Talmadge); Isabelle Hart (Anna Laughlin); Mrs. Wilmerding (Leila Blau). Produced by Van Dyke Brooke.

Oscar, son of Gustave, King of Ostrau, is saved from a forced marriage by a revolution in the kingdom, and leaves for the United States, accompanied by Peter Hart, his American friend and advisor. In New York he meets Barry Lawrence, a young bookkeeper, out of a job through the rascally work of a fellow clerk and Prince Oscar's perfect double.

The Prince has met and quietly married Isabelle, an American girl, and wishing to renounce his claim to the throne and become an American citizen, he changes identities with Barry. King Gustave learns of his son's marriage and, horrified, sends Baron Hagar, Chief of Police, to bring back Oscar, by force if necessary. Barry accordingly poses as the Prince in disguise and takes up his abode in the Hotel St. Albans, and Hart, let into the secret, sets Baron Hagar's henchmen on Barry's trail. After some startling adventures, Barry, bewildered by it all, is kidnapped; likewise, Shirley, niece of Mrs. Wilmerding, a wealthy woman, the detectives working on the case imagining she must be "the Prince's" wife.

Barry escapes and accuses Hart of causing all his troubles; then sets out to rescue Shirley. Hagar arrives to interview Shirley, whom he supposes to be Isabelle, wife of Oscar, and is stunned to confront a stranger. Complications and surprises accumulate rapidly when Barry arrives, and immediately after him Oscar. Every one is astounded as the two men, dressed and looking exactly alike, meet face to face. Then explanations are made which result in the chagrin of the baffled Hagar, the uniting of Barry and Shirley, while Oscar—Prince no longer—proudly announces that his American citizenship papers and his American bride more than recompense him for the kingdom he has lost.

THOU SHALT NOT COVET (Selig—Five Parts—Feb. 7).—The cast: I, or the Hero (Tyrone Power); My Neighbor's Wife (Kathlyn Williams); My Neighbor (Guy Oliver); My Wife (Eugenie Besserer). Colin Campbell, Director.

As I sit here alone reading in the pages of my diary I think of what might have been. I do not regret my love nor do I regret my final determination in connection with that love. Circumstances conspired toward my love for the most perfect woman, in mine own eyes. My home life was unhappy; their home was ideal; my wife was a vixen; his wife was all that is good. She came to me at nightfall as innocent and as trusting as a child—well, again I shall thumb the pages of my diary and recall to mind all the entanglements of those fateful threads which, for a time, bound her life with mine own. Back in the old days when my own wife consorted with others and made my home a hell on earth I was lonely and sought solace in the company of my Neighbor and his Wife.

She discovered the secret of my unhappiness and as time went on I knew that I loved her madly. My Neighbor was called to Africa on a business trip, and when I accompanied my Neighbor's Wife to the steamer dock to bid him Godspeed I went with a troubled and insincere mind, for I now realized that I would have my Neighbor's Wife to myself. My Wife annoyed me continually. Her companions, both men and women, frequented my house, and with wine and cards passed the time in riotous living, turning my home into an abode of evil.

Came a day when Fate gave my Neighbor's Wife into my arms. She was thrown from her horse in a runaway accident. One night I chanced to read in the Book of Books. The pages fell open at the chapter of Exodus XX—17. My eyes fell on this admonition in the Ten Commandments: "Thou Shalt Not Covet Thy Neighbor's Wife." Realizing the sin of my insane love, I determined to leave the country and my Neighbor's Wife. And one day I sailed away.

After many wanderings I found myself in Cairo, Egypt, and I decided to go to Africa. Then once again grim Fate gripped my hand, for again I met my Neighbor's Wife face to face! She explained the miracle of her presence. Her husband had instructed her to take the first ship and meet him in Africa, and so we sailed together from Suez. In the meantime, my Neighbor in a village on the African Coast was eagerly awaiting his wife's arrival, and during barter and sale with the natives he had incurred the bitter enmity of an African chieftain.

Then the vessel upon which we were passengers was wrecked. The gigantic craft had collided with a derelict and the water poured into the ship from a great hole stove in its side.

As the great ship shivered and groaned like something alive I thought of my Neighbor's Wife. I rushed to her state room and there found her helpless. I took her into my arms and with her leaped into the sea. Later we were washed ashore on the African coast. When she awoke her mind was disarranged from the shock and she thought I was her husband. We made our home in the jungle and that night she came to me as she had always come to her husband, and I knew that I, too, was going mad. I prayed to God to strengthen me in my hour of dire temptation. I left my Neighbor's Wife alone in the rude shelter. When I awoke I found her in my arms.

Meanwhile my Neighbor received notification that the ship had been wrecked and to search for his wife along the African coast. As the days passed and my temptation became stronger, I determined to kill myself and save the honor of my Neighbor and his Wife. Just as I was about to take my life, I saw my loved one struggling with an immense leopard. I drove off the leopard just in time to save her life, and then for the last time Fate took a hand in the game. This time not for me, but against me. The shock of the leopard's attack, I found, had restored the reason of my Neighbor's Wife.

My Neighbor had also become a wanderer. Driven from his home by African tribesmen, his companions slaughtered, he had struggled along for many miles, finally falling in an unconscious condition. We found his almost lifeless body, and my Neighbor's Wife's endearments snatched back the soul of her husband. When the ship came my Neighbor and his Wife left the African coast for home and happiness. I, too, was to return to civilization with them. However, I stood and pondered. Again in flaming letters there leaped into my mind the Biblical admonition: "Thou Shalt Not Covet Thy Neighbor's Wife!" I left a message in the sand for my Neighbor, and from a secret spot I watched the boat leave the African shore carrying out of my life all that was near and dear to me.

And to-night, a wanderer on the face of the earth, I lay aside my diary and drink a toast to the happiness of my Neighbor and his Wife.

PARAMOUNT.

MY LADY INCOG (Famous Players—Five Parts—Jan. 17).—The cast: Nell Carroll (Hazel Dawn); Teddy De Veaux (Robert Cain); Rene Lidal (George Majeroni); Mrs. De Veaux (Dora Mills Adams); Chief of Police (Franklyn Hanna); Bull Rice (Frank Wunderlee).

Financial troubles force Nell Carroll, a thoroughbred, to seek employment in a detective agency which has just taken up the trail of a very baffling jewelry robbery in an exclusive summer colony. In order to work from the inside, she is sent to the place as the Baroness Du Vassey. Suspicion promptly fastens upon Teddy De Veaux, the son of the woman who first invites Nell to her home. Every evidence points to him until the leader of the crooks, suspecting the real identity of the "baroness," decides to present himself as the Baron Du Vassey, her husband.

The arrival of the "baron" causes consternation in the heart of Nell, who does not know whether she is facing an impostor or has chanced upon the name of a real nobleman. Trusting to chance to give her some hint as to the truth, she decides to face the man and attempt to outwit him. But more than wits are necessary to defeat the crook, with whom the butler is allied. It comes to a question of a steady hand and quick trigger finger when the thieves are caught red-handed and spring upon the innocent young Teddy.

THE CALL OF THE CUMBERLANDS (Pallas—Five Parts—Jan. 24).—Torn between a love for his mountain home and a mountain girl and a desire to work out a God-given talent with paint and canvas, Samson South, fighter and dreamer and a coming leader of the clans of the Souths, whose feudal activities with the Hollman faction in the Cumberland mountains have been halted by a truce, leaves for New York. Reluctantly he parts with Sally Miller, the sweetheart of his youth, and sighs at the prospect of lost association with nature's charms.

At the zenith of his success, his crude ways fading under the polish of etiquette taught him by the beautiful sister of his artist-benefactor, who discovered him in the mountains, he is prompted to return because of the breaking out of hostilities anew. First avenging his father's earlier death, Samson South leads his clan in a desperate battle with the Hollman faction, liberating four of the Souths from jail and finally forcing the enemy to ask for permanent peace.

Sally Miller improves the time of South's absence to add to her meager education with books, and she, taking inspiration from fashion magazines, improves as best she can her personal appearance. The absence of South has built a bridge of doubt as to whether his love for her has faded or his heart yielded to the pulchritude of the polished city girl. With Sally Miller again in his arms, doubt is dispelled and Samson finds his soul in the grip of a strong, heroic love and his yearning for the mountain fastness appeased.

KLEINE-EDISON.

THE FINAL CURTAIN (Kleine—Five Parts—Feb. 2).—The cast: Ruth Darrell (Alma Hanlon); John Lord (Arthur Hoops); Jane Lord (Florence Coventry); Herbert Lyle (Herbert Hayes); John Banks (Frank Belcher); Mary (Beryl Mercer); Henry Cole (W. C. Carlston); George Robbins (Frank Norcross); the Marvelous Sylvesters (Crimmons & Gore).

Lyle, a Broadway actor, is playing one-night stands in the West. One afternoon he drops into a small theatre where a repertoire company of the 10-20-30 sort is playing. He is struck with the beauty and talent of Ruth Darrell, a young member of the company, and sees in her just the type demanded by a new play in which he is to be featured the following season. He takes steps to meet the girl, arranges with his New York manager for an interview with her, and the following autumn finds her playing in his support in one of the new Broadway successes.

Here she is seen by Lord, a wealthy manufacturer of woolen goods, who falls in love with her and asks her to marry him, in spite of the protests of his maiden sister. Ruth accepts him. Ruth is a happy, carefree woman, and has earned the title of "Our Lady of Laughter." Lord, who is a hard-headed business man, is in great financial difficulties because he has spent a huge sum in filling a Government contract, for which he finds his business demanding most of his time.

One night she gives a dinner to her former friends of the stage, including Lyle, Banks, the Broadway manager, and her old friends of the theatrical boarding-house, prominent among whom are the Marvelous Sylvesters. Lord and his sister Jane are shocked by the antics of the theatrical people and insist that Ruth shall sever all connection with her former friends. This awakens her spirit and when she continues to find herself deprived of the company of her husband because of his application to business she goes back upon the stage and plays in support of Lyle. In the meantime, Lord, pressed more and more by his creditors, has made arrangements with Robbins, a bank president, for a loan to be made on the date when a number of his notes shall fall due. Cole, head of the woolen trust, sees an opportunity to wreck Lord's business completely. He brings pressure to bear on Robbins, and together they play to disappoint Lord at the last moment. When his notes fall due the loan from the bank will not be forthcoming.

One night Lord goes to the theatre to see his wife play. Lyle notices him in the audience and, being half drunk, plays the love scenes with Ruth with more than ordinary ardor. Lord notices this and becomes furious. When the play is over, Lord makes his way to Ruth's dressing room. Meanwhile Lyle has followed Ruth to her dressing room. He has her in his arms when Lord enters. The position of Lyle and Ruth is such that Lord is unable to see that she is resisting the actor. Mad with jealousy, he tears Lyle from her and knocks him to the floor. Ruth tries to explain, but he throws her aside and bursts out of the dressing room. Ruth, realizing that it is her love for the old theatrical life that has come between her and her husband, deserts the stage and seeks forgetfulness in a new environment. Lord buries himself deeper than ever in his business affairs.

Banks, who has taken a liking to Lord, learns from Lyle in one of the latter's tipsy confidential moods that Ruth was entirely innocent of any wrong in connection with the dressing room episode. He carries this information to Lord and finally succeeds in convincing him that she was not at fault. Sometime later we find Ruth a telephone operator. Accidentally cutting in on one of the lines, she hears one of Cole's henchmen talking to his chief, and in the conversation her husband's name is mentioned. She learns of the plot to double-cross him in the matter of the loan. She immediately sends him word of the impending disaster by messenger boy. Bank happens to be in Lord's office when the boy arrives with the news. He knows of a secret affair which Robbins, the banker, has had with an actress, and hastens to Robbins' office, threatening him with the exposure and scandal unless he carries through the loan as originally planned. Meantime, Lord has gone direct to Cole. Banks finds the banker more in fear of Cole and the money trust than he is of scandal. Robbins becomes defiant, and Banks is forced to leave without having accomplished his purpose.

Lord, however, meets with better success at Cole's office. He threatens the woolen magnate with prosecution for criminal conspiracy unless he instructs Robbins to make the loan as agreed. Cole hesitates. Lord seizes him by the throat and makes him 'phone to Robbins to make the loan. This is done and the situation is saved

A CIRCUS ROMANCE (Five Parts—Jan. 24).—The cast: Babette (Muriel Ostriche); Ezra Butterworth (Edward Davis); Rev. Albert Martin (Jack Hopkins); Zaidees (Catherine Calhoun); Petey (Geo. Larkin). Written by Betty T. Fitzgerald. Directed by Charles M. Seay.

Babette, the butterfly dancer of a big southern carnival show, is loved by Petey, another performer. She is the daughter of Ezra Butterworth, a church and business magnate of the town where she is playing, but neither knows of the relationship, as Butterworth's wife, who is Zaidee, the fortune teller of the show, had been deserted by Butterworth many years before.

Babette learns the secret of her birth through a box of papers, to which her mother carries the key always with her. The church people are shocked when Babette goes to Butterworth's house, makes known her claim, and is taken into the home, Butterworth acceding to her demand through fear that his present wife will learn of his previous escapade. She makes friends with Mrs. Butterworth, but the junior warden of the church, who attempted familiarities with Babette in the show, is her special destination.

The church people demand that Butterworth send the girl away or resign his church position. The rector and the girl overhear the committee. The rector asks her to marry him, but she declines, and Butterworth decides to resign. Babette goes to Mrs. Butterworth to say goodbye. Butterworth comes in and tells his wife the story of his early marriage and is forgiven, but Babette goes back to the circus, and Petey is welcomed in friendly fashion by the rector and Butterworth.

WORLD FILM CORP.

THE FRUITS OF DESIRE (Brady—Five Parts—Jan. 31).—The cast: Mark Truitt (Robert Warwick); Jeremiah Quimby (Alec. B. Francis); Thomas Henley (Robert Cummings); Roman Androskia (Ralph Delmore); Blair (D. J. Flannigan); Piotr (James Mack); Gracy (James Ewens); Rev. Courtenay (Adolphe Lestina); Dr. Graham (Philip Basi); Simon Truitt (George Moss); Bill Slocum (Harry C. Directed by Oscar Eagle.

[We published a description of this picture in a former issue under the name of "The Ambition of Mark Truitt," which is the title of the American novel from which this subject is an adaptation. The title of the film is "The Fruits of Desire," and is to be released on January 31, and not on January 17 as previously announced. "The City," a five-part subject, was released on January 17. For the benefit of our readers we publish the story again.]

Truitt is a country lad who conceives an overpowering ambition to become a great power in the steel industry. In his day-dreams he often pictures the peaceful valley in which he has been born and reared filled with belching chimneys and vast furnaces under his complete mastery.

As a beginning he bids good-bye to his little country sweetheart and enters the employ of a steel mill in Pittsburgh. He starts in at the lowest form of manual labor, but quickly is raised to a position as gang foreman, and soon afterward becomes a skilled worker in the mills. He boards with the family of a shop foreman. The shop foreman's daughter falls in love with Mark and gives herself to him unreservedly.

Truitt fights his way on relentlessly. He becomes superintendent of the mill and then forms a new corporation with one of the younger partners of the firm. He deserts the girl of the mill, returns to his old home, marries his first love, and sees the realization of his life's ambition in the construction of his own great steel mills in the quiet valley in which he roamed as a boy.

His wife becomes a mere social butterfly and the couple are estranged. There is a divorce. Alone in his great mansion, monarch of all he can survey from his window's outlook, Truitt at length realizes how hollow a victory he had gained in a life of power without love. He seeks out the girl of his days in the Pittsburgh steel mill, finds her love still steadfast, and makes her his wife.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

HER DEBT OF HONOR (Columbia Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—Jan. 24).—The cast: Marian Delmar (Valli Valli); John Hartfield (William Davidson); Olin Varcoe (William Nigh); Crawford Granger (J. H. Goldsworthy); Doctor Glade (Frank Bacon); Mrs. Varcoe (Mrs. M. Brundage); Niatana (Ilean Hume); Pierre Leroux, her father (David H. Thompson); Kalatin, her lover (Frank Montgomery); Old Wolf (R. A. Bresee); Swiftwind (Jack Murray). Directed by William Nigh.

Marian Delmar's father, an architect, has died without an estate, though it seems to the girl that he has left a settlement of some sort on her. From the time of his death a certain Varcoe, a member of her father's profession, has sent her a monthly remittance, which enables her to live decently and study painting. Varcoe dies, leaving no instructions regarding the remittance and no reason why his son, Olin, should continue it. John Hartfield, whose father has been a lawyer of doubtful integrity but unquestionable shrewdness, is now the friend of Marian, to whom she goes when her remittance fails to arrive. He subsequently informs her that the remittance seems to have been a matter of charity on the part of the late Varcoe, and incidentally that his son Olin is dying from his wild dissipation and morbid excesses.

Marian's independent nature revolts at the idea that she has been an object of charity, and against the pleading of John determines to pay the debt by nursing Olin back to health. She offers her services as nurse and is engaged by Olin, who exhibits a wicked joy. All repair to the old Varcoe home on the St. Lawrence, where lives Mrs. Varcoe, whom her supposed son has never seen. Mrs. Varcoe has been for years an invalid. The old family physician has been her faithful attendant for thirty years, in a strong sort of house, with Indian servants and queer furnishings, that must have been the expression of a morbid brain.

When Olin meets Mrs. Varcoe, whose son

Exhibitors, Send For These

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has prepared blanks for petitions to Congress against the proposed Federal Censorship. Each one of these blanks contains space for fifty signatures. We will send these blanks to each exhibitor according to his needs. Our advice to him is that he make it a point to secure the signatures of voters or persons of voting age. No others will have weight. This is to be a petition of the People to their representatives in Congress. It is best, therefore to have the signatures of citizens who are not in any way interested in the moving picture industry. Do not sign yourself. Do not ask any of your employees to sign. Let only disinterested citizens sign the petition. Forward the petition duly filled out with the signatures to us and we will forward it to Congress. This should be taken up by every Exhibitor in every State. ADVISE AT ONCE WHETHER YOU REQUIRE ONE OR MORE BLANKS. WRITE US IMMEDIATELY. Act at once! Now!! This minute!!!

The Crafts Censorship Bill will Go on the Floor of the House. WE MUST ACT WITHOUT A SECOND'S DELAY!

he is supposed to be, he seems to inspire her with fear and misgiving. She is immediately impressed with Marian, whose attentions are now directed to the old lady's health. The aged doctor's jealousy of Marian in her efforts to relieve Mrs. Varcoe, creates frequent friction. Through the finding of certain plans in a secret compartment, John finds that Marian's father had been the real brains behind the elder Varcoe's success; hence, the remittance by agreement. Olin's morbid, wicked nature, and the realization that decent persons have never liked him drives him to take advantage of an Indian girl in his household, and the consequence is the exposure of the secret that he himself is the offspring of such an affair on the part of his father. He realizes at last why good women, especially Marian, will have no dealings with him.

John, meanwhile, is constantly trying to dissuade Marian from continuing in this atmosphere, and the finding of the plans, which established her father's share in the elder Varcoe's success, almost accomplishes that end. But between the kindly old lady and Marian a strong affection has developed and furnishes the incentive for her to remain. Olin is determined to have one more big fling before he passes away. He knows that an old Indian servant in the house, who is the father of the Indian girl, his mother, hates him for his father's crime. Olin invites a number of his dissipated friends from the city to spend a week-end with him. One of his friends, Granger, tries to outrage Marian and is killed by a knife, thrown by an Indian.

Then Olin traps her in a secret passage and tries to wrong her, but John and another Indian rescue her and wound Olin. Olin crawls to the Indian huts on the estate where the remainder of his mother's tribe dwell, and the father of the girl he has wronged, who has waited for him since the affair with his gun across his knees sitting in the doorway, raises his rifle and fires. Olin crawls back to the house and dies in the arms of his Indian grandfather. Marian then realizes that her devotion to what she deemed her duty in repaying the debt of Varcoe's charity should no longer stand between her and her heart's happiness. She and John determine to travel the road of life together, while the old doctor gives evidence that his devotion to his equally venerable patient was not purely of professional interest.

COSMOFOTOFILM CO.

HIS VINDICATION (Four Parts—London Film Co.).—Charles and George Faulkner are brothers. George Faulkner has a son, Edward. Captain Haverleigh makes their acquaintance and is invited to a game of cards. Haverleigh loses heavily, particularly to Charles Faulkner. During the game the latter flashes large sums of money. Haverleigh notes this. The play continues. Haverleigh loses further and pretends to be intoxicated. To George Faulkner's disgust, Charles Faulkner continues to bet with and win from the "unsober" Haverleigh. Haverleigh, apparently stupefied, is assisted into his room, where he drops the mask of drunkenness and changes into some other clothes belonging to the landlord. He then makes his way back to the gambling hall.

At the Hall, after Haverleigh's departure, a quarrel springs up between Charles and George Faulkner over Charles's transactions with Haverleigh and the two men separate for the night on bad terms. Haverleigh enters and secures a quantity of money. Charles is awakened, but before he can arouse the house is murdered by Haverleigh.

George Faulkner attacks Haverleigh. A fight follows and Faulkner is knocked senseless. Haverleigh makes his escape. George is suspected of the murder at the trial. George is found guilty and is sentenced to penal servitude.

In prison George is gradually converted into a ferocious, brutalized specimen of humanity. At the Hall his son, Edward, inherits at the age of twenty his murdered uncle's wealth. Haverleigh hears of this and slowly but systematically relieves the youngster of his wealth. Edward falls in love with Marjorie, the innkeeper's daughter, who is also loved by Dan, the village blacksmith. Edward persuades Marjorie to agree to elope with him to London, promising to marry her there, but on Haverleigh's suggestion, arranges that the marriage shall be a bogus one. The elopement is arranged for Christmas Eve.

George Faulkner escapes from prison and takes refuge in Dan's smithy. That night he appears at the Inn disguised as a fiddler and there sees his son Edward. Edward's coachman becomes too drunk to assist in the elopement. The convict volunteers for the post and discovers the contemptible trick Edward is trying to play on Marjorie. When Marjorie appears to keep her tryst, the old man warns her of her danger, and when Edward comes she turns on him and refuses to proceed with the elopement. Edward takes the convict, not knowing that he is his father.

The prison guards call at the Inn and Marjorie learns that they have become suspicious of Edward's new servant. They proceed to the Hall to arrest him. Marjorie takes a short cut and warns George Faulkner that he is about to be arrested. He hides in a secret panel known only to himself. Edward Faulkner surprises Marjorie in his room and thinks she has come to make peace with him. Marjorie has been followed by Dan, and when Dan appears Edward contrives to suggest that Marjorie's presence is a compromising one. Marjorie appeals to Dan to take her home.

The guards arrive at the Hall but find their man has flown. When they have left Haverleigh and Edward sit down for a game of cards. Edward loses heavily and Haverleigh, satisfied with his night's play, brings the game to an end by again feigning drunkenness. Edward, noting his condition, is tempted to help himself to some of the drunken man's notes. At this moment his father opens the panel and snatches the notes from the startled Edward before he can put them in his pocket. George Faulkner angrily denounces his son and points out that Haverleigh is only feigning drunkenness. Edward is incredulous, but when the truth of this is forced on him he attacks Haverleigh with a chair. Haverleigh wards him off and receives a smashing blow on the arm. The ex-convict intervenes. Haverleigh examines the wounded arm. As he does so George Faulkner's attention is drawn to an old scar on the forearm and he slowly realizes the connection between this scar and the fight in Charles Faulkner's bedroom ten years before. He accuses the discomfited card-sharper of the murder and at the critical moment draws attention to the scar. Haverleigh betrays himself by attempting to escape, but is captured and handed over to the police.

Edward, his idle dissipation cut short by the advent of his father, becomes a soldier, and succeeds in making his peace with Marjorie, who, at last recognizing Dan's worth, rewards him in the only way possible.

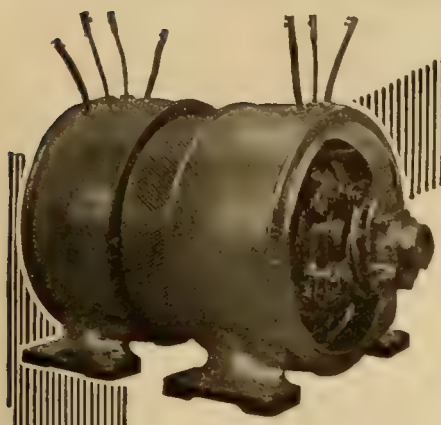
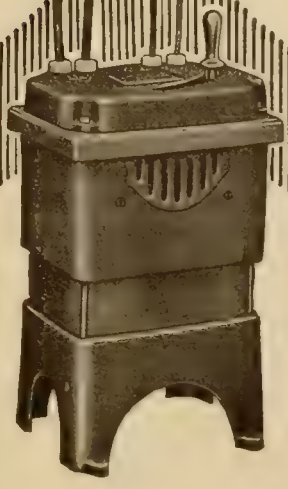
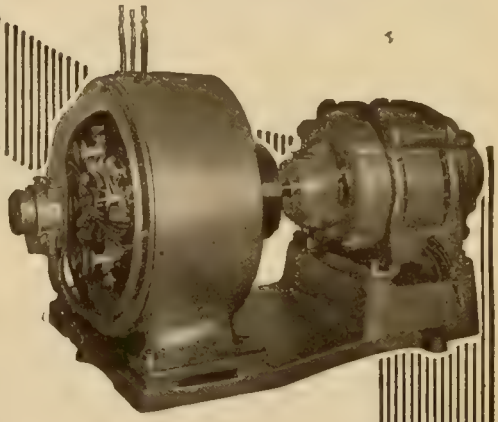
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.



The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

C-5

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

WAR !

On the Firing Line With the Germans

State Rights Selling

There are dozens of so-called war pictures, but ours is authentic, consisting of 8,500 feet of pulse-quickening scenes taken from automobile and aeroplane at the front by WILBUR H. DURBOROUGH—daring American Press photographer, who accompanied Von Hindenberg's army for seven months.

Playing to Enormous Receipts Wherever Shown!

The camera does not lie; Mr. Durborough is seen in at least 50% of the scenes in the film.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE ADMITS, December 10th, 1915: "There are war pictures and war pictures, but the blue ribbon goes to those taken by Durborough."

What I have done for over 9400 exhibitors the world over, I can do for you!

I want you to write and tell me your projection troubles. Let me send you large, free testing samples of the screen that is universally known as the World's Best—bar none—widely imitated but never equalled.

MIRROROID

Patented June 9th, 1908, Feb. 15th, 1915. Other patents pending.

The screen that is used in almost every Government and State institution, leading colleges, etc.; and by exhibitors who investigate before they buy. MIRROROID users knew they were buying the accrued value of my judgment based upon my eight years' experience—the pioneer screen manufacturer and inventor of metalized non-oxidizing cloth.

The validity of Mirroroid patents is conceded by the E. I. Du Pont De Nemours Co., manufacturers of Fabrikoid, as well as the superiority. They use MIRROROID in all theatres erected at their many plants.

Now, you must fully realize that any smooth, metalized surface is productive of hazy out-of-focus effect, glare, and eye-strain besides fade-away at a close-up or angle view.

It cannot be disputed that MIRROROID eliminates all these defects, because it is made with a rough or matte finish. Consequently the screen you must use.

Our five-year guarantee covers and protects you in every way. MIRROROID can't turn in color—it can't oxidize, crack or peel. It can be washed with soap and water.

These statements are true and are open to your investigations at all times. Beware of substitutions and imitations. The man who investigates before he buys never suffers remorse. "Use the Brains God Gave You" and you can't go wrong. REALIZE.

Success is a state of mind. Keep Mirroroid, the screen with the black back, on your mind. Beat your competitor to it.

(No. 119--Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle,

There is no program in the whole world which gives the exhibitors anything like the vast number of real screen and stage stars that the Universal program gives.

Nor is there any program which contains from one year's end to another, the tremendous quantity and fine quality of stories written by the best authors of the day.

Neither is there any program which gives employment to such a big staff of brainy and original stage directors.

We've reached out and secured also the greatest staff of scenic artists, expert drapers, interior decorators and high class camera experts ever gathered together by any company or group of companies in the film business.

We use and have always used better talent of all kinds in our one and two reel pictures than others have even attempted to use in big features.

During all the hubbub about features we have never for an instant neglected our shorter length pictures, because we knew as well as we knew our own name that the short picture is the basis of the picture business. The feature is the thing of a month or of a year, for example, but the one and two reelers are for all time. AND THE UNIVERSAL HAS ALWAYS BUILT FOR PERMANENCE, NOT FOR THE MONTH OR THE YEAR!

We have the only completely world-wide selling organization in the business. You may not think that this concerns you, but it does. Because every dollar's worth of goods that we sell in the foreign countries enables us to put that much more money into our product. We can afford to operate, and do operate, on a smaller margin of profit per picture than any other company because the volume of our sales is so much greater.

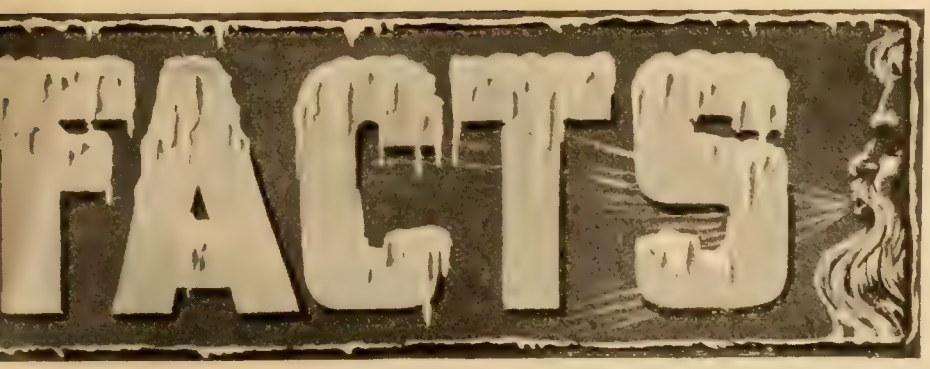
Think back! During the past two or three years you have been told many times that new organizations were coming into the field which would overtop even the huge Universal company. WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

And where would YOU be now if you had depended on any of them for your source of film supply? What prices would you be paying now if the tremendous resources of the Universal had not been used to hammer the business down to a commercial instead of a wild cat basis?

The only weak spot in our organization in the past was in our photography and in our laboratory work. This was because we had some poor cameras and about the most miserable laboratory in the world. We knew the trouble existed, even before you did and we fought like fiends to overcome it.

We finally accomplished it by spending HALF A MILLION DOLLARS in erecting in New Jersey the most perfect film laboratory and the finest glass studio in the world. It has taken a year to build it and we have been breaking in the new apparatus during the past few weeks, but IT IS ALREADY SHOWING THAT THE INVESTMENT WAS A GLORIOUS ONE BECAUSE IT IS GIVING US THE BEST PHOTOGRAPHY AND PRINTING EVER KNOWN TO THE TRADE!

We are paying more for stories and scenarios than we ever paid; and more than any other program has dared to pay. The result is that we are getting the cream of the market, instead of the skimmed milk!



President Universal Film Manufacturing Company)

Our buying power is so limitless that we are enabled to secure the very best things in the market for each and every branch of the business. Film producers in all parts of the world who through lack of organization have failed in their endeavors to market their own product are NOW SUBMITTING THEIR NEGATIVES TO US. Whenever a high class one is viewed by our committee of experts, we buy it for cash and thus get the pick and choice of all productions made by unattached concerns.

World famous playwrights, highly successful authors whom we formerly could not approach without a letter of introduction are now coming to us and giving us first chance to buy their brain-products. Men with original ideas, inventors, and all others who seek the greatest market for their ideas or inventions come to the Universal FIRST.

The pick and choice of the world's very best is at our feet—and we've got the money with which to buy it.

This is not idle boasting. There was a time when we had to scrape the very bottom of the exchequer to pay our bills. There was a time when our credit was not looked upon with overwhelming favor by some of our creditors. But we weathered the storm.

The result is that all these good things are at the beck and call of Universal exhibitors. You get the results of our supreme strength, not only in our unequalled features but also in our one, two and three reel pictures.

You've heard wild predictions during the past year or two, to the effect that programs were doomed and all that sort of bosh. But the fact remains that THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM IS NOT ONLY STRONGER THAN IT EVER WAS BUT IT IS DOING A BIGGER BUSINESS; not only in this country but in foreign lands where our own representatives are turning in sums of money that we never expected in our wildest flights of imagination.

Talk didn't accomplish this sensational success. Advertising didn't do it. Bluffing didn't do it. Nothing on earth did it but CONSISTENTLY GOOD PICTURES, week after week and year after year.

These are all cold facts. Every one of them is susceptible of proof. They are things which every exhibitor should weigh with the most careful thought and consideration.

If you have ever had a shaky feeling with regard to the future of your own theatre, or if you have such a feeling now, THERE IS A REMEDY AT HAND! Tie up tight with the Universal—the strongest film organization in the universe—and cast fear and worry to the four winds!

The UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

After all the Press Agent talk has subsided and you get right down to brass tacks in the cold grey dawn of the morning after, you'll find that NO program on earth begins to measure up to the Stars on the Universal program. You can substantiate this absolutely for yourself by looking into the FACTS. Not alone the greatest assemblage of Stars, but the cream of them all, ALL on the Universal Program.

Dear Sirs: Attention: Publicity Department

We want to call your attention to some remarkable business that was recently done on a couple of your subjects. Last Friday night Mr. Wm. Andlauer Manager of the Benton Theatre, this city, a suburban house, was arrested while showing the subject Fannie Ward in THE CHEAT on account of over-crowding his house. He was compelled to turn away hundreds of people and the police were needed to suppress the people from fighting in an effort to get into the theatre.

Another good report was received this morning from Mr. Newman, our first run customer in this city, on the business he did at his theatre yesterday Sunday, with Blanche Sweet in RAGAMUFFIN. He played to the biggest day's receipts since he has been in business.

This for your information.

Yours very truly,

PROGRAM

Lasky Will Pay the Fines!

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company feels a certain responsibility for the arrest of William Andlauer, manager of the Benton Theatre, a Paramount house in Kansas City, Mo., on the charge of over-crowding his theatre when he exhibited Fannie Ward in "The Cheat."

The Lasky Company gave, and hereby repeats, the warning that "The Cheat" is such a great photoplay any Paramount exhibitor anywhere is liable to arrest because the public will not stay away when he announces this attraction.

It isn't the fault of the exhibitor!

Lasky assumes all blame!

The Lasky Company, therefore, because it produced "The Cheat," under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille, offers to pay the fines of Paramount exhibitors who are arrested for over-crowding their theatres when their attraction is Fannie Ward in "The Cheat."

The Strange Case of Mary Page

WITH HENRY WALTHALL AND EDNA MAYO

The Most Powerful Series Ever Produced

Look What the Critics Say!

"After viewing the First Episode of Essanay's serial, 'The Strange Case of Mary Page,' I was impressed that it was one of the most compelling photoplays I had ever seen. . . . I had seen a photoplay that held me with overmastering grip—a live, red-blooded photoplay in which men and women loved, lived and fought as real entities, and not the first installment of a mere serial film story."—James S. McQuade in The Moving Picture World.

"Leaves little room for improvement. J. Charles Haydon has used effective methods of direction. His theater scenes are real, and the back-stage atmosphere, always attractive to the uninitiated, is very good. The photographic effects are entirely effective."—Peter Milne in The Motion Picture News.

"Promises to be of unusual interest."—James A. Milligan in The Billboard.

"Should be a success. Edna Mayo acts with her usual skill. Her co-star (Mr. Walthall) plays the romantic young attorney with all the ability he showed in a somewhat similar part in 'The Birth of a Nation.'"—D. G. Watts in The New York Morning Telegraph.

"Roles well handled. Sure to attract."—Genevieve Harris in Motography.

TO THE STATE RIGHTS BUYER AND EXHIBITOR

Great pictures must compete with ordinary pictures on the program system.

Salomy Jane, Salvation Nell, are the type of film dramatizations that exhibitors who demand quality want, regardless of program limitations.

So the California Motion Picture Corporation have decided to release

The first of the series under the new plan is
BEATRIZ MICHELENA in "THE UNWRITTEN LAW"

By Edwin Milton Royle, author of "The Squaw Man," from the scenario by Capt. Leslie Peacocke.

A feature of purpose and power of which F. R. Buckley of the Motion Picture Mail said--"This is a picture in which there are no flaws. It is wonderful. It goes into the exclusive class--in which we have placed only two other five reel features during the last six months---which we can recommend to any exhibitor as an absolutely certain success."

THE TOP THOUGHT

The Standard Dictionary defines that much abused word, "Service" as follows:

> "To promote the interest of another--to contribute to the well-being of--to aid by useful offices."

We should like to find another term for this oft mishandled word—one which truthfully represents the honesty of purpose and effort we are putting behind it in the production of sterling pictures and in selling service.

But since a better term is not at hand, we ask you to accept the dictionary's definition as the top thought of this organization.

And, as evidence that this thought is one consistently at the forefront in all of our relations with exhibitors, we beg to offer a few excerpts from a weighty volume of appreciative expressions which our patrons have been good enough to voluntarily make.

> "We have run the V-L-S-E productions almost exclusively in our house, and it is indeed remarkable the success with which we have met, considering the fact that we ran most of the subjects after your first run account had run them a week, and in fact, even repeated on subjects we ourselves had run, and played to a good business each time.
> "Your suggestions have been of great help and benefit to us, although we will admit that we were very hard to convince as to the value of second runs. But once we got the idea, we went ahead with great success."
> PAUL HILLMAN,
> Manager Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati

> "We lost considerable money in this house. We did not consider that there was any chance of getting it back. But in the light of the service which you have rendered us, we are thoroughly convinced and with such cooperation any exhibitor can make a big success."
> GEORGE LIPTINCOTT,
> Manager Leader Theatre, Gloucester, N. J

> "I also wish to take this opportunity to thank you for the cooperation which you have extended us, and to say that it is a great pleasure to do business with such an organization. The concern that has a management which takes as much interest in an exhibitor's business as if it were its own, is the one that the exhibitor can rely upon absolutely."
> Sec'y Treas's Garden Theatre Amusement Company, Davenport, Iowa

Just how comprehensive is the service to which these exhibitors refer, is illustrated on the last page of this advertisement by excerpts from an article appearing in the editorial columns of a recent issue of Harper's Weekly.

If you believe that co-operation of the fullest kind makes for your best interests you should not fail to read it.

HARPER'S WEEKLY
A Journal of Civilization

The moving-picture distributor today is far-sighted enough to see that the marketing of entertainment is no different than the marketing of shoes, soap or any other commodity – that the same scientific merchandising methods that apply in the commercial field, apply to the sale of a moving-picture exhibitor's seats; and that it is just as essential for the photoplay producer to help the exhibitor make a profit on those seats as it is for the breakfast food manufacturer to help the dealer move the goods off his shelves.

Mr. Walter W. Irwin, who handles the distributing interests of one of the largest moving-picture concerns in the business, the V. L. S. E. Company, says: "Our duty is only half performed when we have sold our goods to the exhibitor. The other half, equally important, is to see to it that he resells them to his own substantial advantage." In order that this may be accomplished the V. L. S. E. Company demands that an exhibitor spend as much for advertising, as he does for film, and that he must show the feature at least three consecutive days.

The experience of an exhibitor in a southern city is an illustration of the way in which these principles work out. This city has always been a "daily change" town, until the apostles of the new method struck it. After much persuasion the manager of one of the theatres was prevailed upon to run a feature for a whole week. Extensive advertising was done in the newspapers, and much billboard space was also used. The run attracted the largest attendance ever recorded in that city, more than six thousand seeing the feature on the last day it was shown.

Tabulated, the result of this experiment in dollars and cents as compared with the returns from the daily change program were about as follows

OLD SYSTEM

Average receipts per day for week	$300.00
Film rental per day	25.00
Advertising per day	50.00
Overhead expenses per day	100.00
Total expenses	175.00
Net profits per day	$125.00

NEW SYSTEM

Average receipts per day for week	$550.00
Film rental per day	50.00
Advertising per day	100.00
Overhead expenses per day	100.00
Total expenses	250.00
Net profits per day	$300.00

In other words, the net profits for the week were $2100 as compared with the net profits of $875.00 per week under the old system, or a gain of $1225.

All this is indicative of the new tendency in the moving-picture business. Chaotic and reckless at the start, it is fast being put on a safe and sound basis. In a business as well as artistic sense, the "movies" are on the rise.

"I know not how to govern our own course save by the proven experience of others."

"HAM THE DIVER"

Released Tuesday, February 22nd

Proves This Even More Strongly Than "Ham Takes a Chance," the Side-Splitting Comedy That Marked His Return to the Screen.

In "Ham the Diver," Ham and Bud succeed in bluffing their way into jobs as deep-sea divers. Ham does the "water stuff," while it is Bud's job to pump the air and pull Ham back to solid earth again. But you can't blame Bud for forgetting his job when pretty Ethel happens along—especially when the fix that Ham finds himself in provides a comedy with a chuckle and smile from start to finish.

Posters that "pull them in"—One and three Sheets on this comedy and a stock "Ham and Bud" three-sheet that is a never-failing business booster.

THE NIGHT WATCH

A compelling one-reel drama, big in theme and handled in striking fashion. A weak-willed youth lying at death's door, a physician struggling grimly to kindle into flame the last remaining spark of life, only to suddenly learn from the lips of his own erring daughter that this youth is the cause of his life's greatest sorrow—there are the materials that have made this tense one-reeler.

Released Friday, February 25th. One and three-sheet, 4-color lithographs of striking design.

Fascinating Ethel Teare, of the dancing eyes and alluring dimples, is featured in these one-a-week comedies that will soon make Wednesday one of the most popular days on your calendar. In "Earning His Salt," vivacious Ethel finds her sweetheart a trifle too flirtatious, and, in addition, inclined to take business as a joke. Ethel cures his faults in a rollicking comedy.

Facts and Comments

OUR idea of conducting a publication intended both for the printing of the news and the rendering of service is to get and keep in the closest personal touch with the readers. Hence time and again members of the staff of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD have hunted the exhibitor in his lair and mingled with him. The mingling has always been to good purpose, and has never failed to increase our capacity for serving him. Only by continuous visits to the firing line are we able to appreciate the difficulties and problems of the reader. Any advice or assistance offered to the reader to be of any value must be based on practical knowledge and experience. To sit enthroned on an editorial desk and view the world of films from a dazzling altitude of theory and speculation may constitute a picturesque form of in-door sport, but its worth to the exhibitor or to any other branch of the industry is absolutely nil

THE painted tongues of old Dame Rumor are wagging with unusual fervor in these days. If one believed even half of all the rumors lazily floating on the River of Doubt, one would have to despair of the future of the industry. We have had these "rumorous" epidemics before and they certainly do furnish forth most excellent food for gossip When all the rumors have died a natural death or are exploded the industry will go on pursuing the even tenor of its upward way.

HOW long will this era of adaptations last? The visualization of popular fiction was at first a delightful novelty, but the gloss of novelty is gone. Have we no playwrights who think in terms of the screen? Must the motion picture forever depend on light that is reflected or refracted? We are convinced that sooner or later the dramatic literature of the screen will be more than fifty per cent. original. When that day comes it will mark an era of new power and popularity for the motion picture.

RECENTLY we spoke of the too prevalent and indiscriminate use of "close-ups." Another evil complained of by not only exhibitors but likewise the patrons of motion picture entertainments is the introduction of too much "fading" at the beginning or the closing of a scene. "Fading" just like "close-ups" has its place on the screen and when used with good judgment supported by a sense of artistic value, it is quite effective. When it is overdone, however, it quickly becomes tiresome to the public and is a distinct imposition on the exhibitor who is paying for a large number of useless inches of film.

IT'S all very well for the reformers and agitators to fight the use of cigarettes on the screen. We ourselves have no use whatever for the abominations either on or off the screen, but how is the villainess in the melodrama to be indicated? We suspect any female character the moment she sits on a table, but we cannot be sure—mathematically certain as it were—until she begins to smoke her cigarette. Then we know.

MAY we ask a little question of those great men who censor the motion pictures in Ohio, Kansas, Pennsylvania and some other places? Isn't it just possible that they are trying to force their tastes on us? Of course their tastes may be so much better than ours, but you know how men will fight for their own way when it comes to a question of taste.

A LITTLE fact with just one comment: Crafts of Washington, the chief enemy of the motion picture, has sent us a little note accompanying a copy of the "revised edition of the Smith-Hughes Bill." This revised edition according to the same Crafts embodies "changes suggested by Messrs. Hodkinson, Myers, Lasky, Friend and others in motion picture business and Crafts, Chase, Barber and other welfare workers." What a mingling of names.

Criticising the Critic

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

A MAN who occupies two points of view, those of critic and playwright, may have a broader outlook than from one viewpoint, and, though this may not be advantageous as a critic, it certainly is as a playwright. One of the greatest of critics, also one of the greatest of playwrights, asks "Why should those who cannot create take upon themselves to estimate the value of creative work?" and he almost immediately answers his own question. "If not a single fragment of art-criticism had come down from Hellenic days, it would be none the less true that the Greeks were a nation of art-critics, and that they invented the criticism of art just as they invented the criticism of everything else. For, after all, what is our primary debt to the Greeks? Simply the critical sprit."

"This spirit, which they exercised on questions of religion and science, of ethics and metaphysics, of politics and education, they exercised on questions of art also, and, indeed, of the two supreme and highest arts, Life and Literature, life and the perfect expression of life, they have left us the most flawless system of criticism the world has ever seen." "All imaginative work is deliberate and self-conscious, and self-consciousness and the critical spirit are one." "An age which has no criticism is either an age in which art is immobile, hieratic, and confined to the reproduction of formal types, or an age which possesses no art at all." "The tendency of creation is to repeat itself—it is the critical faculty that invents fresh forms."

Very beautiful and possibly true, but the critic who sets out to review examples in an incomplete art, one lacking in tradition and examples selected through long centuries of creative effort, one merely in a state of evolution, is up against a difficult proposition. Of those unfortunate reviewers associated with this or that irresponsible publication, whose dictum is valueless, little need be said. That they are compelled to become mere adjuncts to one or another publicity department of producing concerns reflects, not on them, but on their employers.

But nearly every critic feels hedged in by conflicting responsibilities. In the interests of all, the art of production must improve, and manifestly there can be no classing the worst examples with the best. As a matter of common justice there must be discrimination, yet it does not seem fair to deal harshly with modest inexperience. While little consideration need be exercised toward the producer who makes extravagant claims for a product so decidedly inferior that it is below the average of quality, such extreme cases are rare. The critic is oftenest called upon to exercise judgment in sifting merits from faults in one composition.

To be a connoisseur, to be unbiased, to be fearless, to be all that he should be and be loved as well no critic need expect—the best he can hope for is to win the respect of high-minded men among exhibitors and producers and enjoy the purely secret satisfaction of having done his level best with all the courage and intelligence at his command.

From the point of view of a playwright I have felt the sting of seemingly-unjust criticism. Sometimes I have realized that the faults found were mine, and I have sought to remedy them in subsequent composition, but I do not recall having thanked any critic for telling me the bitter truth, not, at least, as I have thanked him when that truth was palatable. On such occasions I have openly declared his capability.

Sometimes the producer, especially when he is new in the game, rises in his wrath and threatens to withdraw his advertisement, cut off his best means of communication with the exhibitor, unless the author of an unfavorable comment is thrown out of employment, as if a contemptible wrong must be done to the writer who had the best interests of his paper at heart in order to atone for a possible error of judgment, more likely a bitter drop of tonic truth. But wise producers never attempt to bully the press. They even think it over, though it is hard to convince a mother that HER child has any faults, and they have even been known—this is no exaggeration—to thank the man who applied the caustic, thank him after the wound has healed.

There are plenty of producers today who realize that a critic could not exist as one if he sold his conscience. Not to be bought, not to be cajoled, not to be bullied, the capable critic devotes many of his best hours to generous appreciation, to unrewarded help, to kindly encouragement—who else in the entire business can be credited with more spontaneous efforts to do good? Art for the author may be merely expressive, for the critic it is ever impressive.

The critic who attempts deception, who imagines that he is fooling anybody, will soon be found out and scorned accordingly. There are perils enough in his work without his adding insincerity to them. It is his first duty to get at the truth. He does this through his impressions—his sensibilities become refined by constant application to his work. When he watches the public verdict to determine whether or not his judgment is keeping good time, he is most surely on his way to the realization of his ambition and to the ultimate release of the best that is in him. He is learning how to foretell.

Nearly every review from a dependable source is closely scrutinized by the exhibitor, so closely that he soon learns to rightly estimate each ounce of information he examines. On his support largely depends the advertising value of a periodical devoted to moving picture interests, and the critic who fails to consider him does not truly consider the best interests of his paper. The exhibitor wants to get at the truth. This does not mean that the public should not be considered, nor does it mean that criticism should not be creative for the producers' sake.

The highest criticism may well be "a creation within a creation." "The meaning of any beautiful created thing is as much in the soul of him who looks at it with full appreciation as in the soul of him who wrought it." It is even possible, especially in a composite art, for the completed product to achieve an effect beyond that conceived by either author or director.

Though the first requirement of criticism is ability to judge the quality of an artistic work, it is manifestly impossible for the critic not to reveal some of his own personality in what he writes, but that personality, if it be neither fawning nor fractious, often gives charm and variety to the review. We look at an object of art from differing angles, and its beauty—"beauty is the symbol of all symbols"—may have as many meanings as a man has models. An inspiring work of art has a new secret for each one of us, a secret to be revealed through criticism.

Motion Picture Men Greet President

Chief Executive of the United States Is the Guest of the Motion Picture Board of Trade at Big Banquet at Biltmore Hotel—In His Happiest Vein President Wilson Gives a Heart to Heart Talk to His Enthusiastic Hosts—All Branches of Trade Well Represented and Event Is Pronounced the Most Auspicious in History of Motion Pictures in America.

By W. Stephen Bush.

IT ALL came about in the eternal fitness of things—the President of the United States made a most graceful bow to the Motion Picture and said a lot of cordial and intimate things to a most representative gathering of motion picture men. The great assemblage in the Biltmore Thursday night, January 27, was far more than a meeting and far more than a banquet—it was a demonstration. It was a double demonstration. The chief magistrate of the nation demonstrated that the motion picture has reached its meridian in public favor and esteem—his attendance and his speech were the outward and visible signs of the prestige and the importance which the New Art has attained. The audience demonstrated its appreciation of the President's tribute to the screen, and, it must be said, likewise demonstrated its own quality. Some such thought as this surely was growing in the President's mind while he cast his eyes over the brilliant and lively assemblage. His scrutiny was extremely well-bred, but it was none the less thorough. Mr. Wilson has carried off some very definite impressions from the banquet hall on the 19th floor of the Biltmore.

The President At His Best.

It has been said that the great leaders in a democracy feel a renewal of their faith and take fresh impulse and courage from close contact with the people. Undoubtedly this was true of President Wilson on his last visit to New York. When the film men last saw him but two short weeks ago he looked care-worn and seemed to be buoyed up by a visible effort On Thursday night, on the contrary, there was discernible that clearness of the eye which is often the reflection of the clearness of the mind; his step was elastic, his manner suggested the distinguished scholar who had stepped forth from his closet and rejoiced to mingle with the red-blooded world. By the way, the President left us motion picture men in no doubt about the generous quantity of that fluid in his own veins. Indeed, one of the most charming things about his visit and his speech was the tone of frankness and even intimacy which crept into his utterance from the very first and which not only commanded our respect, but which instantly won all our hearts. Before other public bodies he may have discussed the momentous issues in our national life with greater gravity and with more formal words, and even with more deliberation. To us, however, he gave a glimpse of his heart; to us he addressed the utterances of his inmost soul. Beneath the vein of jest there ran a current of very strong and genuine and honest human emotion. When the film men were thus taken into the confidence of the President their response was immediate and sincere. There is the applause perfunctory, and there is the applause spontaneous, and there are many mixed grades. Thursday night the President's speech evoked none but the spontaneous kind. It was the tribute of man to man and much of it from woman to man, which made it all the more precious.

Woodrow Wilson

The committee which had been appointed by the Board of Trade to receive the President and Mrs. Wilson, consisting of J. R. Freuler, E. A. MacManus, J. W. Binder, William A. Johnston, Patrick A Powers and W. Stephen Bush, received word soon after 10 o'clock that the President had left the Waldorf-Astoria and was on his way to the Biltmore The committee, assisted by Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton and Mrs. Dudley Field Malone, immediately proceeded to perform its duty and semi-circled about the entrance on Forty-third Street, which had been specially reserved for the President and his party.

There was a brief wait presently broken by crashes of the national anthem and by the tread of soldiers. The Coast Artillery, the escort of the President, formed a guard of honor about the carriage containing Mr. Wilson and his party. The President alighted, helped Mrs. Wilson to descend to the sidewalk and then followed by his unofficial retinue entered the hotel. Mrs. Wilson, who knew Mrs. Malone, was escorted by the latter and Mrs. Blackton, while the President was taken in charge by Mr. Binder. There was no delay in reaching the elevators, but there was a moment's confusion when some employee of the hotel wanted to exclude a party of alert and active men in evening clothes who had appeared from no one seemed to know where. The elevator with the President in it ascended without them, and it seemed doubtful whether they would be allowed in the second elevator when some one stage-whispered "Secret Service," and there was no more hesitation.

The President and Mrs. Wilson lost no time in getting from their little reception parlor into the banquet hall. From the moment the chief magistrate entered the hall and the band began to play there appeared that remarkable mutual and sympathetic understanding between the honored guest of the evening and his hundreds of eager hosts. It resounded out of the cheers and toasts given with such sincerity, both to the President and to the First Lady of the Land; it shone out in the speech he made, it characterized every move of guest and hosts culminating in a close and friendly approach of the one to the others.

What Manner of Audience Met the President.

I have delayed the description of the audience too long. The story is not plain and no inferences are warranted until the reader has had a glimpse of this audience. I have characterized it as brilliant and lively. As the President said: "When you think of a great nation, ladies and gentlemen, you are not thinking of a visible thing; you are thinking of a spiritual thing," he responded subconsciously, perhaps, to the atmosphere of his audience.

There was a manifest spiritual force in that gathering. The women and the men kindled with enthusiasm for the most democratic of arts—the Motion Picture; they were there to attest their loyalty and evince their joy, and something in that honest and contagious enthusiasm must have caught the President. The audience radiated with intelligence. The creative minds of the art were present; great writers and statesmen were present; the pioneers were present, no less enthused than the newest recruit. One splendid touch took this audience out of the common-place and redeemed it from the bane of the average—I mean the touch of Bohemianism. It was all-pervading just because it was all very subtle. An honest joy of living, a humble satisfaction with one's mission in life, a love of color and a worship of beauty—will you, gentle reader, allow me to offer you this as a substitute for a formal definition of Bohemianism. It's the creed of many motion picture men at any rate.

The scene in the handsome banquet hall at the rising of the President will never be forgotten by any of the nine hundred men and women who were lucky enough to witness it, indeed to be parts of it. When, in the course of an elaborated speech, Commodore Blackton said that every good American citizen ought to uphold the President, the applause of the audience rose in cyclonic waves. It heartened the President; I sat near enough to him to bear testimony.

The President spoke ex tempore. He is an extremely fluent speaker. Oratorical flourishes and melodramatic climaxes he obviously disdains, but in the coining of felicitous phrases and in epigrammatic eloquence no public speaker of the day may be compared with him. Mr. Wilson's best and most obedient servant is the English language. The driving power in all his public utterances is unmistakable sincerity. His voice is clear and smooth, his delivery not ungraceful, his gestures are few but natural and effective.

Gets in Quick Touch With His Hearers.

He put himself in symathy with his audience in his first four sentences: "Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen: I wondered, when I was on my way here, what would be expected of me. It occurred to me, perhaps, that I would only be expected to go through the motions of a speech. And then I reflected that, never having seen myself speak, and generally having my thoughts concentrated upon what I had to say, I had not the least opinion what my motions were when I made a speech—because it has never occurred to me, in my simplicity, to make a speech before a mirror. If you will give me time, I will rehearse this difficult task and return and perform it for you."

The audience was surprised as well as amused. The very next words showed that the President was familiar by design and not at all by any accident.

"I have sometimes been very much chagrined in seeing myself in a motion picture," he continued when the laughter had spent itself. "I have often wondered if I really was that kind of a guy (great laughter and applause). The extraordinary rapidity with which I walked, for example (laughter), the instantaneous and apparently automatic nature of my motions; the way in which I produce uncommon grimaces and altogether the extraordinary exhibition I make of myself sends me to bed very unhappy." (Laughter.)

At this point Friend Richardson, the projection expert seated right across the hall from the President, gloated in obvious glee and mentally shouted, "Overspeeding."

Formality Thrown to the Winds.

This departure from the dry and formal simply captured the audience and it gave way to unrestrained merriment. The President continued:

"I often think to myself that although all the world is a stage, and men and women but actors upon it, after all the external appearances of things are very superficial indeed.

"I am very much more interested in what my fellowmen are thinking about than in the motions through which they are going, and while we unconsciously display a great deal of human nature in our visible actions, there are some very deep waters within which no picture can sound.

"When you think of a great nation, ladies and gentlemen, you are not thinking of a visible thing; you are thinking of a spiritual thing. I suppose a man in public office feels this with a peculiar poignancy because what it is important for him to know are the real, genuine sentiments and emotions of those people.

"I found out what was going on in Mexico in a very singular way—by hearing a sufficiently large number of liars talk about it. (Laughter). I think the psychological explanation will interest you. You know that the truth is consistent with itself; one piece matches another. Now, no man is an inventive enough liar not to bring in large sections of truth in what he is saying. (Laughter). And after all the liars have done talking to you about the same subject, it will come to your consciousness that long and large pieces of what they said match; that in that respect they all said the same thing; that the variations are lies, and the consistencies are the truth. (Laughter.)

"They will not all tell you the same piece of the truth, so that if you hear enough of them you may get the whole of the truth (laughter). And yet it is very tedious to hear men lie, particularly when you know they are lying. (Laughter.) You feel like reminding them that really your time is important to you, and that you wish they would get down to business and tell you what is really so; but they don't; they want this adventure of their invention; they want to give an excursion to their minds before they get down to business. And what I particularly object to is a very able man with a lot of invention coming to me and lying to me, because then the interview is very tedious and long before we get down to business. I got to know that story so by heart that the last time a deputation visited me about Mexico I thought I would save time, and I told them exactly what they were going to say to me (laughter), and they went away very much confused; they wondered how I had heard it (laughter), because they knew it was not so. (Laughter and applause.)

"And yet underneath all of this are those great pulses which throb in great bodies of men, and drive the great powers of state. And I wonder how men venture to try to deceive a great Nation. There never was a profounder saying than that of Lincoln's, that you can fool all the people sometimes, and some people all the time, but you can not fool all the people all the time. (Applause.)

"The best way to silence any friend of yours whom you know to be a fool is to induce him to hire a hall. (Laughter.) Nothing chills pretense like exposure; nothing will bear the tests of examination for a shorter length of time than pretense. At least so I try to persuade myself, and yet there are some humbugs that have been at large a long time. (Laughter). I suppose there is always a rising generation whom they can fool, but the older heads ought not to permit themselves to be fooled; and I should think that in a year like the year 1916, when there is to be a common reckoning for everybody, men would hurry up and begin to tell the truth. (Laughter). They are not hurrying about it; they are taking their time; but the American people are going to insist upon it before this year is over—that everybody comes up and is counted on the great questions of the day. They are not going to take any excuses; they are not going to take any pretenses; they are going to insist upon the goods delivered on the spot (applause), and anybody that declines to deliver them is going to go bankrupt and ought to go bankrupt. Everybody ought to get what's coming to them. But I came here to say that I hoped you would not believe that I am what I appear to be in the pictures you make of me. I really am a pretty decent fellow (laughter and applause), and I have a lot of emotions that do not show on the surface; and the things that I don't say would fill a library. (Laughter. The great cross of public life is that you are not allowed to say all the things that you think."

Delightful Presidential Confessions.

These presidential confessions were delightful, and the audience yearned for more. In a democracy the people love to see the great unbend, they hate perfection whether real or assumed. Hence the keen relish of the audience for the President's avowed human weaknesses. Mr. Wilson never before bared his heart so completely: a thousand skilled interviewers never drew from him a tithe of this insight into the feelings of a President who would like to get back at his pursuers. Mr. Wilson turned fully around and looked the men around the speakers table closely in the eye as he continued:

"Some of my opinions about some men are extremely picturesque, and if you could only take a motion picture of them, you would think it was Vesuvius in eruption. And yet all these volcanic forces, all these things that are going on inside of me, have to be concealed under a most grave and reverent exterior; and I have to make believe that I have nothing but respectable and solemn thoughts all the time; whereas there is a lot going on inside of me that would be entertaining to any audience anywhere."

Mr. Wilson had said something about a great statesman and a cocked hat, but that was before he became the official tenant of the White House. He went on:

"I am very much complimented that you should have allowed me to come in at this late hour in your feast, and without partaking of the pleasures of conversation, to make you all, whether you would or not, listen to me talk. My object in life is not talking. I wish there were less talking to do. I wish that not everybody had to be persuaded to do the right thing. I wish that the things that are obvious did not have to be explained. I wish that principles did not have to be re-expounded.

"We all, in our hearts, agree upon the fundamental principles of our lives, of our life as a nation. Now, we ought to tax ourselves with the duty of seeing that those principles are realized in action; and no fooling about it. The only difficult things in life, ladies and gentlemen, are the applications of the principles of right and wrong. I can set forth the abstract principles of right and wrong; and so can you. But when it comes down to an individual item of conduct, whether in public affairs or private affairs—there comes the pinch! In the first place, to see the right way to do it; and in the second place, to do it that way. If we could only agree that in all matters of public concern, we would adjourn our private interests, look each other frankly in the face, and say, 'We are all ready at whatever sacrifice of our own interest, to do in common the thing that the common weal demands,' what an irresistible force America would be!

"I can point out to you a few men. Of course I am not going to name them now, whom every man ought to be afraid of because nothing but the truth resides in them. Men, I have one in particular in mind whom I have never caught thinking about himself. I would not dare make a pretense in the presence of that man even if I wanted to. His eyes contain the penetrating light of truth before which all disguises fall away.

"Now, suppose we were all like that; it would hasten the millenium immensely, and if Americans were always to do what, when the real temper of America is aroused, they do, the world would always turn to America for guidance, and America would be the most potent and influential force in all the world. So when I look at pictures, whether they move or whether they do not move, I think of all the deep sources of happiness and of pain, of joy and of misery that lie beneath that surface, and I am interested chiefly in the heart that beats underneath it all, for I know that there is the pulse and the machinery of all the great forces of the world."

The President ended abruptly but not inaptly and there were renewed thunders of applause. He smiled in recognition, as one who would say: "Well, friends, I have told you just how I feel, and I want you to feel with me."

He and Mrs. Wilson were escorted back to the reception parlor, where the President expressed his pleasure at the huge and artistic bouquet of flowers in the hands of his wife.

wife. He chatted for just a minute or two with the members of the reception committee and then left for the Pennsylvania Station, where he took a special train for Washington.

The Banquet a Great Success.

The first annual dinner of the Motion Picture Board of Trade was held on the nineteenth floor of the Biltmore Hotel. Eight hundred and fifty tickets had been issued and not one was left on Wednesday afternoon. Requests by letter, by wire and in person came by the dozen all day Thursday, but they had to be declined. The gathering at the Biltmore, described more fully in another part of this report, surpassed in point of quantity and of quality any similar assemblage of film men in the past. The strong magnet of attraction was, of course, the presence of the chief magistrate of the nation, but the growing desire of film men to get together and be friends had a good deal to do both with the imposing attendance and the splendid spirit which prevailed all evening.

J. Stuart Blackton, Toastmaster.

Around the speaker's table on a raised platform on the southern side of the hotel were seen the toastmaster, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, the president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, and chairman of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; Roy Howard; Bartow S. Weeks, Justice of the Supreme Court; Hudson Maxim, the famous inventor; Edwin H. Markham, the equally famous poet; Bainbridge Colby, the representative of the Hearst papers; Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady; John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation; J. P. Tumulty, secretary to President Wilson; William F. McCombs, George H. Bell, Hon. Martin W. Littleton, Robert Adamson, Fire Commissioner of New York; Joseph Engel, of Metro Films; Nicholas Power, David Bispham, Watterson R. Rothacker, Dudley Field Malone, Collector of the Port of New York; Dr. Carey Grayson, Hon. John Purroy Mitchel, Mayor of New York, E. A. MacManus, and W. Stephen Bush.

Splendid Music, Brilliant Scenes.

The music attracted early attention by reason of its excellence in the selection of its program no less than in its faultless and spirited execution. The guests began to discuss the offerings on the menu just a little after 8, prayer having been offered by the Rev. Cyrus T. Brady.

The toastmaster began the business of the evening by reading the following telegrams:

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, President Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, 18 East 41st street, New York:

Am engaged in an important experiment, making it impossible for me to get away. Regret I cannot be with you to participate in the festivities of the evening. Please express my good wishes to all.

THOMAS A. EDISON.

J. W. Binder, Dodge City, Kans., Jan. 27, 1916.
Care Hotel Biltmore, New York:

Please accept heartiest congratulations for yourself and Motion Picture Board of Trade on progress made thus far towards strengthening and uplifting picture business and also upon having as guest of honor at its first banquet the chief executive of the greatest country in the world. Regret exceedingly my inability to attend, but will, with your permission, rise and drink a silent toast to our worthy President and for the continued success of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. Greetings.

CARL LAEMMLE.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 26, 1916.

J. W. Binder, Executive Secretary Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, 18 East 41st street, New York City:

Regret exceedingly that the space of three thousand miles prevents my attending your dinner tomorrow night, particularly upon this occasion, when the workers of our beloved craft are to be honored by the presence of his excellency, the President of these United States. I send to you herewith my very best wishes and will forward my contribution at once. Sincerely.

D. W. GRIFFITH.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 26, 1916.

J. W. Binder, Secretary Motion Picture Board of Trade, 18 East 41st street, New York City, New York:

Congratulations on securing as our guest of honor tonight the foremost statesman, scholar and historian of America, the President of the United States. It is high time the people of this country realized that motion picture photography is no longer a form of frivolous amusement, but is the last method of genius for recording human thought on parchment and is as great an advance on the old printing as Guttenberg's invention was over the quill pen. For this reason we are asking the reaffirmation of the guarantees of the constitution for a free press.

THOMAS DIXON.

New York, Jan. 27, 1916.

J. W. Binder, M. P. Board of Trade, Biltmore Hotel:

Only confinement to my bed prevents me from participating in the glowing demonstration of the progress of the mastodonic industry of motography. My sincerest congratulations to every atom in the trade and sincerest respects to the honored guests.

ARTHUR H. SPIEGEL.

Chester B. Beecroft, Motion Picture Board of Trade Dinner, Hotel Biltmore:

Following telegram just received at office from Denver: "Heavy snowslide so delayed train could not possibly reach New York before Friday night, therefore, abandoned trip and returning to Los Angeles. Please present my greetings and respects to members and guests of the Board of Trade and express my regret at inability to be with them tonight.

"DAVID HORSLEY."

Jacob W. Binder.

The Toastmaster's Eloquent Words.

Commodore Blackton made the introductory speech of the evening. The President was evidently one of his most attentive listeners. Mr. Blackton spoke as follows:

Mr. President, Our Honored Guests and Ladies and Gentlemen: It is my honor and privilege to welcome you here to this, the first annual banquet of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; and my pleasurable duty first is to ask you to give a standing toast to the President of the United States.

Banquets of boards of trade are usually grave and ponderous things. This affair tonight has been made charming by the presence of the First Lady of our land and of all these other charming ladies (applause); and so I want to propose another toast to the ladies, God bless them!

Mr. President and ladies and gentlemen: It is late, and I am going to speak briefly. The purpose of the Motion Picture Board of Trade is stated in its insignia which is printed on all the menus; the eagle without spread wings, bearing on his breast the words "Progression, Protection and Promotion." Protection in every branch of this great industry; Protection for every member in that industry; Promotion of harmony, of unity, and community of interests; Promotion of fair and honest business methods presented with malice toward none and with charity to all. (Applause.)

The purpose of the Motion Picture Board of Trade is to fight adverse laws which threaten our industry, and to see that the existing laws are maintained and properly administered. The purpose of this Board of Trade is to gather together the loose threads in the warp and woof of this many-sided profession, and to weave them on the loom of progress into a cloth of silver and gold for the mutual benefit and prosperity of all concerned. (Applause.)

Dudley Field Malone.

To hark back to the beginning of motion pictures is not so very far. We have to turn back time for about twenty years, and I know of no other industry that has grown with such wonderful rapidity and reached such startling magnitude as this industry. In perhaps ten years, one might say, because it is in the last ten years, the wonderful strides in this industry have been accomplished.

And it was when it was discovered that the picture could play upon human emotions, could evoke tears or laughter at will—it was then that other great art was enlisted, the art of literature; and so Shakespeare, Thackeray, Dickens, Victor Hugo, Dumas, became known to millions of people, who, before that, had never known even what those names meant.

You have perhaps heard of the man who was asked if he knew his Shakespeare, and who answered, "Yes, I have heard of the book, but I really forget who wrote it."

The Screen's Work for Humanity.

When standard and classic literature began to be shown on the screen in every city, town, village and hamlet in this country, and in every other country in the world, men like that learned who wrote Shakespeare, they learned that Les Miserables did not write Victor Hugo. They learned that things and places existed of which they had never dreamed, and a new and wonderful world full of marvelous possibilities opened up before the vision of all mankind; and it was the motion picture that presented that new world to their vision. What have pictures done for humanity? Rather let us say, what have they not done? Campaigns against disease have been conducted successfully through the motion picture—warfare against carelessness and campaigns for the prevention of fire have, I am told by our fire commissioner, resulted in decreasing greatly the destructive fires in this and every other large city. The widowed mothers' pension allowance was passed in the State of New York because of the widespread exhibition of a motion picture showing the need of such an allowance and through the efforts of one of the ladies who took one of these films to Albany and showed it in the Assembly Chamber.

Preparedness and the seeds of it are being sown to millions of American citizens now. The latent and perhaps dormant patriotism in their hearts is being aroused. The fear of God and the fear of the enemy is being implanted in their hearts, and the motion picture is doing it. I know that that is so, because I know of a certain manufacturer who received a letter from a certain very famous author, who shall be nameless because he is here tonight, and is very bashful, but he wrote: "I am a believer in preparedness. I have been married eight years" (laughter and applause). Pardon me; you did not let me finish. "I have been married eight years, and my wife does not believe in preparedness." (Laughter.) "At least, she did not, but now she has been converted. Last night she saw a preparedness movie and this morning she wants me to buy an aeroplane or a battleship or something." (Laughter.)

Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady.

In the mining district of Pennsylvania ten years ago there were 4,000 saloons flourishing. Today in the same district there are less than 500, and the motion picture has driven the rest of them out. (Applause.) What has become of the common burlesque show, the low vaudeville, the cheap claptrap melodrama? The motion picture was so much better, so much more real and so much cleaner that it has put all of those very objectionable shows entirely out of business (applause). We hear frantic appeals from professional agitators and notoriety seekers about the need for censorship. What has become of the plays of two years ago, the indecent plays?

The Public the Only Censor.

The public, that great American public, censored them through the box office, refused to go to see them, and they died in anywhere from two weeks to less than a season. But remember, ladies and gentlemen, that the "Old Homestead" and "In Old Kentucky" have been running for from twenty to twenty-five years, and are still running and making money for their authors and owners. (Applause.) It is the public, the fifty million people who every week go to the motion picture shows, who are the real censors.

I was asked the other day to state what effect the motion picture has had upon the drama. My answer to that was, the motion picture today is the drama. (Applause.) The stage play will always be a power, but the power of the motion picture is a hundredfold. As an illustration, a popular stage favorite such as Maude Adams or E. H. Sothern plays to perhaps one thousand people a night, six nights in the week, and two matinees, or approximately eight thousand persons during one week. Multiply that by forty weeks, the average theatrical season, and you have three hundred and twenty thousand people who have seen that play and that player in one year. As a contrast, take the motion picture star or any one of the players. They appear in from thirty to fifty different pictures each year. Those pictures are reproduced in great numbers, and are shown simultaneously every day, in every city, town, village and hamlet in the United States. So that in one year the audience of a motion picture star is over 50,000,000 people, multiplied by as many times as the film appears in different towns. In other words—and to conclude, the motion picture shows to more human beings in one year than the star of the stage drama shows to in his entire lifetime, if he lives to be a hundred and starts in when he is one year old. (Applause.)

The greatest name in a nation is that of the head of the nation; and the Motion Picture Board of Trade and the industries it represents have been honored tonight by the presence of the Chief Executive of our nation, whose hands may every good American citizen uphold at this time. I have the honor, ladies and gentlemen, to present to you our honored guest, the President of the United States. (Great applause.)

The story of the President's magnificent response has been told.

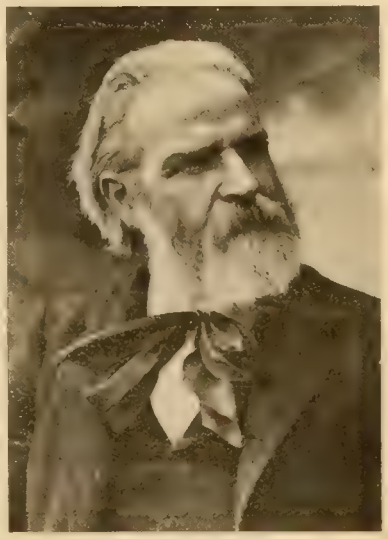
Mayor Mitchel Speaks.

After the President had gone, Commodore Blackton introduced as the next speaker Mayor Mitchel. The Mayor said in substance:

Together with my pleasure in attending this dinner and meeting you, was my gratification at the opportunity of listening to the profound philosophy of the speech of our President (applause), cloaked, as it was, and always is, in brilliant epigram and metaphor; but I just came to this dinner from another, where he spoke to representatives of the railroad business from every part of the United States upon this great paramount issue of national defense.

I wish that you could have heard what he said to the men and women at that dinner. I wish you could have heard him picture the ideal of America, the ideal of Peace, with justice and with progress; peace at home, justice toward other nations, and progress-making for the upbuilding of our democratic institutions, that they may be handed down as a heritage to posterity.

That he pictured as the ideal of America; and he pointed out to the men and women there that that ideal only can be achieved if America can be made while she is doing that work efficient to preserve the great institutions that she has built up here, and to maintain the ideal of democracy. (Applause.)



Edwin Markham.

He did not say, but I think is was the spirit of his speech that now in this Republic of ours where he, the leader of this people, is appealing to the men of America to pay that minimum physical tax which is required to make of them efficient units in the national defense, that there is on trial the very system and esence of democratic institutions.

Preparedness the Hour's Theme and Need.

What will it avail us, what will it avail posterity if we, in the United States, build up under these institutions, democracy to the highest conceivable point of efficient serviceability, if, at the same time, democracy should fail in the elemental and primal efficiency of self preservation? (Applause.) That is the issue and that is the test and the appeal is made by the leader of the American people, the President of the United States, to the citizenship of our nation, to the patriotism of our nation. It seems to me that we must say to one another that surely there was a time when that appeal could not have been made to the American people without an instant response. (Applause.)

Are we to admit that patriotism is languishing in this nation? Surely not! If there be any apathy upon this matter, it springs not of lack of patriotism, but of lack of appreciation and understanding of the facts. The President is now presenting those facts to the nation. Throughout the country there are ten thousand others who are trying to uphold his hands and to lend every aid to him and to the Government in bringing about an effective system of national defense. Surely, no more fundamental appeal could be made to our people than that which he is making in these days of the trial of the nation; and I think it is a privilege that New York citizens, citizens of this great commonwealth—I might almost call it—which perhaps, more than any other community in the United States, has a direct and immediate influence in the upbuilding of our national defenses, to have heard the President upon this great question tonight; and it should be a stimulus to all of us to renewed efforts to uphold his hands and to aid him in securing from the Congress of our country that legislation which is necessary to the upbuilding of the defense of the people of the United States. (Applause.)

Bainbridge Colby.

A Brilliant Speech by Malone.

The Mayor was followed by Dudley Field Malone, who spoke as follows:

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen, if I were sure that I was the last speaker, I would say it was eminently appropriate that, after the speeches you have heard, we should all depart peacefully to our homes. (Laughter and applause.)

But because I am in the belief that I am not the last speaker, I do not make any such suggestion (laughter); because I know what it is to intrude on the time of the following speakers, having had intrusions of my own (laughter), and I am always mindful of the very old story, which, in its ancient character, may have novelty to us of this generation, of the criminal who was brought before the English jurist, having been convicted of felonious assault, and the purist said, "You scoundrel, I give you ten years. Now what have you got to say to that?" He said, "All I have to say Your Honor, is that you are very generous with another man's time." (Laughter).

Ladies and gentlemen, this idea of having anything to do with the temporary care in a large city of the Chief Executive of the nation is a hectic job. (Laughter).

I have been on the firing line since ten minutes to six this morning, having reached home at three o'clock the same morning, and I feel all of the vigor and enthusiasm which you hope I feel, and which may best speak an early conclusion: But I do want to say to you that I am very, very happy to have come here, and particularly happy just as an American citizen to pay my tribute of profound gratitude to a man who has proved in national opinion the practical national political and patriotic value of the moving pictures in the picture which is doing such tremendous work to arouse public opinion to national preparation and defense—your toastmaster and my friend, with his picture: Commodore Blackton and "The Battle Cry of Peace" (applause.), because, ladies and gentlemen, it is in no spirit of race prejudice, it is in no spirit pro anybody or pro anything European that the people of America are bespeaking the necessity of an adequate defense. We are preparing for a war against nobody, and we are preparing for a war of no particular duration and at no particular time, but we have decided as a common sense people that it were an act of supreme folly that America, dedicated in her benevolence to the service of mankind, shall not go out with the smile of Justice on her face and with olive branches in her hand, while the nations of the earth, armed to the teeth, may, in the future, be covetous of our institutions and the integrity of the nation.

Peace or War, We Must Be Ready.

And we do not know whether our country may find itself in the midst of a protracted peace or facing the necessity of war, but whether it be peace or war, we must have the men of the ready army and the ready navy sailing the seas to protect the shores of America and as an international police force to insist on the actuality of the statutes of international law, and we, of this country, intend to build out of the spirit of the citizenship the willingness to serve America in time of war as well as in time of peace, because, whether it be peace or war, the obligation of the citizenship will be there. In peace or war, on the bridge must stand a man with the grace of God in his hand.

"Meet fire with fire when duty calls,
Or melt his medals to rifle balls.
We are not yet free from the shades of night
In this age of man where might makes right."

"In that windswept realm of eternity
We may find that fable Arcady
Where Love is the King of the things that are,
Our peace is borne on our ships of war,
And to keep your war clouds abaft the sun,
You must bend the keel and cast the gun.
Posterity reaps what ye sow today,
And not kill the harvest need ye pay;
So fire your forges and dam the bills,
For the wings of peace must have iron quills."

(Applause.)

The toastmaster next called upon Walter W. Irwin as one of the men who did some of the strenuous fighting in Washington. Mr. Irwin spoke briefly of the principles and policies of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and of the memorable fight against the Crafts Bill at Washington. He was succeeded by Edwin Markham, the poet, who delighted the audience with many humorous autobiographical data and J. W. Binder, the executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. He said it was a dangerous thing to talk. He therefore cut his remarks short, "newspaper fashion" as he put it.

A Picturesque Closing Incident.

The evening or rather the night was not to close without a picturesque incident, in fact it ended with just a little anti-climax. The Rev. Dr. Brady had been introduced by the toastmaster as a man who could ride to success on the waves of disaster or words to that effect. He added: "How much he will say depends upon how much you laugh at him and how much interest you show." The Rev. Doctor did not respond to this tactful summons as many a vaudeville performer might have. Instead he established a new record in after-dinner oratory. Here is the complete and literal transcript of his speech:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: How do you do? Good night."

Dr. Brady disappeared rapidly. The slowly departing guests lingered in animated groups and this was the consensus of opinion:

"It was the proudest and the gladdest day in motion picture history."

Prominent Guests Express Enthusiasm.

That the banquet is regarded as one of the most significant events in the history of motion pictures is indicated by these expressions of opinion given to the Moving Picture World by prominent men:

Nicholas Power, president of the Nicholas Power Company: "I have attended motion picture functions of all descriptions in years gone by; but never in my most optimistic moment did I dream of a gathering such as that at the Biltmore. It was a glorious testimony to the value and importance of our art."

Siegmund Lubin, president of the Lubin Company: "The Board of Trade is to be congratulated on having secured such a representative assemblage to welcome the President of the United States. As I looked around the room it seemed to me that every branch of the industry was represented at its best—the men who finance the pictures, the men who direct them, and the men and women who act in them. When I recalled our humble beginnings it all seemed unbelievable."

Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Company: "At last the motion picture industry is no longer 'in its infancy.' While I have always taken great pride in my connection with the art, I feel now as if my responsibilities have increased a hundred fold. The Wilson dinner has done more to give us the position which belongs to us than any other group of events that has marked our years of endeavor."

Arthur H. Spiegel, president of the Equitable Company: "It appears particularly significant to me that President Wilson thought the picture interests of enough importance to attend the Board of Trade banquet in preference to accepting the invitations of other organizations. In order to speak to the picture men he was obliged to disappoint at least six other gatherings. An event of this kind is indication enough of our importance in the life of the nation."

John Miller, Buffalo Times Syndicate: "I believe I was one of the first to recognize motion pictures as a great force that should be cultivated, not opposed by newspapers. But if somebody had told me a few years ago that in the year 1916 the picture men would give a banquet attended by the President of the United States and men representing the highest accomplishment in all of the arts, I would have confessed hailing from Missouri. I'm not from Missouri any more. These picture people can do anything."

Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Company: "It is a wonderful testimonial to the motion picture industry when the President of the United States and the Mayor of the first city, attend a dinner such as that of Thursday night and meet on common ground the men and women responsible for the industry's growth. I only hope and earnestly pray that the men engaged in this business will put into actual practice some of the splendid and inspiring principles of conduct expounded by the President."

Joseph Engel, treasurer Metro Corporation: "In the history of motion pictures there has been no more significant event than the presence of President Wilson at the banquet of our Board of Trade. It was an honor that all of us must appreciate and we should work to keep photoplays up to a standard that will justify the esteem in which they are held today."

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players: "The presence of the President of the United States at the motion picture banquet indicates in the most definite manner the real dignity and prestige with which the film industry is now associated in the minds of the great leaders of thought and activity throughout the world. The moral support given the screen art by the presence of the nation's chief executive on this occasion is a manifestation of the remarkable advancement generally conceded to our great industry."

Daniel Frohman, of the Famous Players: "The first annual dinner of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, a brilliant success in itself, was enhanced by the presence of the nation's leading figure, President Wilson. The fact that the occasion was deemed important enough to induce the President to leave the weighty cares of office, reveals in a remarkable degree the estimation in which the motion picture is held by men of affairs of the first rank."

J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe: "The Board of Trade has been given the consecration which it needed and deserved. If these banquets are to be continued, as hoped, they will take the place of the different gatherings held heretofore by certain classes of the industry. I believe that the dinners should be restricted to members of the industry."

LYNDE DENIG.

SIDELIGHTS ON A BRILLIANT EVENING.

Some of the Incidents Noted by World Men in and Around the Banquet Room.

ENTER the stenographer into the doings of motion picture men at play. For the first time in the history of the industry every word uttered at a banquet was set down by men who make shorthand writing a business. They worked in relays of from five to three minutes. The result was that few minutes elapsed between utterances and formal record in typewriting.

The reception accorded the First Lady in the Land was a hearty one. The applause broke before she had reached her chair midway the north balcony and exactly opposite the President's seat. She acknowledged the greeting by remaining standing and bowing to the enthusiastic diners. She carried a large fan of black ostrich feathers, but did not permit it to interfere with her view of the assemblage below her nor was it allowed to shut out sight of her. The day had been one Mrs. Wilson may remember, as it was her first visit to New York since becoming mistress of the White House.

Mrs. Wilson won the hearts of all when after passing out of the balcony at her departure she returned to the door and waved to the applauding throng the mass of orchids which had been presented her as she entered the room. One of the newspapers told the story on the following morning how as the presidential party crossed the great station on Seventh avenue on the way to the train, the President offered to carry the huge bouquet for her. Mrs. Wilson declined to yield possession—an action which should afford gratification to those who had the forethought to present it.

One of the aspects of the dinner that had novelty for those unaccustomed to public affairs graced by the presence of the Chief Magistrate was the large number of Secret Service men in the hotel. Dispatches from Washington had intimated the President would be accompanied by three Service men and one capital city detective. There were literally dozens of husky guardians in evidence, although many of them may have been from the local force. There was to be seen in their faces an expression that revealed a lively sense of the responsibility that rests upon those to whom the President's personal safety is confined. There was about them a "don't monkey" atmosphere which was impressive. While there were many whose occupation was obvious, likewise an observer had the feeling there were many wandering around in evening dress whose general air of abstraction was very much assumed. It reminded one of the ancient reference to "the divinity that doth hedge a king;" a measure of safeguarding that is the result of bitter experiences in American history and a reflection, too, of the stirring days in which we live.

There was lively interest for the practical motion picture men in the reference made by the President to the subject of projection. It was in his opening sentences he confided that "I have sometimes been very much chagrined in seeing myself in a motion picture. I have often wondered if I really was that kind of a guy." It aroused the heartiest laughter; it brought his audience closer to him. It was proof the President was through with the more serious work of the day, and had dropped in for a bit of intimate social intercourse.

It is a coincidence that the two motion picture functions which stand out above the many that have marked the rise of the industry have taken place in the same room. The first was the banquet to visiting exhibitors in the summer of 1914. That was held on one of the hottest days of the year. The day of the President's visit, too, was the second warmest January New York day in the history of the local weather bureau. In Brooklyn open street cars were in use. One railroad man said in nine years he knew of no similar occurrence in January. In the afternoon the temperature registered 66 degrees.

The hearty and prolonged applause that followed the reading of the telegram from Carl Laemmle caused eyes to sparkle and cheeks to burn at one table. There was no happier or prouder woman in the room than Mrs. C. L.

"Bill" Oldknow from the South was there, as he is always "there" when there is anything doing in film circles, whether on the Atlantic or Pacific. He remarked as he was leaving the Biltmore that the night was surely the "biggest yet—and the boys will have to go some ever to equal it."

Lewis M. Swaab, the oldest supply man in Philadelphia, and well known in all branches of the trade, was welcomed by many of his friends at the gathering in the reception room preceding the banquet.

Another popular guest was W. C. Carrick, who began his picture career with the well remembered concern of Williams, Brown & Earl.

"Tom" Moore, accompanied by his wife, came all the way from Washington to be present at the banquet and he didn't need a special train to make the trip seem worth while.

Prominent among the exhibitors in attendance were Lee A. Ochs, president of the New York State League, and Samuel H. Trigger.

Siegmund Lubin headed a large Philadelphia delegation including practically all of the officials of the Lubin Company.

Veteran E. B. Dunn, who made motion pictures when the individual frames were higher than they were wide, beamed with pride. Mr. Dunn is a protagonist for the standardization propaganda. He has been for a long time. He remarked that as matters now stand there are prospects that the much needed reform will be carried through. If it can be accomplished the Board of Trade is the agency that will do it.

Edward Earl, treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company, who was present with Mrs. Earl, was busy greeting old friends and making new ones. It is said Mr. Earl possesses keen intuition as to the functions that will prove to be regular occasions. Certain it is he has the reputation of never having landed on a flivver. We met him early in the evening and felt assured the dinner was a "go."

* * *

J. A. Eslow came over from Boston with Mrs. Eslow. He was seated at a table with Universal players.

Roy McCardell, the writer who pulled a ten thousand dollar "Diamond from the Sky," left his jewelry in New Rochelle. He said he feared it would have been dimmed by the brilliance of the occasion. GEORGE BLAISDELL.

OUR PICTURE OF THE PRESIDENT.

The picture of President Wilson which appears on the first page of the story of the Board of Trade banquet, is from a painting made by the late Gustave C. Langenberg and was intended for the Emperor of Germany. Mr. Langenberg died in 1915 and his plans were never carried out. The deceased had a wide reputation as a portrait and landscape painter. The picture is now in the hands of Samuel Proskauer, representative of the administratrix of the estate of the deceased, Miss Elsie Foige.

WOOSTER, O., THEATER ROBBED.

E. P. Mott, manager of the Lyric theater of Wooster, Ohio, writes that a robbery was committed in his theater on the night of Jan. 10 and the heads of his two Power 6A machines with extra parts were stolen. The number of one of the machines is 18090-21666. Mr. Mott wishes to notify managers to look out for this number and to notify him if it turns up.

The Suratt Case Again

Supreme Court Decides That Star's Services Are "Exceptional and Unique"—Sustains the Lasky Company.

IF THE SERVICES of a star of the speaking stage are considered "exceptional and unique," it follows as a matter of course that the photographic reproduction of the same services is also "exceptional and unique," according to a decision handed down in the Supreme Court, New York, this week by Justice Hotchkiss. The actress involved in the proceedings is Valeska Suratt and the litigants are the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and the William Fox Vaudeville Company.

The decision by Justice Hotchkiss favors the contention of the Lasky Company and rules against the demurrer from the original complaint against the Fox Company in an action over the services of Miss Suratt. The Fox Company declared it was impossible to hold it liable to damage for various reasons, among them because Miss Suratt, contrary to her contract with the Lasky Company, appeared in a Fox production; her services as a star on the screen had never been established by a previous appearance in a photoplay. The Justice ruled against this point as against others raised, and the decision now permits the Lasky Company the right to proceed to trial.

By reason of the importance of the two big companies and the star, the case has been watched closely in motion picture circles. Justice Hotchkiss, reviewing the history of the proceedings and the statements, cites that in October, 1914, Miss Suratt signed a contract to appear in a Lasky production, beginning about June 15, 1915, for which she was to receive $5,000 for a four weeks' work, $500 of which was paid in advance. Subsequent to the signing of this contract, Miss Suratt acted in a Fox photoplay, "The Soul of Broadway." The decision says:

"Subsequently, Suratt proceeded to fulfill a contract with defendant (Fox), but, discovering the fraud which had been perpetrated upon her, she recognized her obligation to the plaintiff (Lasky) and is now engaged in performing her contract with it." * * * "Whether the contract between Suratt and the plaintiff (Lasky) was or was not enforcible for want of mutuality is not a question which can be raised by this defendant. At most, the contract was voidable, and so long as Suratt elected to recognize it as a binding obligation it is none of the defendant's business that she might have elected not to perform it. At least, until she made such an election voluntarily as distinguished from an election induced by illegal acts on defendant's part, the question of mutuality is one defendant cannot raise."

Persons intimate with the affairs in the motion picture industry recall that following her withdrawal from the Fox Company's studio Miss Suratt elected to act in the production of the Lasky Company which was "The Immigrant," a Paramount release. Meanwhile the Fox production was released.

Nathan Burkan appeared as counsel for the Lasky Company in the legal proceedings, in association with Arthur S. Friend, general counsel.

Australian Notes

SOME time ago J. C. Williamson, Ltd., the biggest "legit" concern here, announced that they were to produce pictures, and to date have released two three-reelers, entitled "Within Our Gates" and "For Australia," both dealing with the present war situation. They now announce that forthcoming releases will include screen versions of "Officer 666," "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," with Fred Niblo in the leading role, and "Madame X," featuring Muriel Starr.

Australian Films Ltd. are confining their efforts to producing motion picture songs, which are very popular here now.

The Co-Operative Film Exchange recently started a weekly news gazette, which is of moderate interest.

Muriel Starr did not like her first experience of picture acting. She said, in an interview, that it was her intention to have another try on her return to America.

Charles Chaplin is still filling houses here. His latest, "A Night in the Show," played for two weeks running in the three continuous theaters known as the Waddington circuit, each of which has a capacity of 1,000.

* * *

American journalists, when writing about this city, should kindly note that we spell it "SYDNEY," not "SIDNEY." This is an error that has occurred often lately in nearly all the M. P. publications, and the Sydneyites think more of our city than to let it go without protesting.

World Film Reorganizes

Acquires the Stock of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and Elects Arthur Spiegel for Its President—Selznick Out.

FOR several weeks rumors concerning the World Film Corporation have been the principal topics of conversation in motion picture circles in New York. Negotiations that have been pending finally came to a head last week and on Saturday evening, January 29, they had reached the point where a definite statement was possible. This statement was issued by Milton C. Work, chairman of the Board of Directors of the World Film in the following language:

For some time we have been considering the acquisition of another film company, as it became apparent that by doing so we could greatly enhance our efficiency and make and distribute pictures more economically. The Board of the World Film Corporation has, therefore, decided, and their decision has been ratified by the Voting Trustees, to acquire the stock of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation. The majority of the Equitable shareholders have accepted this offer and we believe that all of the shares of the Equitable Corporation will be exchanged under the proposed plan.

Mr. Arthur Spiegel, president of the Spiegel May Stern Company, of Chicago, will head the new combination and take immediate charge of the active conduct of the business. Eight hundred thousand dollars of additional working capital has been provided. The Corporation will release two feature pictures each week. Mr. Spiegel was induced to come to New York only after he had become satisfied that the capital requirements of the new organization had been adequately taken care of, that the future of the company was assured and that it might be used as the basis of a world-wide organization.

Mr. Selznick has cancelled his contract as general manager and resigned as vice-president of the Corporation. He proposes, however, to engage in the manufacture of pictures and will thoroughly co-operate with the new management of the World Film Corporation in the future development of its business.

The new company will bear the name of the World Film Corporation, but the arrangement will continue whereby the two weekly releases will bear the individual titles of the Equitable and World Film. The gross releasing facilities at least for the forthcoming year, will aggregate one hundred and four features.

Mr. Spiegel, the newly installed head of the dual concern, as head of the Spiegel May Stern Company, Chicago, founded and developed to its present magnificent proportions the largest mail order and furniture enterprise in the world, simply through advertising, exploitation and the service he offered and maintained between his house and its customers. The two millions of buyers of Spiegel May Stern Company were won as permanent patrons through faultless, consistent, honest service. The same law of application is to father the future efforts of the great new enterprise Mr. Spiegel now heads.

Specialists are to be in active and sole charge of each of the important departments of the new World Film. Men who have accomplished enduring traits in screendom are to control, without restriction, the important ramifications of the president's office.

Isidor Bernstein will be in direct general control of the production department of both the World and Equitable. Mr. Bernstein, when he assumes command of the fourteen directors at present permanently engaged at the six studios of the company, will have the privilege of being a pioneer in that, from the beginning of the reorganization period, every foot of film created for either World or Equitable will be made from a purely sales standpoint.

Under the supervision of the production department heads the following noted directors will be actively engaged for World Film: Maurice Tourneur, Albert Capellani, Barry O'Neil, Emile Chautard, Frank Crane, and under the direction of these craftsmen these noted stellar players will work for the World: Clara Kimball Young, Holbrook Blinn, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Francis Nelson, Chester Barnett and June Elvidge, and for Equitable these noted directors will work: Frank Powell, James Durkin, S. E. V. Taylor, Edmund Lawrence, Harry Handworth, John Ince and Burton King, and under their direction these stars will work: Gail Kane, Carlyle Blackwell, Clara Whipple, Arthur Ashley, Mary Boland, Bruce McRae, Mary Charleson, Muriel Ostriche, Henry Kolker, Charles J. Ross, John Mason, Edwardes Davis, Edna Wallace Hopper, Gerda Holmes, Kitty Gordon and others.

Within a few weeks when the reorganization period is over, the new companies will launch the most wide-spread, comprehensive and logical direct advertising campaign ever instituted in the field of entertainment. The general magnitude and assured success of the campaign prevented Mr. Spiegel from outlining the plan in advance of its institution, other than to state with extreme sincerity that it was the most plausible direct aid to the exhibitor enterprise yet conceived and that its very originality and daring would carry it to a most successful issue.

With the exception of the branch managers and actual sales forces in the field, each of the heads of the numerous departments will have a vote and vote in the final selection of material to be visualized.

This policy will be a direct effort and ambitious desire to appeal to the ultimate consumer in behalf of the immediate consumer, or to help the exhibitor interest and appeal to his buyer.

Selznick Forms New Company

With a Million Dollars Capital He Organizes the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation—Is President and General Manager.

SINCE the rumors that Lewis J. Selznick was to leave the World Film Corporation became a certainty there has been considerable speculation as to what he would do next. The answer is furnished in a written statement from Mr. Selznick, the substance of which is that he has organized the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation with a capital of $1,000,000 and of which he will be president and general manager.

Studios of the new concern will be located in New York, Cuba and the South, and it is expected that the first release will be ready about October next and that they will follow at the rate of one each month. Mr. Selznick will personally supervise all productions which will be made from scenarios written especially for Mrs. Young, and in which she will be supported by a competent cast.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Jan. 31, at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Pudd'nhead Wilson" at the Strand.

"PUDD'NHEAD WILSON," Mark Twain's famous American story, was presented at the Strand Theater as a moving picture production under the direction of Jesse L. Lasky. Theodore Roberts, the well-known dramatic star, had the title role.

The scene of the story was laid in the South before the war, and the stage version made by the late Frank Mayo was a great success with Mr. Mayo in the name part. A murder trial in which "Pudd'nhead Wilson," the lawyer for the defense, clears his client by use of the finger-print theory—till then, unheard of in the community—is the big situation of the play, and the screen drama.

The Topical Review fashion pictures, travel and educational studies and a new comedy was also on the program. William Lowitz, the pianist, was one of the soloists, and Grace Hoffman and Bruce Weyman, both of whom are favorites at the Strand, were heard in vocal selections.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

Douglas Fairbanks was seen in the Triangle-Fine Arts play "His Picture in the Papers," for the first four days of the week, at the Knickerbocker theater. This is the third Fairbanks picture. Mabel Normand and Roscoe Arbuckle in "He Did and He Didn't" provided the Keystone comedy.

For the last three days of the week W. S. Hart appeared in the Triangle-Kay-Bee, "Hell's Hinges." This is a western play showing Hart at his best. A thrilling scene is presented in the burning of an entire western town. Fred Mace and Sennett, players in the Keystone comedy, "Love Will Conquer," were also on the bill.

"The Spider" at the Broadway.

Pauline Frederick was seen in two distinct roles in "The Spider," a production of the Famous Players Film Company, at the Broadway theater. The photoplay gives Miss Frederick unlimited opportunity, as she plays Valarie St. Cyr, a notorious beauty, and her deserted daughter, Joan. The work of the star and her supporting company did justice to the story. The usual Broadway theater bill was also given.

ALL PARTIES ENJOINED.

In mention of the action of Harper & Brothers and Henry L. Wallace against Klaw & Erlanger, which was brought before Judge Hough in the United States District Court to prevent the defendants from making a motion picture of "Ben Hur," it was noted that the court granted an injunction against Klaw & Erlanger. In fact, both parties were restrained from translating "Ben Hur" to motion pictures until such time as the questions in litigation should be passed upon by the court and the rights of the parties determined finally.

Lesser in New York

Pacific Coast Distributor Opens Offices in 218 West Forty-second Street—To Arrange Opening for "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

SOL L. LESSER, the young exchange man of the Pacific coast who recently purchased the United States rights of Rex Beach's ten-act motion picture production, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," from the Selig Polyscope Company, arrived in New York January 28.

Mr. Lesser stopped over in Chicago for a conference with W. N. Selig, where he was joined by his personal representative, E. M. Asher, both gentlemen coming on to New York together. Mr. Lesser was also accompanied by his wife and family.

Sol L. Lesser.

Offices have been permanently established at 218 West Forty-second street, where the entire floor is being occupied, and where "The Ne'er-Do-Well" will be exploited on a national basis.

This deal will in no way affect Mr. Lesser's western enterprises. His state rights on feature productions will be considered at these offices for the Golden Gate Film Exchange and the All Star Feature Distributors.

Negotiations are now pending with several theaters in Chicago and New York for the opening of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," but up to the present time nothing definite has been closed.

Mr. Lesser placed the production at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, Cal., where it played a three weeks' engagement doing capacity business.

It also opened at the Portola theater, San Francisco, January 23, and Mr. Lesser was in receipt of a telegram from Manager Roth, en route Overland Limited, as follows: "Opening 'Ne'er-Do-Well' topped opening of 'Spoilers.' Public enthusiastic. Congratulations."

SUCCESSFUL SCREEN FEATURE DRAMATIZED FOR STAGE.

Maibelle Heikes Justice has been the first to dramatize a successful screen drama for the speaking stage. This is her own photoplay, "The Pay-As-You-Enter Man," the delightful comedy-drama produced by the Essanay Company two winters ago as their holiday feature and sent by them throughout Europe and the trenches last winter under another title. In this photoplay which had an unusually original plot, Richard C. Travers made his first big screen hit, ably seconded by Irene Warfield, who, like Mr. Travers, entered the silent drama from the stage route. Miss Justice has dramatized her photoplay under its original title, preserving all the same delightful surprises recorded by the screen, now in four acts. A well-known manager has already made Miss Justice an offer on the play, provided she rewrite some of her construction according to the old and long prescribed rules of the drama. This she has not consented to do so far, preferring to have her stage version passed upon still further as it stands. The author values her experience in the writing of her many successful photoplays most valuable and profitable, and after adding sparkling dialogue to her screen drama, feels that the stage can still gain something aside from cut-and-dried technique of old by adapting the newer and far more sprightly action of the screen. "I firmly believe," says Miss Justice, "if more screen technique of construction were instilled into the spoken drama so many theaters would not be dark."

HORSLEY RE-ENGAGES CLARE.

George Clare, Jr., a legitimate actor of more than twenty years' experience, who made his first appearance as a David Horsley player in the character of Syrus, a Grecian gentleman, in "The Soul's Cycle," has been re-engaged by Mr. Horsley for the part of Senator Thurston in "A Law Unto Himself," featuring Crane Wilbur, which is to be released February 28 as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition.

"Birth of a Nation" Gets $2 at Shelbyville

The Alhambra Theater at Shelbyville, Indiana, which has a seating capacity of six hundred, filled every seat for the "Birth of a Nation" on December 30th, at prices of $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00. This is the first time that the "Birth of a Nation" played in a regular moving picture theater in the United States and also in a city of 10,000 inhabitants.

The Alhambra is owned by F. J. Rembusch, the noted manufacturer of mirror screens. Mr. Rembusch is one of the oldest exhibitors in Indiana and is now operating six theaters in Indianapolis and other cities and has been one of the best workers and National officer in the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League and is now Exhibitors' Vice-President of the Moving Picture Board of Trade.

NEW LIGHTING PLANTS AT LUBIN'S.

Extensive alterations are in progress at the Lubin studio, Twentieth street and Indiana avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., under the direction of Edward L. Simons. The old floors are being replaced by new ones; columns and abutments are being removed to enable the occupants of the studio at any time to extend their field of operation by combining three studios in one; a new lighting plant is being installed, and upon the completion of these alterations the Lubin Company will begin work upon several feature productions, safe in the knowledge that the weather will have no terrors for them in the future. They are also installing in the Sixteenth street and Glenwood avenue studio a new lighting plant and sectional glass roof. While the present winter has not been a severe one, the sun has been hidden a good part of the time and this has caused many expensive delays in the turning out of the required number of features, and it has been a troublesome problem at times to keep seven directors and their companies from getting in each others' way.

CALIFORNIA TO TRY STATES RIGHTS PLAN.

Alex. E. Beyfuss, vice president and general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, left for San Francisco on Tuesday, January 25, to supervise the launching of their state rights campaign which will include not only all exchange men, but a list of at least ten thousand motion picture theaters throughout the country. Just before departure Beyfuss said:

"We decided to release on the state rights plan because we are making 'better than program' features. The old saying about hitching your kite to a star works well for the hitcher, but it is rather rough on the star.

"We want California productions in the hands of every exhibitor who demands better pictures regardless of program limitations, and this is the only way in which we can accomplish that object."

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

N. Y. EXHIBITORS, REMEMBER THE FIRST OF MARCH!

The Great Exhibitors' Rally for the City and State of New York to Be Held at Albany.

DO NOT FORGET the great exhibitors' rally at Albany which is to take place March 1 and 2. It will be worth something to you to come. It will be worth something in knowledge that may be coined into dollars. Read the "prospectus" in the advertising columns of the Moving Picture World.

Organization is to be one of the great themes at this great rally. Now, what man is better qualified to speak on organization in the city and state of New York than Sam Trigger? He will be there and speak; so will Fred J. Herrington, the national president, who fought so nobly for the exhibitor at the great hearings on the Federal Censorship bill at Washington. Remember the program is not cut and dried. It's to be a live meeting; everybody is invited to come and to speak, whether his investment is small or large. THE DAY OF THE EXHIBITOR is coming, but he must himself strike the blow. Grievances will be talked over and ways and means will be sought and found to do away with them. You exhibitors in the city and state of New York owe it to yourselves to be present.

March 1 and 2 will be days held in grateful remembrance by the exhibitors of New York city and state. Don't you be the laggard. Exhibitors have shown their power last fall in the fight against censorship; March 1 and 2 and Albany are the time and place for showing their power for their own benefit and for the protection of their investment.

NEWARK EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

Big Meeting to Be Held on Sunday, February 6, at Achtelstetter's—Temporary Organization Formed.

THE exhibitors of Essex County, N. J., which contains the city of Newark, met on the morning of Sunday, January 30, at the offices of Nicholas La Vecchia, 189 Market street. The following exhibitors were present: Jack Amsterdam, Plaza theater; Martin Singer, president M. S. Amusement Company; Morris Feldman, Grand Palace; John Brouillier, Belmont Square; Joseph Stern, National; Philip J. Knobloch, Clinton Square; Philip Bornstein, Criterion; Herman Osterman, Play House; Pollock & Bratter, Lyceum Amusement Company; Salo Ansbach, Scenario, and Max Le Bow, Walnut theater. A temporary organization was effected, with the following officers: Salo Ansbach, president; Counsellor La Vecchia, secretary; Morris Feldman, treasurer.

Counsellor La Vecchia suggested that the forming of a permanent organization be deferred until next Sunday, February 6, when certain necessary legal steps will have been taken. A committee was appointed to wait upon the chief of police and interview him about Sunday opening. The position taken by the organization is this: Either all the places ought to be closed on Sunday or else all ought to be allowed to open. Several speakers declared that allowing one place to open and shutting another place was too much like discrimination. It was decided to hold another and bigger meeting next Sunday in Achtelstetter's on Broadway at 10 o'clock A. M. All exhibitors doing business in Essex County are urged to attend, as a permanent organization will then be effected. A vote of thanks was given to the Moving Picture World for its consistent support of the exhibitor.

It is expected that later the organization will seek affiliation with the national league.

TO OKLAHOMA EXHIBITORS.

Dear Sir and Brother:—February 14 and 15, Monday and Tuesday—the most convenient days for you—have been selected for the fourth annual convention of this organization.

National President Fred J. Herrington of Pittsburg, Pa., will be brought to Oklahoma City for this occasion. A most comprehensive exposition of film and supplies will be displayed by the various exchanges and their representatives. The entire sixth floor of the Lee-Huckins hotel will be devoted to the states banner meeting. You'll surely be here.

Nothing ought to prevent your coming. Many are planning to arrive Sunday the thirteenth. Things you will see will be invaluable in the conduct of your business. Brush up on the changes—Let's get together for our mutual welfare—These will be two big days for everybody—plenty of "surprises" are being planned, including a "Dutch" lunch Monday night and the Grand Annual Banquet Tuesday night.

This meeting is for every exhibitor in the state whether a member of the M. P. E. L. or not. Boost it to your neighbor—get him to come along. Advise the secretary today to expect you. Sincerely,

M. LOEWENSTEIN,
Secy. M. P. E. L. of A., Oklahoma Branch No. 23.

THE EXHIBITOR'S VIEWPOINT.

National President Herrington Talks at Length on the Censorship Situation at Washington, D. C.

PRESIDENT HERRINGTON of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, speaking of the recent events in the National Capitol regarding censorship, expressed his opinion of the situation as affecting the trade to a representative of the Moving Picture World in the following interview.

Looking at the situation from the exhibitor's point of view I am sorry for the bad turn at the last hearing on the Federal Censorship Bill in Washington. The bill had been fairly beaten by the sheer weight and merit of our cause. Look at the record of the hearings and you will be surprised at the many speakers who volunteered and who had no connection whatever with the motion picture business. Why, we had an Episcopalian minister, a Catholic priest, a Jewish rabbi and a free thinker appear before the committee and denounce the Crafts idea and the Crafts bill. At the last hearing at least six of the members of the committee were with us, two were doubtful and among the other seven there was not one who felt very strongly in favor of the bill. Even Judge Towner, who led the supporters of the bill, spoke approvingly of the motion picture. He seemed to have lost the prejudice that he had shown when the hearings opened. Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Shields, the distinguished Catholic educator, told some of our people that he thought the bill was beaten.

Now, judge of my surprise when on Wednesday night a young lawyer appears before the committee and tells the members that he represents the Paramount, the World Film, and the Equitable, and all these great companies were in favor of Federal censorship. I was even more surprised when I heard him say that these companies had never been notified of the hearing. They should not only have been notified, they should have been consulted. A caucus of all the film interests should have been called. That would have been the fairest way.

I believe that there is room in the industry for such an organization as the Board of Trade and the policies and principles of that organization may be all right. I do not believe that it is intended to claim the credit for the work done in Washington for the Board of Trade. Manufacturers, exchangemen and exhibitors all worked together in the common cause. Whether they belonged to the Board of Trade or to the National League or to the National Board or whether they were just working as individuals. The speakers outside the film circles, such men as Dr. Cranston Brenton, Hon. Rev. A. W. Simon, Rev. Thomas E. Shields; the two editors, Alonzo T. Hones and John P. Bradley; G. S. MacFarland, the editor of the Boston American; Frank Persons, of the Charity Organization, had nothing whatever to do with the Board of Trade, nor were their services secured by the Board of Trade.

From the best possible sources I learn that the Crafts Bill with certain minor amendments will be reported favorably by the committee.

It is the only big bill the committee has in its hands. There were no party lines drawn in the committee; there are Republicans for it and Republicans against it and the same is true of the Democratic members. Men who know something about the routine of business in the House tell me that the bill stands a good chance for being placed on final passage because it has been taken up so early in the session. It may be taken from the so-called "Union Calendar" on any Wednesday in the next nine or ten months and moved for final passage. A bare majority of the members present will pass the bill. There are 435 members of Congress, the average attendance on days when bills come up for final passage may be set down at about 225. Unless some very vigorous work is done at once the bare momentum of the congressional routine will get the bill through the house.

Talking for the exhibitor I want to say that we have fought the bill for many reasons. Not the least of these reasons is our fear that it will kill the moving picture business. Censorship destroys the entertainment value of the film. We can not get people into our theaters unless we have something that will stir them; patrons want to have their emotions touched, they want to laugh and to cry. The tiresome film drives them out of our theaters. If men like Crafts and women like the old ladies that appeared before the committee will get the power to regulate the public amusements of the country, I for one am going to look for some other business. These ministers and religious spinsters and some legislators seem to think that exhibitors ought to conduct a nursery instead of a theater. The exhibitors do not want to run national kindergartens; they want to run theaters. People go to the theater because they expect to see true portrayals of life. Life is, always has been and always will be a struggle, the entertainment lies in watching the struggle. If the ideas of men like Crafts are written into laws of the United States moving picture shows will be dead in less than a year. The general public alone supports the picture houses and they want something more thrilling than scenes from Madeira or a pictorial description of a shoe factory.

It's now up to us exhibitors to do what we can to kill censorship on the floor of the House. I don't say it can be done, but I do say it's the only chance we have. I expect to write to all exhibitors in the organization to lend their aid. We must canvass every Congressional District in the country. We must get up petitions and we must make direct personal appeals to Congress. We have a fighting chance, no more.

In the meantime the admission of prominent film men before a congressional committee that there is an absolute need for censorship of motion pictures will do more harm than I like to think about. Censor cranks will become a perfect plague and we exhibitors will, of course, have to bear the brunt of it. Some people say that business is too strong to be censored to death. Perhaps so, but this reflection hopeful as it is, does not help us an awful lot. It won't protect our investment, it won't secure us against losses. On behalf of the exhibitors I want to thank all the manufacturers who have fought so nobly, and I want to thank the public spirited Americans who gave us their aid for the sake of principle.

Unless something is done at once we will groan under the yoke of Federal Censorship before 1917. I would be glad to get suggestions from the men who have so much at stake in killing the Crafts bill.

HERRINGTON GOES TO OKLAHOMA.

Fred J. Herrington, president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will leave Pittsburgh on the evening of February 9 for a trip westward, with his destination Oklahoma City, Okla., where he will attend the annual state convention of the Oklahoma exhibitors, February 14 and 15. Unusual interest is attached to this trip, as President Herrington comes fresh from the national censorship fight at Washington, D. C., and will carry his important message to the thousands of exhibitors he will meet in Oklahoma and points en route. President Herrington will go from this city to Chicago, thence on the evening of the 10th to Kansas City, Mo., where he has arranged to meet as many exhibitors as possible. He will then proceed to Oklahoma City. His headquarters during the convention will be the Lee-Huckins Hotel. On his return trip President Herrington will stop for a conference with exhibitors at St. Louis, Mo.

LEAGUE CONSIDERS PASSES.

The question of the extent to which passes should be issued for picture theaters and the action of exhibitors who charge only five cents admission to serial pictures, was taken up at the last meeting of the local league in Cleveland. It was suggested that passes be issued by the league for every Cleveland city official, and that any passes used in Cleveland should come from the league rather than from individuals.

The discussion on the five cent admission fee, which most exihibitors oppose, was long and spirited, this and the matter of passes finally was referred to the executive committee with power to make recommendations.

MEGOWN TO SPEAK AT YOUNGSTOWN.

C. A. Megown, special representative of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, delivered an address at an exhibitors' banquet at the Ohio Hotel in Youngstown, February 3. Exhibitors from Youngstown, Niles, Warren, Girard and Struthers were present. Megown spoke on "The One Thing Needful—Co-operation."

LAMOTTE SMITH VISITS EXHIBITORS.

Lamotte Smith, of Alliance, State vice president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, was in Cleveland last week to complete arrangements for a speaking tour in the interests of more perfect organization. He is to conduct a series of meetings at Alliance, Bellaire and East Liverpool and later in Columbus, Dayton, Springfield, Toledo and Cincinnati.

MEETING OF LUBIN BENEFIT ASSOCIATION.

The second regular business meeting of the Lubin Benefit Association was held on Wednesday evening, January 26. There were 112 members present. Jack Pratt, the newly-elected president, was presented with a basket of flowers and a gavel. Recording Secretary Miss Cozette Douglass made the presentation speech. The way things have started it looks as though this is to be the banner year of the association. An address by Mr. Pratt upon the future plans of the association received enthusiastic applause.

Treasurer Schwartz delivered an address upon the nature of the future entertainments contemplated to be given by the association, after which the president appointed an entertainment committee consisting of the following Lubin players: I. Schwartz, Richard Buhler, Wally Helston, George Spink, Miss Rosetta Brice, Miss Gertie St. Clair, Miss Arona M. Hubbard.

An informal dance followed the meeting.

New Kalem Comedies

Ethel Teare to Be Featured in New Comedy Line Taking Wednesday Date on General Film.

THE Kalem Company announces a new Wednesday release on the General Film Company programme. The space on the programme hitherto occupied by a two-reel drama will on February 16th be taken by a single reel comedy release. The subjects will feature Ethel Teare, who has been seen to such advantage for the past year in "Ham and Bud" comedies. Miss Teare has gained a large following among picture fans by her work in the "Ham" subjects and evidences of her popularity with exhibitors and patrons which reached the Kalem Company caused that firm to inaugurate the new line of comedies.

Ethel Teare.

A capable comedy company will support Miss Teare in the new subject, with Jack MacDermott among the well known Kalem fun-makers who will be seen. "A Molar Mix-Up" is the subject which will start the new line on February 16th. In this initial release Bud Duncan is also prominent. The story is one of mixed couples and jealousies wtih a dentist's home the seat of the trouble.

Ethel Teare came to the Kalem Company from the vaudeville stage, where she was a prominent Orpheum circuit headliner for several seasons. Her screen debut was made with Kalem. Alluring beauty and a charming screen personality are the factors that have raised her to stardom in a comparatively short time Miss Teare was born in Phoenix, Ariz., and is naturally a girl of the outdoor type.

ALL STAR WINS IN BANKRUPTCY SUIT.

In the bankruptcy proceeding against the Alco Film Corporation now pending in the United States District Court of the Southern District of New York, Stanley W. Dexter, referee in bankruptcy, has just handed down an interesting ruling. He finds that the All Star Corporation, represented in the bankruptcy proceedings by William P. Jeffery as trustee, is the owner of the films, "The Nightingale," "Shore Acres" and "The Education of Mr. Pipp." He further finds that the All Star Corporation is entitled to 60 per cent. of the rentals received by the Alco Corporation under a contract entered into on October 17, 1914, until full payment of $30,000 is made to the All Star. As the balance still unpaid is upwards of $32,000, the Alco trustee, Arthur Butler Graham, must account and pay over to the All Star trustee 60 per cent. of the rentals received by him from January 23, 1915 (the date of bankruptcy) to September 11, 1915, a total of $14,173.74, 60 per cent. of which is $8,505.24, together with 60 per cent. of rentals subsequently accruing and received by the Alco trustee.

"SIS HOPKINS" ON GENERAL FILM.

Rumors that the Sis Hopkins comedies would be made a special release were officially quieted this week by the Kalem Company. The announcement is made that the Sis Hopkins subjects will all be released through the General Film Company, taking the Friday date on Kalem's release schedule. There will thus be no extra charge for these comedies, and exhibitors will be able to secure them just as they book any other program release.

V. L. S. E. Men Active

New York Staff Holds Confab—Many New Men on the Job.

THE entire sales organization of the Big Four's New York Branch, which is under the management of Joseph Partridge, were called at the home office Sunday, January 23rd, for a discussion of the distributive policies which the V-L-S-E is promoting in the interests of their exhibitors. As in the case of the convention held of the Eastern representatives on the preceding Sunday, this discussion had to do principally with the "minimum and maximum" price rating, the "open booking" policy and the proper grading of the box office value of films.

The convention was attended by General Manager Walter W. Irwin; Assistant General Manager, A. W. Goff; J. J. Bamberger, manager of the Sales Promotion Department; Joseph Partridge, Manager New York Branch; F. F. Hartich, Assistant Manager, New York Branch; E. L. Masters, Advertising and Publicity Director; V. M. Shapiro, Assistant Advertising and Publicity Director; A. M. Webster, Manager Syracuse Sub-Branch; George Balsdon, Jr., Booker New York Branch, and Salesmen Erickson, Farber, Clark, Allen, Reardon, Sherry and Bradner.

Many New Faces in Big Four Family.

The V-L-S-E sales force has been materially augmented in practically all of the branches throughout the country. D. F. Heenan, who was formerly shipping clerk of the Philadelphia Branch, has been promoted to the sales force. Edward H. Freiberger, of that office, who was formerly an inspector, takes his place.

I. Van Ronkel in Chicago, has added several new men to his staff. These include Marmaduke McCaffrey, who specialized in publicity and sales development work, and who will travel Iowa and part of Illinois; Philip Dunas, formerly with Schiller's Film Company; Frank W. Redfield, formerly of the Fox Film Corporation, and the General Film Company; Owen C. Devine, formerly of Robert Stevenson Company, wholesale druggists, and Harry A. O'Brien, formerly of the Famous Players. Four of these salesmen will work out of Chicago, and the other four in the city.

In Cincinnati, S. E. Shurtleff has added J. A. Conant, recently of the Metro Exchange in Des Moines, to his office, and also James R. Beale, formerly of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Conant will represent the Big Four on the firing line, and Mr. Beale will remain in the Cincinnati office. Mr. Shurtleff has divided his territory into blocks with the result that P. B. Elliott of that office will be responsible for Indiana and Ohio; Mr. Conant, for Ohio and West Virginia; and Mr. Beale, for part of Kentucky and the city of Cincinnati.

J. E. Huey, who has been the booker of the V-L-S-E Dallas office, has been advanced by Branch Manager C. A. Meade of that office, to the sales force, taking the position made vacant by R. K. Evans, manager of the New Orleans sub-office. The booking department has been placed in charge of F. J. Murphy, who was previously the shipping clerk in Dallas office. Edward Fogham, who was his assistant, has been promoted to shipping clerk. In this same office another change has been made, involving the withdrawal of J. B. Dugger from the sales force to the position of assistant branch manager. Mr. Dugger will also have charge of the advertising and publicity departments of that office.

Fred Solomon, formerly of the V-L-S-E Denver office, will represent that organization in Kansas City hereafter. In Pittsburg, two new salesmen have been put on, Edward C. Brown and C. D. Roche.

V-L-S-E Toronto Office Address.

The main quarters of the Big Four recently opened in Canada, are located at 15 Wilton avenue, Toronto. A large suite of offices has been obtained at this address and a complete sales and clerical organization established.

W. C. Gookin, who is in charge of the interests of the V-L-S-E in that territory, has placed local men on the sales force to represent the Big Four there. These men will cover every section of Canada.

V-L-S-E Opens Syracuse Office.

The constantly increasing demand for V-L-S-E features throughout New York State has necessitated that organization's opening an office in Syracuse.

This will be a sub-office under the management of Joseph Partridge, the branch manager of the New York territory, and directly in charge of A. M. Webster, who has been representing the Big Four in the Western and Middle part of the State, since last July.

The Syracuse office will serve Buffalo, Rochester, Ithaca, and all of the towns in that territory. Several additional salesmen have been added to the New York branch office of the Big Four, and these will travel directly out of Syracuse.

Triangle's New Home

Moves to Large Offices in Brokaw Building, the Heart of Film District.

WITH a five year's lease that provides that no other film company may have quarters in the building, the Triangle Flm Corporation moved Monday, Jan. 24, from 23rd street to the new Brokaw Building, in Broadway between 41st and 42nd streets, New York. The Triangle takes the entire upper section of the structure, occupying the eleventh and twelfth floors and the roof. On the eleventh floor are the executive offices of H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, and the vice-presidents in charge of production, David W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, and Mack Sennett. The various departments, exchanges, publicity and promotion, etc., are also on this floor.

Above are film storage vaults, projection rooms and an emergency studio for rush work on unfinished scenes. The Triangle is fortunate in obtaining quarters in this modern and centrally located building. The amount of rental involved in the lease is said to be between $75,000 and $100,000.

George De Carlton

GEORGE DE CARLTON severed his association with the Ocean Company during the past week.

Mr. De Carlton's career in the film industry has been a meteoric one. Beginning with his position as a character leading man with the old Reliance Company, he has in turn been associated with the Life Photo Company playing character leads and then with the Fox Film Company, where his work played no little part in the organization of that company. In this latter association he was a general utility man, acting in an advisory capacity to the management and being associated directly with Edgar Lewis in his various William Farnum productions. Severing that connection Mr. De Carlton became a part of the Ocean Film Corporation, organizing the company and supervising its productions. With Mr. De Carlton, at the time of his resignation from the Ocean Company, went Director Joseph Smiley and his assistant, Mr. Martin Faust.

GARRICK WILL DIRECT "ACCORDING TO THE LAW."

Richard Garrick, supervising director of Gaumont stock companies, will himself direct "According to the Law." In this big five-reel feature, which will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, Howard Hall will be starred. The scenario was written by Paul M. Bryan and Joseph H. Trant.

LIGHTS FOR UNIVERSAL STUDIO.

Banks upon banks of new Cooper-Hewitt lights this week arrived in Universal City, after a trip across the continent from New York. The new lights came as the next step in making ready the recently completed electric light studio. And, in spite of the number of these lights already in operation, still more have been ordered and are now on their way to the picture city.

Four Famous Players in March

Mary Pickford's First Seven-Reel Picture "Poor Little Peppina," Heads List—Big Stars in Others.

FOR the first time since the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, the Famous Players Film Company will release through that distributing company during the month of March a seven-reel production "Poor Little Peppina," in which Mary Pickford is starred. This subject also marks the first film in which Miss Pickford has appeared since the organization of the Famous Players-Mary Pickford Company in the productions of which she retains a half interest. In addition to this seven-reel subject, the Famous Players will release three other photoplays, "The Man Who Found Himself," starring Jack Barrymore; "The Longest Way Round," starring Hazel Dawn, and "Audrey" in which Pauline Frederick appears in the title role.

"The Man Who Found Himself," which is scheduled for release on March 19, was written by Willard Mack, author of "Kick In." It is the story of an eminently respectable young man who, after being hit on the head, turns burglar. The story is full of action, the incidents following one after the other in quick succession.

"The Longest Way Round," which will be released on March 23, will show Hazel Dawn in the role of a young girl whose father is bitterly opposed to his next door neighbor. The latter has a son whom the girl has never seen. They meet and fall in love in the country, neither suspecting the identity of the other. But that is only the beginning of trouble for the lovers as their stubborn parents both become infuriated when they learn of the attachment.

"Audrey" is an adaptation of the celebrated novel by Mary Johnstone in the stage version of which Maggie Mitchell starred. Pauline Frederick will present it to the motion picture public March 26. "Audrey" is a story of the early eighteenth century which is full of romance, and contains a great deal of comedy and no little drama. Audrey is a far different type from anything which Pauline Frederick has done on the screen.

"Poor Little Peppina" is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program on March 2 but it is to be especially presented before that date in several of the largest cities. The story was written especially for Mary Pickford by Kate Jordon. Opening in Italy, the scene of action shifts to America where chance brings the same characters together again, to the sorrow of some and to the infinite joy of others. "Poor Little Peppina," is a tale of adventure with many a dramatic thrill during the course of which Miss Pickford plays a stowaway, bootblack, telegraph messenger and errand boy for a gang of counterfeiters, appearing in boy's clothes, during this portion of the action.

Because of the exceptional quality of the production, the Famous Players Film Company has arranged special advertising for "Poor Little Peppina" and is issuing a magnificent twenty-four sheet in addition to the regular line of sizes, threes and ones, there being three styles of the last-named. A distinctive cut-out for throw-away purposes has also been prepared and, like all other advertising matter, can be obtained from the various Paramount exchanges.

Appearing in support of Miss Pickford are Edwin Mordant, Eugene O'Brien, Antonio Maiori, Ernesto Torti, Cesare Grabina, W. T. Carlton, and Jack Pickford, in addition to a number of other well-known players.

Though the feature will be placed on the Paramount Program, it will be given special presentations in New York and several other large cities before the day of release.

"Poor Little Peppina" was directed by Sidney Olcott;

"Audrey" by Robert Vignola and "The Man Who Found Himself" by James Kirkwood, all of whom have contributed notable successes to the screen.

Kalem Series Has New Name

Title of New Series By George Bronson Howard Is Changed to "Social Pirates"—Early Episodes Completed.

THE Love Pirates have been rechristened. Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby, who were to have shared honors in the new George Bronson Howard series of that name will be "The Social Pirates" instead. The change of title is the only variation made, otherwise the series will remain as before. George Bronson Howard is writing it, Kalem the producer, and Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby will remain the same two clever girls using sharp wits and clever wiles at the expense of wealthy and sophisticated idlers.

The decision to change the title of the George Bronson Howard series was reached after long consideration. It is in keeping with Kalem's other plans for this big series, which call for careful advance preparation and a complete lack of haste. Kalem officials are of the belief that "The Social Pirates" will mark a new type of screen production and have the greatest of expectations for the series.

An official of the company explained this point last week. "George Bronson Howard," he states, "has written 'The Social Pirates' in his best vein, which means that while there is no lack of dramatic interest, there is also a delightful touch of satire running throughout the episodes. It is the style that made his 'Snobs' such a successful play. This blend of satirical comedy and dramatic action makes a production that will please all classes, but most of all, because of its welcome novelty, the picture-goers who demand intelligence and rebel at the crude and obvious thrillers that are forced on them so much. Of course, it requires direction of the highest type and players of more than ordinary calibre to handle a production of this class, but after a view of the first production received from the studios we are more confident than ever of the ability of those entrusted with the production. Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby have always been known as players of unusual versatility, since, in their work for Kalem, both stars have gained favor in roles varying from farce comedy to highly emotional parts. This is true in no less degree of the other members of the company which includes True Broadman, Paul C. Hurst, Thomas Lingham, Frank Jonasson and Edward Clisbee."

UNIVERSAL PLAYERS MARRY.

Bertram Grassby, one of the best known of the character actors at the Universal's Pacific Coast studios, was last week married to Girrard Alexander, also a thespian, but one who makes that profession an avocation rather than a vocation, following it simply because of the fascination of it and not for the monetary end. The young couple met when Miss Alexander entered the ranks of the photoplayers at Universal City, and was cast for a role in a production in which Grassby was working. The friendship ripened as the picture progressed and later an understanding was reached, which resulted in the wedding.

German Trade Notes

THE Nordische Films Company has taken one more step toward monopolizing the German film market in the purchase of Bavaria's largest film institution, Carl Gabriel, Munich, which includes approximately 500,000 meters of film and all the Gabriel theaters. Inasmuch as Carl Gabriel was the Nordische's largest competitor in Bavaria, this deal puts the Danish concern in practical control of the South German market.

A number of comic one-act films are being produced by Director Danuki. The pictures which have been completed are called: "A Ticklish Matter," "Soon Here, Soon There," "A Healthy Youngster," and "A Splitting Success." For the production of this series a number of well-known Berlin actors have been engaged, including Siegfried Berisch (Possen theater), Julius Falkenstein (Trianon theater), Viktor Janson (Residenz theater), Paul Westermeyer (Thalia theater) and Hanns Kraehly; also the following actresses, Misses Thiele, Jonde, Koehler and Berger.

Wanda Treumann and Viggo Larsen, of the Treumann & Larsen Film Company, return this week from Copenhagen, after a very successful engagement with their sketch, "The Extremes Meet," in the Zirkus-Variete, and open this new year in the Berlin Cines Palast with an honorarium of 8,000 marks per month. An artistic three-act film, "Geschwister Lorris," is the latest film which has been produced by this popular pair.

One of the season's most successful films in Hanewacker & Scheler's Christmas production was "The Conductress of Line 6." This film, which had its premiere in the Admiral's theater, deals with the story of one of the many women who have taken the places of men as conductors on the Berlin street cars. In addition to a very interesting tale, one is shown through every detail of that enormous organization, the Berlin street car system. The Greater Berlin Street Railways Company afforded Messrs. Hanewacker & Scheler every opportunity for producing a realistic picture, and the result is a film which has been playing to crowded houses and should prove of great universal interest as a true portrayal of one of the most interesting incidents of this epoch.

"The Dancing Heart" is the name of a new film which Max Mack has produced for the Greenbaum Film Company. The author of this piece is Hans Brennert, and the leading roles lie in the hands of Maria Orska and Rudolf Schildkraut. This film is especially strong in inner decorations which were made under the direction of the well-known artist, von Osen.

Notwithstanding the fact that Munich at present has fifty-four picture houses, Messrs. Heilmann and Litman are erecting a large moving picture theater upon their Wein street property. The Bavarian Kinematographic Association has now directed a petition to the Munich police-presidency, requesting that no more moving picture concessions be granted.

A local film firm took pictures last week of the Berlin Christmas shopping. These films are for the purpose of showing to neutral countries the favorable condition of economic affairs in Germany. Owing to the great crowds in the shopping districts these pictures should make a very favorable impression.

The Tauentzien Palast Lichtspiele, Berlin's most beautiful picture theater, which has been closed for some months, reopens New Year's Day under the management of Mr. Ludwig Klopfer, with the Imperator Film, "Satan Opium." Taking part in this film are Lupu Pick, Hermann Hellweger, Curt Brenkendorff, Lotte Erol and Claire Dessau. "Satan Opium" was produced under the direction of Mr. S. Dessau, and, as the title signifies, is mostly enacted in an opium den.

Georg Kaiser, the popular humorist, has written a film drama for Maria Carmi-Vollmoeller. The film will soon be produced by the Deutsche Bioskop Company. For the Luna Film Company, Mr. Kaiser is preparing one of his sketches in which the humorous film favorite, Anna Mueller-Lincke will appear.

"From the Diary of a Mastermindreader" is the title of a new film series which the Union Company is preparing and in which the Mindreader Labero, who is at present performing in Circus Busch, Berlin, will enact the principal part. The text of the first film, "The Man with the Green Eyes," was written by Hugo Renard. The Union will also soon film Hermann Sudermann's first novel, "The President's Favorite," which was published in 1886.

The trade in Austria is at present very active. The Oesterreichische Filmindustrie Company is preparing Austria's first great detective film, "The Moore House Mystery." In addition to this feature, the same firm is bringing out an Alfred Deutsch-German comedy in which the three Guttmann brothers will appear. Fritz Gruenbaum, the popular Vienna libretto composer, is also working on a film for this concern.

A new film factory is to be built in Vienna. The building is to be one of the largest and most complete in Europe. The Messter Film Company, the Sascha Film and Philipp & Pressburger are back of this undertaking.

C. Münstedt, proprietor of the Kino-Palace in the Prater, one of Vienna's large amusement parks, has to date sent 50,000 Kronen to soldiers in the field. This amount was accumulated through benefit exhibitions in the Kino-Palace.

The first Anzengruber film, "The Perjurer-Farmer," was recently presented with great success by the Vienna Kunstfilm Company, who are now working upon the remaining works of Anzengruber. The leading part in the first film was taken by Hermann Benke, formerly of the Kaiserjubilaeums-Stadt-Theater, Vienna. Mr. Benke has been engaged to also play the leads in the other films of the Anzengruber series.

Elsie MacLeod with Vim

ELSIE MacLEOD, the pretty little blonde who has been sought by many film companies, is now "putting over" comedies with vim, for it remained for the Vim Company to secure her. Miss MacLeod has done much dramatic as well as comedy work, having begun her moving picture career with the Edison Company playing child parts and shortly afterward becoming the youngest leading lady with that concern. The opinions of her admirers are varied, for while all agree on her aptitude for the humorous, her recent portrayal of Michaela in Carmen while she was with the Fox Feature Film Corporation will long be remembered.

Elsie MacLeod.

When Tweedledum, whose name is on the lips of every European picture fan and who now with the Vim Company is known as Bungles, came to this country a few months ago, Miss MacLeod played with him in his first American film. His vast experience has taught him to recognize intrinsic value in an artist immediately; thus it happened that they have played together since then, and at present, with the banner of the Vim Company flying over them, it is only reasonable to expect startling results from them in the not far distant future.

BUSHMAN AND BAYNE IN NEW METRO SUBJECT.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, the Metro stars who recently completed the stellar roles in "Man and His Soul," will begin work on two new Metro features. The first will be a picturization of the widely read novel, "The Wall Between," written by Ralph D. Paine. Their second vehicle will be "Boots and Saddles," adapted for the screen from the successful play of the same name by Eugene Walters, author of "The Easiest Way," "Paid in Full" and other notable stage plays.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

PURSUANT to a promise made in the last issue an attempt will be made to answer the question: "Why is the National Board of Censorship?"

Many men prominently identified with the motion picture business today have had the question directly applied to them and have tried to answer it. The writer has read the answers and credit for the nearest hit to the bull's eye must be given to Carl Laemmle. What is known today as the National Board of Censorship was not established or recognized as a censorship body. It had its origin in the People's Institute of New York City, the membership of which was recognized as the embodiment of principles that best served the people's interests. It was conceded that the best of nearly, if not all, creeds and classes was represented in that organization. A time came when the Institute offered a protest against certain motion pictures. The manufacturers of that time gave respectful attention and a conference followed, resulting in the organization of a supervising board, which, as Mr. Laemmle says, was to act in an advisory capacity.

Mr. Laemmle's statement in this connection is worthy of more attention and respect than almost any other, for the reason that he was one of the first of the film industry to become independent and attack the so-called trust, which is saddled with the responsibility of creating the National Board of Censorship. All conditions tend to verify the honesty of his expression. The writer is not in a position to disprove his statement that he opposed the use of the word censorship in the creation of the present National Board, but knows enough about the situation to state that none in the movement had a thought that by the use of that word "censorship" anyone connected with the movement was adopting something that was contrary to and in defiance of the Constitution of the country.

Censorship, as instigated under this movement of supervision, was not based on the question of immorality. I think the reflections of those engaged in the moving picture business five, or six, or more years, will sustain me. Supervision was not suggested by any film of American manufacture. "The Great Train Robbery" received the keenest attention of the reformers after the National Board of Censorship was organized. Some say it led to the creation of the board. It did not. The first objection was made by public opinion represented by the audiences and managers, not by any reformer, or body of reformers. The first picture to arouse a protest was of foreign manufacture. It was one which showed the backing of a horse attached to a wagon over a precipice, horse and wagon alternating in the terrible fall down the steep incline until both landed at the bottom. The supposed driver was, of course, a dummy, but the horse was flesh and blood. American agents, distributors and exhibitors joined in condemnation of the subject and it was at this time that the question of supervision was taken up.

Just about this time every motion picture machine operator, stereopticon worker, illustrated song singer and others acquainted with or who thought they knew how to take and develop a motion picture, got the notion that there was "money in it." The result was that some very questionable subjects soon oozed from questionable sources. Then those who were not in the business to make a quick turn and get-away again urged a permanent board of supervision Those who saw a future for the business were on the job. Where the reformers were at that time we cannot recall. They probably were not interested because the pictures at that time were only patronized by the poorer classes, and those classes evidently did not interest them. It was only when the picture houses loomed up under their eyes that they discovered moving pictures were a reality. They started to figure: "Why should not the people who go to the pictures come to our church?" they asked, and then a general condemnation of motion pictures followed. Met with the statement that the pictures had been properly supervised by a well authenticated body they then opened an attack upon the board of censors. The first attack was upon the secretary of the board, the equal of any of the reformers in point of intelligence, conscience and honesty. Because that secretary was paid for actual clerical services the reformers declared the whole board was subsidized.

That is where official censorship first took root. No reformer in New York or elsewhere has been able to successfully attack the integrity or good faith of the National Board of Censorship, but the foresight and shrewdness of the so-called reformer has found a basis upon which to build a source of revenue. The result was that these sanctimonious individuals have laid foundation for a wide-spread system for the squeezing of fees from the motion picture people under a claim that has no foundation in fact.

One very prominent moving picture producer has said there is no reason for the existence of the National Board of Censorship even as an advisory board and states that it would be as reasonable to establish such a board for the supervision of newspapers, books and other publications. "The public is the censor," says this producer. True, but the reformers do not give the public a chance on motion pictures. Newspapers and other publications are passed upon after publication. Motion pictures must run the gauntlet before publication. "But," says the wise man, "no well regulated and legitimate concern needs the advice of an advisory board. If the pictures are as they should be, the board of public opinion will endorse them." The motion picture business is rated as fourth in importance as to public benefit and capital invested. Take any of the three rated above it and see if it has not an advisory board connected with it. The most eminent jurists, scientists, statesmen and mechanics of the day have occasion to consult with others. Not that those with whom they consult and confer know more than they do, but they wish to attain perfection of judgment and plans as near as possible.

The motion picture producer feels that he has produced something that will win public approval, but at the same time feels that the judgment of others who have not been directly interested in that production is desirable, so he sends his work to the National Board of Censorship. To the open mind this would indicate a desire to give the best.

Let us go a step higher. If it is improper for the manufacturers to support an advisory board and the judgment of the manufacturer is to be conclusive, why have an advisory board for the President of the United States, the Navy and Army? Why have courts of appeals and revisions? To abolish advisory boards is to proclaim infallibility.

The claim by those who make it that the National Board of Censorship is not an organization for censorship is correct. The fact that it is maintained by monetary contributions by the makers of the subjects it passes upon shows that it is not a censorship board. The term censorship is a "misnomer," as Mr. Laemmle has stated. The fact that it is not a censorship board is established by the fact that the personnel of the board and not the organization behind it has no market price, which cannot be said of some reform organizations and their members. Another difference between the modern censorship boards and the National Board of Censorship is that when the latter passes adversely upon a film it notifies the producer of its objects and gives him an opportunity to justify the production or make corrections before public productions, while the others arbitrarily cut and slash, and then make the producer pay for the mutilated corpse.

Putting himself in the position of the manufacturer who desires to do the right thing, the writer would say: "I am unalterably opposed to national, state, or other official censorship, but I am prepared to submit any work to disinterested judgment in order that its standard may be fixed as close as possible to perfection; and I insist that producers who are not willing to follow the same course be ignored by the public." I made this contention during the early days of the National Board of Censorship and I still adhere to it although I am unalterably opposed to censorship.

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

SOME NOTABLE TRAVEL PICTURES.

Old Unchanging Holland (Pathecolor).

TRAVEL pictures are enriched by the addition of scenes in Old and Unchanging Holland in colors. The land of picturesque canals and windmills as unchanging as the people, who, dressed as were their ancestors, go about their daily occupations, and to market just as we have read in the school-books of a generation ago. Whether the old Dutch paintings remind us of the pastoral scenes, or whether these scenes remind us of the old Dutch paintings is of no importance; to see again in real life the reproduction of the cows in the large level pastures and the familiar landscape is very refreshing and we are glad to have the present generation see with greater perfection and in true life that which so pleased us in still picture form.

The village of Staphorst, known for its musical comedies, with its appropriately clad natives adds to the value of the reel.

Climbing Mt. Blanc (Pathe).

In this picture we follow a party of climbers from the village of Chamonix, which is just north of the peak, progress being slow a small hotel offers a welcome shelter for the night. Starting again the next morning, the ascent becomes entrancing with the large vista; rare views of the small villages nestling in the valleys below are at once peaceful and beautiful.

A most highly interesting picture is one obtained by the photographer of the party who has so pointed his camera that he is enabled to take a most unusual and thrilling picture of an avalanche. Perseverance is finally rewarded, after many thrilling and hazardous experiences, such as crossing a human bridge, they reach the summit and congratulate each other upon attaining such an eminence in life. Mt. Blanc is a rugged snow-capped peak rising 15,781 feet into the heavens, being the highest peak in the Alps and affords more than usual interest to the traveller.

From Kabylia to Constantine (Picturesque Algeria).

This is another beautiful scenic in pathecolor. The region of Kabylia in northeast Algeria is one of the wonderlands of the earth, it is said that its natural beauty is not surpassed by any other country. A trip by automobile is taken from this garden spot of Africa through some of the most wonderful mountain scenery in the world. It is noticed that the roads are most modern, the tile-roofed villages are quaint all the way to Constantine. This is a most interesting picture and is a valuable addition to this class of film. A new country is opened up to us and we cannot fail to find interest in the peculiar native costumes and customs all of which are enhanced by the color process.

Quaint Dances of Japan.

The dances of Japan are certainly more picturesque than those of America. This series of dances includes, as explained in English, the scarf dance, the umbrella dance and the wedding dance. The "Hana Nomaki" and the "Nippon Benzai" are some of the names by which they are known. The "Hana Nomaki" is danced in honor of the spring-time and the cherry blossoms which fill Japan with beauty and fragrance. The "Nippon Benzai" is the most spirited of the dances and its performers always arouse the loyal subjects of the Mikado to enthusiastic demonstrations; these pictures are a pleasing addition to the manners and customs of the attractive Japanese.

Unfamiliar Fishes.

It is well-known that the waters of tropical countries are teeming with beautiful and peculiar fishes, a reel of these will always be more than attractive. The kinematograph has it to its added credit that it can produce pictures of this class which beforetime were impossible. The aquarium was of limited use to the schools at large, book illustrations were almost equally limited; now however we are able to see all kinds of fishes from the Amazon River, South America; the streams of India, and the waters of the West Indies. This film is as instructive as it is unique and will be more than cordially welcomed.

A Tea Plantation.

A small subject yet full of interest is this depicting a tea plantation in the Island of Java. Being one of the island's most extensive operations and from which it reaps its largest income it is an industrial of importance, it will therefore take its place with both Industrials and Travel pictures. The manner of picking the leaves, their sorting and drying is interesting.

AN EDUCATIONAL INDUSTRY.

A Pennsylvania newspaper has just made the discovery (long known elsewhere) that the "Moving Picture is a Giant Industry"; with some detail well known to the trade. What is at this time of more importance and needs to be more widely known is that the moving picture industry is the greatest Educational Industry of the day and hour. While of most recent growth and development it is a mightier factor for promoting educationalism than any other influence or power at present in operation. There is nothing to compare with the moving picture for the teaching of all kinds of subjects in the public schools; it is equally valuable in vocational, technical and industrial training. It is at once the great teacher of travel, history, science and art. It has suddenly become the picture newspaper of the day. And because it is seen by millions of people daily it has such a hold upon their lives that its responsibilities as an educator are as great as its powers. If the newspapers of the country would begin to take as much notice of the educational industry of which the picture is capable and press its positive advantages, free from belittling criticisms and repetitions they would be helping a good work.

CONCERNING CENSORSHIP.

That the educational picture is in no way interested in censorship being in itself immune, does not necessarily mean that the Educator should be entirely silent on the question. Believing, however, that there are readers of the Educator to whom the question of censorship comes, even if only in a secondary manner; to place an emphasis on the action of The Moving Picture World will surely be appropriate. The writer entirely agrees with no less an authority than the Rev. Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," when he says:—

"The motion picture business in some parts of America is being subjected to the same sort of senseless persecution that drove the Hugenots and Pilgrims from Europe."

The rise and development of the moving picture is its own argument against any criticism demanding censorship in the form desired by hysterical—even though religious—reformers. Beginning amid troubled surroundings, and passing through trying times, with enemies within as well as without, the moving picture can be truly described today as being elevating as well as educational. That it is educational in itself is proved by the fact that it has driven out many vicious forms of entertainment, has curbed many vices, very seriously injured the drug and liquor traffic, has made enemies of a class of people whose enmity is an honor, while at the same time giving to millions of people a new and clean form of entertainment heretofore thought impossible; surely then its own history is its own best sponsor. If therefore it has thus behaved so admirably in its youth what will it do in its maturity?

Surely it is enough censorship against evil to know that the picture is on the same level as the book or paper or any other publication that is found guilty of anything even approaching the indecent. He is a libeller of a knavish kind, however, who dares to suggest that a curb should be placed only and especially upon the moving picture in the fear that it might in the future become guilty of evil.

The present contention of the writer is that the moving picture is such an inherent eduactional power, that to tamper with its liberties in any way is to hinder its growth and progress. It is an accepted theory that the best antidotes of evil are education and culture, these qualities the picture enjoys in no limited degree, and is using them in a marvellously progressive manner. When one looks beneath the exterior of the proposed censorship, one is forced to the conclusion that it has less of righteousness and nobility of purpose than appears on the surface, it is not based on logic or fact, but is only bolstered up by a species of narrow-minded reform which has lived so long as to become professional in its character, ravenous in its appetite, and literally goes about seeking what it may devour; its opposition to the moving picture is not directed against the moving picture as such but rather a continuous plan of attacking anything and everything which its self appointed and arrogantly assumed authority deems necessary, to a degree which becomes pharisaical and only earns for its agitators more contempt and less respect.

The moving picture is the outgrowth of the highest education in science, art and literature, it is really Illustrated Education, it has known nothing but progress and success, it is the marvel of the times, and while ready to be judged at any angle, it can prove itself nowhere more worthy than in its educational value historically and prophetically.

ANALYZING MOVEMENTS.

A new feature among the Pathe educationals is one in which the ordinary and special movements of men and animals are recorded. In the analyzing of human movements the actions of athletes are shown many times slower than in actual life, this enables it to be seen how the muscles are brought into use, as also how they differ in the varied actions of running, jumping and throwing weights. The pictures were taken with a Pathe extra fast camera at the rate of one hundred pictures a second; when shown upon the screen, the slowness of action causes every movement to be followed with studied attention.

The beneficial results of this picture will be many, not only as an illustration for the purpose of showing how the muscles are used, but also how they may be used and controlled, making them of additional value in physical training and culture. The movements of animals are also very interesting, years ago the Japanese were considered extravagant in their illustrations of animals in decorative art, instantaneous photography only revealed the fact that they had been closely observing their true and natural movements.

This latest method now confirms more than ever the truth of much that previously seemed impossible. The gait of a horse, the leg actions and changes are clearly seen; the same with dogs, cats and kangaroos, making the film an extremely instructive one, the value of them being enhanced by the fact that they are in natural colors; an extension of this series will be as welcome as it is instructive.

ECONOMY THROUGH SAFETY.

The "Safety First" campaign with all its advantages and lessons is also a campaign of efficiency and economy; the idea of safety is a great incentive to efficiency and as a result a promoter of economy. For these reasons—very worthy in themselves—the railroad companies while doing admirable work in promoting "Safety Moving Picture Lectures" are best protecting the public from common dangers and themselves from loss and damage suits, while at the same time securing better and more practical all around results in labor and travel.

The New York Central Railroad Co. maintains a traveling picture exhibit which very probably covers their entire route and by its constant exhibitions does a great deal of good wherever it goes. It consists of a car in which are pictures showing the right and wrong way of doing things; warnings and instructions relating to all possible contingencies under which their own employees or the travelling public may find themselves.

In a second car is a moving picture exhibit lasting 22 minutes in which a two-reel story entitled "Steve Hill's Awakening" is shown. This is a story of a railroad man who has many narrow escapes, and who wins the yardman's daughter by having an awakening to his responsibilities and consequently by never taking chances in railroading. The story was written by Marcus A. Dow, general safety director of the New York Central lines, and the exhibitions are given on schedule time, and are free to the employees and the interested public.

Employers of labor in the towns visited are also encouraged to send their employees to visit the exhibition and so increase the general good sought to be done.

PATHE'S "HUMAN MOVEMENTS ANALYZED" VERY POPULAR.

"Human Movements Analyzed" and its sequel "Animal Movements Analyzed," two single reel educational subjects, have received larger bookings than any Pathe one reel pictures in years. The newspapers everywhere have united in declaring them to be as interesting and instructive as any films that have ever come under their observation. At the Strand theater in New York every audience greeted them with long continued applause, a remarkable tribute for educationals.

F. Lumsden Hare

AN IMPORTANT World Film acquisition is F. Lumsden Hare, a leading English actor well known to the legitimate stage. He was born in Tipperary, Ireland, and educated at Saint Dunston's College in London.

He followed the sea four years before going on the stage. In London he appeared in important roles in such plays as "Ben Hur," as John Storm in "The Christian," and "The Admirable Crichton."

He has also appeared in South Africa and throughout the Orient, landing in America in 1904. Since then he has played leads with John Drew, Ethel Barrymore, Fay Davis, Amelia Bingham, Billie Burke, Gertrude Elliott, Maude Adams and Grace George. He is an ardent golfer and motorist and is a member of the Lambs and Players' Clubs. His favorite hobby is fruit-farming on his Long Island estate.

F. Lumsden Hare.

Mr. Hare is playing the leads in two World Film features —"Love's Crucible," with Miss Frances Nelson, and "As In a Looking Glass," in support of Miss Kitty Gordon.

IVAN AT WORK ON "THE IMMORTAL FLAME."

A new Ivan feature, "The Immortal Flame," is in process of production at the Ivan studio under the direction of Ivan Abramson. The theme treats of the immortality of true love and the sacrifices and heartaches one can undergo when imbued with the spirit of this divine fire. It was written especially to feature Miss Maude Fealy by Ivan Abramson. An especially strong supporting company, headed by Paula Shay, Joseph Burke, James Cooley, Edna Luby and Willard Case appear in the cast.

As soon as the interiors are filmed the entire company will leave for Washington, where some of the most important scenes in the play will be taken. Several of the official buildings will be used to give the drama the necessary color. It is expected that "The Immortal Flame" will be ready for release the early part of March as the regular monthly feature for that month.

CONSTANCE COLLIER IN SECOND MOROSCO SUBJECT.

Following her screen debut in "The Tongues of Men," the Oliver Morosco photoplay recently released on the Paramount program, Constance Collier has commenced work on her second production for this company, "The Code of Marcia Gray," especially written for her by Frank Lloyd, the well-known Morosco director. The chief support to the star is offered by Forrest Stanley, the talented Morosco idol of the stage, whose success on the screen has been instantaneous, and Harry DeVere, the talented player who has just become affiliated with the Morosco forces.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Udells.

DAVE UDELL comes in with a lot of stuff. In his letter he says:

The ads enclosed have brought me more business than anything I have ever written. Especially the one where the plays are listed for the patron's own selection. I receive letters every day from patrons wanting such and such a photoplay, and as I have the entire list booked it does not inconvenience me in the least.

May I suggest that exhibitors should write articles and press notices with a local flavor instead of relying on the film companies for this source of information. People are tiring of "a wonderful masterpiece," "beautiful gowns made by Lady Duff Gordon," "a great Broadway success," etc.

The advertisement offers thirty-one titles from which five are to be selected and since Mr. Udell had them cinched for the Majestic, Paxton, Ill., it follows that the selection will not put him in a hole. It does help as a guide to future bookings and as an index to the taste of his patrons and it does more immediate good in making the patrons feel that the house is trying to please.

The suggestion as to localizing the press stuff is a good one. A. W. Walker, of the Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. D., is localizing all his clips for his house organ. Mr. Udell's readers are still more purely local. Mr. Udell also adds a number of suggestions, many of which he has tried out and found good. They probably we be as useful to others:

An alarm clock is about the best investment for an Exhibitor who is troubled with "empty seats."

No Exhibitor is omniscient. Riding on a "high horse" will take you nowhere. Mingle with your patrons and be one of them.

Be your own censor. See your films before showing them and discard the ones you think suggestive. Tell your exchange about it.

Beware of "eye sores." Two large shining EXIT lights near your screen attracts the eye from the picture and annoys many patrons of nervous temperaments. Also the illuminated sign near your screen announcing coming features. There should be nothing near the screen which will attract the eye from the picture. Do not surround your screen with a gold, shiny border. There should be nothing in the theater for the light to reflect on.

You will not profit by having a candy slot machine on each seat. One patron does not like to hear his neighbor SMACK, SMACK, SMACK on a piece of candy, etc., when he is trying to enjoy the show.

Do not force your patrons to take any form of advertisement from your theater. Put your programs or any other literature on a shelf, table, etc., with a sign TAKE ONE. TOMORROW'S PROGRAM, etc.

Be original. Stop trying to outdo your competitor by imitating him and adding to. If your competitor is running a five reeler on Tuesday for 15c., don't try and gain more business by advertising seven reels for 10c. on the same night. That's babyish and weakening. Instead try these:

Advertise a tableau to be given every notable picture you have booked. Arrange the tableau in such a way that it will be a counterpart of the picture itself, or a vital scene in the picture. For example, "The Christian." I arranged a graveyard scene on the stage, had a curtain painted with an ancient city in the background. To carry out the perspective from the stage the wood drop also contained a few crosses, smaller tombstones, trees, a little pond, etc. The central figure on the stage was a large cross, made of pasteboard and green ivy hanging down the sides. By the cross knelt a man with a cassock to represent the Christian praying. A red light was placed behind the drop near the horizon and a blue flood thrown on the whole. The front drop commenced to rise and a chorus of voices in the wings sang "The Holy City." The audience was surprised at first but before the picture was thrown on the screen, they were one and all in a receptive mood.

You can make extra money and gain excellent advertising, at the same time convert people to attend your show by having a children's night, the old folks night, a comedy night, old soldiers' night, nights for different lodges, colleges, universities, societies, home culture clubs, parties, weddings, factories and everything decent under the sun. Put on a picture like "Guarding Old Glory." Have the school children march with flags to your theater, led by a band playing "The Star Spangled Banner." Try it once. Everybody in town will be out to see your show.

Try badges. Like they do on election days, conventions, etc. Imprint "I am going to see So and So at the Big Theater." "I saw a feature last night at the Big Theater. It was great." Some people will not let you put the badges on them. That's all right. Don't quit business because they give you a cold shoulder. If they say, "Don't you dare pin one of those things on me." You say, "We are going to show a great picture tonight at my theater. Here's some tickets, come and bring your whole family. The reason I'm giving you these tickets is because I want you for a patron." Don't let anyone escape.

Read the Moving Picture World from cover to cover and apply it to your business.

We particularly like that last suggestion because so few exhibitors get all this paper gives them. They look up the program in which they are interested and read a note here and there, but they do not read the entire issue and they cannot possibly hope to keep posted unless they do. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is as necessary to your business as the house you run, for it is necessary that you know as much as possible of the business in which you are engaged. Many exhibitors read this department and yet do not read the news section in the back of the paper where are recorded advertising stunts sent in by staff correspondents. They are not as fully commented upon, but they supplement the work of this department.

That's all the Udells this trip, but there is more to come.

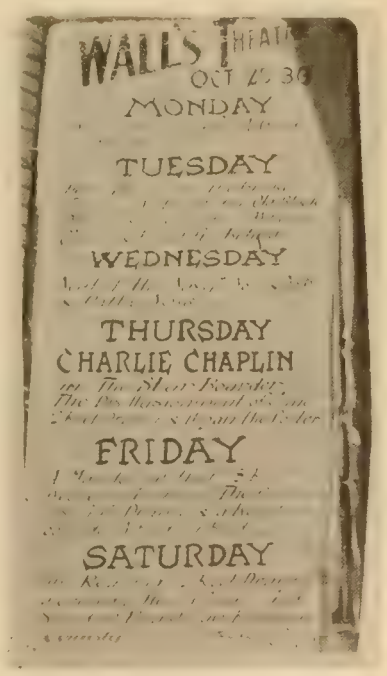
Here's An Old Friend.

S. E. Wall, away back in 1846 or thereabouts, wrote that he was going to write. At last he has. Mr. Wall is running in Plain City, Ohio, now and he has been making money, because he hustles for it. If you are a late comer to the department, know Mr. Wall as the man who went into a small town and got more people into a house for ten cents than the last man in could coax with a five cent piece. Mr. Wall writes:

It has been some time since I bothered you with any of my offerings, chiefly because I had nothing to offer that I considered worth while to your valuable department, but when you reminded me a week or two ago that I was rather slow starting that whooping big letter so long promised, I decided to let you know that I am still here anyway.

I am enclosing a couple of post cards that I use each week that I find very effective advertising, as I have an "honest-to-goodness" hand-picked mailing list that reaches everybody in town and on the rural routes.

The card advertising SCANDAL is one of 400 that I 'tuk my pen in hand' to and after much neck-bending and tongue-chewing I managed to get them out, but please advise your readers who are inclined to take things easy not to start that method of advertising for it sure is some job. The results, however, justify all the labor involved, and results are what I am interested in, and with that end in view I get out the advertising about every other week with pen and ink, alternating with the multigraph card like the one advertising JUNE FRIDAY. The multigraph card is very effective, but it does not have the personal appeal that the hand-written card has.



The weekly programs as shown on enclosed photos are painted on regular sign painter's cloth the size of a three sheet and I have permanent locations around town in conspicuous places entirely away from the theater.

Since inaugurating the mailing list I have discontinued the weekly program for general distribution and for that reason have nothing to submit for your inspection along that line.

Business has been very good, showing a nice increase over corresponding dates last year, but as may be expected things have been very quiet during the last three weeks, due to the Christmas shopping, but as that is over now, here's hoping.

Mr. Wall writes what, in an earlier day, would have been called a "clerkly" hand. It is not a copper plate script, for it is possessed of individuality, but it is as clear as script printing, and as easily read. He can get out hand-written cards and get away with it, but unless you can write almost as good as a press can print, don't try it, and even then it will be easier on you to have a line cut made of the message, print it a good black and fill in with any of the good carbon inks. Drawing ink is not what is meant, for drawing ink will dry down glossy where the printing ink dries flat; without a gloss. Your stationer or art dealer can get you an ink that will match the printing and greatly reduce the manual labor while preserving the effect. The handwritten card addresses the recipient. The multigraphed card does not. The three sheet sign is nicely lettered and, being on cloth, will stay up in a rain where paper will wash down. Mr. Wall does not date his days, which should be done. Let the man on his way home, in a hurry, note that Chaplin shows on the 28th. Do not make him take a second look to see that the week is the current one. Always give them day and date. If it only influences ten cents worth of trade, that will help. From the photograph we gather that two colors are used, and that the days are probably in red and the announcement in some less marked color, perhaps blue, which will fade in front of the camera. We think it would be better to have the signs done on cards, each for a day, with the days permanently lettered and the cards and dates to be slipped into grooves, the same as the window signs. The saving in cloth and work will soon repay the cost of the boards and presently also pay for glazing the signs, or for a pint of waterproof or spar varnish. If the sign is to be permanent, make it work to the best advantage by proclaiming its permanency. There is value even in the suggestion of continuance. The cards can be changed once a week or each day, the Monday date being taken out Tuesday morning and replaced with a new date and card. In this case a color should be used for each week and changed weekly for three or four weeks when a return to the first color may be made.

Right.

L. J. Scott, of the V-L-S-E exchange, Kansas City, sends in a New Year greeting that is neatly done, one oblong sheet and one that started off that way, but which was brought to a point on the bias. The feature is this sentiment:

We succeed only AFTER
Our Customers Succeed

Any exchange worked on that plan will succeed, because it will help the customers to succeed and the V-L-S-E exchanges generally are notable for being run on that plan.

Mr. Ruffner writes:

It all came about this way: For many weeks prior to our taking on a triangle franchise we had been teasing the jitney hounds with a Saturday souvenir matinee for the kids and not wishing to disappoint our many little friends, we continued to offer a small gift as well as a show, all for a nickle.

Last Saturday we slipped 'em the Triangle candy.
In their tummies,
In their eyes—
That's the way to advertise.

And darn if it didn't break all previous Saturday matinee records. Called in a candy maker and put the buck up to him, and he made good. It is pure sugar goods, "cut mixed" and is not painted. The "T" is cast right through the piece. Put one in your mouth now and at 5 o'clock day after tomorrow take it out and you'll still find the "T," verifying the statement that we do not use a moustache to deceive you.

This will furnish you with "stuff" for one issue and you can follow it with another one—that of carding all the autos. We have a giant footman out in front who takes care of the auto trade. He attends to every little detail that has for the comfort of our gasoline patrons. When they drive up and stop, the footman hangs a card on the radiator cap

"WE ARE IN THE LIBERTY.
COME IN."

It is 14 inches square, and if the owner of the car kicks about the card he is quelled with two passes. If that doesn't appease his wrath, we offer to buy him a tank of gas, and then if he hollers, we'll shoot holes in his tires. He just can't lose.

Mr. Ruffner asked us not to print his breezy letter, preferring to do the dignified, but he writes too brightly to be translated into coldly severe type. In the cut Mr. Ruffner is the one with the eyeglasses. He can look almost like a deacon of the church when he wants to, and he writes like a staff correspondent of the Police Gazette, also when he wants to, but he and Mr. Bagley both know how to hustle. Mr. Bagley was originally a window trimmer and got over into the show business in August, 1914. He was in Missoula, Montana. Then he and Ruffner, who started in Victoria, Wash., (not B. C., the latter is a larger town), and who worked over to Butte, Montana, got together and opened in Spokane. Also they are still opening Spokane. It is no reflection on them that the entire state went dry just after they moved in. It is purely a coincidence.

Joking aside there is not a more alert pair of wires anywhere in the show business than these two men. And they keep on hustling even now that they know they are good. Just for that matter what do you thing of a picture theatre that has its own candy made to order, and so help us heaven, every last piece of the four ounces they sent us (one package) had a Triangle trade-mark in the centre in proper colors, and it was good candy, for we did not get ill or even uneasy. To date that candy seems to hold the medal.

Much Advertising.

A. T. Shaughnessy, of the Morgan Grand, Sharon, Pa., sends in one of his regular house programs, trimmed up a little for Christmas. Five thousand are printed, of which a thousand are mailed and the rest handed out at the theater. The house seats 1,300 and Mr. Shaughnessy writes that in the two months he has had the proposition he has boosted the receipts more than two hundred dollars a week. That speaks for itself. At the same time, looking at this proposition from the usual angle, we think it could be made to do more work for the house and less for the foreign advertisers. The first inside page is the only one that runs house stuff on the right hand and then only about a third of a page to a day, which is not much when it is considered that the issue is twenty pages and cover. We think it would boost another hundred or so if there was a page of advertising dropped and replaced with some sound argument for the pictures and the house. It is nice to get a lot of income from the program, but the dollar that the advertisement brings in might be a dollar and a half if the space were given the house. You cannot see that dollar and a half as easily and a cartwheel or a greenback is something tangible, but the dollar fifty is there. It must be a good advertising medium or it would not be patronized so liberally, but because it is a good medium is just the reason why a house should invest in more space.

It is a clean and attractive issue, well set and printed, and the holiday cover in red and green is not garish, but a jeweler and a bank each get more of the front page display than the house does. Not counting liner ads, there are thirty-five advertisements in the issue, which is a lot when it is considered that some are full pages. Against this there are seven house spaces of about a third of a page each, six days and the underline. When Mr. Shaughnessy goes after advertising, he gets it.

From Brooklyn.

L. L. Levin, of the Regent and Colonade theaters, Brooklyn, sends in a joint program for the two houses. For the week in question they had the Castle film, and the cut for this shows the dancers against a black ground, Mrs. Castle's white dress standing out prominently. Printing on white paper would have been conspicuous, but Mr. Levin uses a vivid yellow that pulls it up even better. It is a strong canary color, not a sickly yellow and the dress catches the eye as far as the sheet can be seen. We like the yellow paper for the program, but if Mr. Levin will send in a program on white stock some time we'll reproduce the top and show how he gets a neat head for the two houses. We take it that the houses bicycle the films, since the single program is made to serve the two houses, but while this fact is probably known to the patrons it might be well to run a note explaining to the man who sees the sheet for the first time that this is the case.

The subjects are played up smartly, the house supplying the descriptive lines. Get Mr. Levin's Scotch:

> A grand mixture of haggis, porridge, thistle down and Black and White. Lads and Lassies from the lochs, doons, and braes, equipped with sporans, claymores and dirks, gambol over the heather, "'Tis a bra', brecht, moonlecht necht, the necht, on Loch Lomond."

This is for a comedy. For drama the lines have the proper dignity and in this announcement it will be seen that Mr. Levin takes advantage of the presence of the player at a city theater to help the feature:

> Miss Stevens, the brilliant stage and screen star, who created a sensation by her wonderful performance in "Soul of a Woman," will again make her bow on the screen, in the "House of Tears," another marvelous production. Miss Stevens is now appearing in the stellar role in "The Unchastened Woman," conceded to be the most successful play of the season on Broadway.

Perhaps you cannot always beat the company press agent, but you most assuredly can phrase your announcements in a way that suits your patrons best if you will give the matter a little study.

The S. C. N.

Either Bill Swanson sleeps or he snores with his eyes open. It was number seven instead of the number one of the Swanson Circuit News that came to our desk. The Movie Fan, from the Swanson house in Grand Junction, Colorado, has been a regular visitor for a long time, but the new sheet covers three houses in Salt Lake City, the American, Liberty and Rex. It looks very like a regular paper and for that reason it is reproduced in part. Most of the newspapers style organs forget they are trying to be like papers and so they look like house organs and nothing else. This looks like a newspaper and stays that way. We think that the booklet form is better than the newspaper style, though the latter is much cheaper, both as to stock and through the omission of folding and pasting. If you do get out a newspaper house organ, get out one that looks like a newspaper and not like a cross between a daily and a circular for a department store. Mr. Swanson may sleep, but it is at least with one eye open.

Ghastly Opposition.

J. W. Llewllyn, who is down in Georgia, sends in a postcard on the back of which is written:

> I have run up against all kinds of opposition—revival meetings, circus, lyceum, rep shows, carnivals, fires, prize fights, church fairs and big weddings, but this opposition last night skinned them all.

The opposition was a double lynching and the card shows two negro youths hanging from the same tree. It certainly does put business to the bad when the town is in a ferment. If Mr. Llewllyn will supply a permanent address, we would like to drop him a line.

A Schedule.

A. R. Lyon, of the Transcona, Transcona, Manitoba, sends in his first house program. It really is not so much a program as it is a new rate card, for Mr. Lyon had to add two reels of comedy to supplement the five reel features. This gets the show well under way before the feature starts and late comers can get the entire feature instead of missing the opening.

The issue is on brown stock, suggestive of kraft paper, but of better grade, about three by five inches. As Winnipeg is only seven miles distant with three trains a day, the program uses this fact to start off the argument for the raise. This reads:

> OUR BIG
> was trying to sell Amusement in Transcona cheaper than in Winnipeg. Big Features are in demand, but our patrons say if they come out these cold nights they must have a good laugh also; and most of them are broad-minded enough to admit they have been getting a little MORE THAN VALUE for their money EVERY FRIDAY AND SATURDAY lately. Now with the BEST TWO REEL COMEDY that money can buy, added to the Programme, making a Two Hours' Entertainment that may be equalled but not bettered here or in Winnipeg, no one will surely begrudge the extra Five Cents when they consider they are getting a Reel More and Quality the same as in Winnipeg for the same price. These are facts which we can substantiate. Think it over.

Facing this is the new schedule of time and cost. This is most distinctly a good idea and worth following. It runs:

Adults	15c.	Children	10c
Open at			7.15
Show Starts with Topical at			7.45
Two-Reel Comedy at			7.55
Big Five-Reel Feature at			8.25
Ready for Home at			9.45

Comedy and War Topical again
——for those who are Late.——

Mr. Lyon writes that in spite of the cost he would like to get out a program regularly and thinks it would pay, providing that he could make it readable. We think it will pay, and we think, too, that he can make it readable. We would suggest that he change to paper stock of fair grade, since this card is better than need be used. The schedule, in smaller display, should run on the first page, with the program on the third page, house talk, short and snappy, on the second and the underline on the back. For a time the house talk should partly concern the greater value, not in apologetic tone, but with the frankness with which he has already met the situation. If he can get a couple of advertisements for the back page, it will cut the cost considerably, and will not detract from the usefulness of the sheet to him.

He sends in some newspaper advertising that is well worked, the local paper coming out weekly. The proofreading is poorly done. Mr. Lyon should insist on having proof sent him for correction. They get a "clear photoplay" for "clear photography" and similar breaks in every advertisement.

Eight and Folded.

The Coliseum, Detroit, sends in some neat eight page folders well displayed and attractively printed. The two holiday issues carried a greeting in a holly border. They make good use of cuts, but use no house stuff whatever. It would be better to condense the program a little in order to steal a page. They are in line with the new Children's Matinee movement, but we hardly believe that Chaplin in "A Night Out" will win approval as a child subject.

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Mother Love.

NOTHING is stronger in a story than mother-love, but the love of a mother and the love of an actress playing a mother are two very different things. Don't grab a mother by the hair of her head and jam her, shrieking, into your story. Have her there first and let her be the story and it will sell if it is new. If you drag poor old mother in again just because you must have heart interest and do not know how to get it otherwise, most spectators will resent the artifice and no one in an audience will feel the appeal. The real appeal to a mother-love story comes not from the fact that you have a mother in the story, but because the old lady acts like a real mother. Not alone in mother stories, but in all the sympathetic stories you write, the appeal must be genuine and sincere and not a palpable appeal to the conventional emotions.

The Reason Why.

"Why do you keep talking about one reels when the five reel is in demand?" questions a correspondent. We don't. We talk technique which is equally applicable to one reel and three reel stories. But when we speak of one reels it is because the one reel must be mastered before the multiple is taken up by most writers. Enough of them are writing five reel stories without the slightest encouragement.

Sure Thing.

A novice writer tells with hurt feelings that a company wrote him they were in the market for a certain style of scripts, and that, though it took him only a week to do one, it came back with the remark that they were overstocked. He seems to feel that he was being fooled and says:

> They are overstocked in the space of one week. Some writers must keep a stock of plays to send out on order like hose, shirts and underwear. When an editor is so hard up that he writes for material and yet one week later tells you he is overstocked, it gets my goat. .

Good-bye goat! It's gone, but the complainant is reminded that the editor probably did not send out one letter, but many, and it is to be presumed that many writers had a script or two on hand. In a week the editor can round up a couple of dozen and then he is overstocked. He does not have to wait for every one to come in. He gets the first check who first gets in with the required goods. Possibly, though, the editor was not really overstocked, but that the script was under standard and he was trying to save the feelings of the goat-giving author.

Judgment.

A Canadian correspondent writes for advice. He says that generally he can find the answers in Technique of the Photoplay, or in back files of the Photoplaywright, but he is getting letters than run something like these paragraphs:

Not enough comedy for a reel.

Not enough comedy in picture—lacks story.

Not enough plot.

We think that the correspondent will find a lot about not enoughs in back issues, but there have been other requests along the same lines, so it might be well to give a new paragraph.

Not enough means just that. You do not need as much sugar for half a cup of coffee as you do when the cup is filled. Comedy that will do for a split reel may not be sufficient for a full reel And you must have a little more than twice as much comedy, too. As the film runs down there is more expected of the story. It must get faster in its movement, the smashes or crises must become stronger and more frequent or the interest will drop because the story is not living up to its promises. It started out well, but it is sagging in action or plot, or both. Build up both the comedy action and the story that requires that action. Do not merely put in more business. Put in more business that tells the story. Perhaps you have John floundering in the creek. It gets a laugh or two. If you need more comedy do not keep him in the water. Get something that is even funnier and something, too, that belongs to the story. John in the water was funny. Do not keep him there or just throw someone else in. Perhaps John was running from an old maid when the auto struck him and tossed him off a bridge. Perhaps we can give the old maid a bath. Don't merely have her thrown in by another automobile. Let her come up to the bridge, she sees John's peril, cries out that she will save him and jumps, the water is only a few feet deep. but she performs a technical rescue and demands his hand as the reward. This development adds to the story as well as to the action. A couple of more points worked out from that will give the added action and the added story that the editor wants. It is simple when you know how, but like all the rest of the trick work, you must first learn how, and the way to learn how is to practice. Our correspondent writes that his technique has been praised, and he has some sales to his credit. It looks as though he had acquired the technique of form without getting the greater technique that enables him to make the story do tricks.

To a little child a box of building blocks is nothing more than some bits of wood or composition in various shapes. He may at first merely plan rectangles and squares, but as familiarity with their shape and possibilities comes to him, he will, through experiment, plan more pretentious structures. It is the same way with plot material. At first you can handle only the simple scenes and obtain only the simple effects. You are no more than the child with the untaught brains and hands. It is by experiment and observation that you will learn to build action into the more fanciful structures of complete story-action.

It is the same with drama. If you write a two reel idea in five reels of action, it will not sell. You have the proper length, but the thing is hollow, like a turkey stuffed with a toy balloon instead of oyster dressing. Learn to add story as you add action, or else keep the action to the story and you will write only two reels instead of five. It does not matter that you have 250 scenes. If only 80 of these tell the real story, you are not over two reels.

Answering Questions.

We are always glad to reply to questions about photoplay writing that are intelligently and legibly put, but we cannot spend an hour in trying to make a question out because a man writes on paper from a pencil scratch pad into which the ink sinks to the other side and then writes on the other side, neither can we reply to questions so badly expressed that we do not know what the writer is asking.

This department is to help those who require help, but you are supposed to acquire at least a foundation knowledge of your subject and not ask "what headline" to put on a scene of a ship about to be wrecked. It is the aim of this department to put on the finishing touches; not to communicate the knowledge of the fundamentals.

Making Breaks.

A correspondent, who seems to watch the pictures very carefully, evidently has a better sense of the fitness of things than one feature producer. A man has just committed a murder. It is, of course, not justifiable in the strict sense of the law or morality, but morally, in a way, it is a splendid act of sacrifice. Then the police come in and haul him away—handcuffed. The correspondent adds:

> The big scene falls flat. The spectator leaves with a bad taste in his mouth and a damn in his mind. A one-octave director, with assinine stupidity, handcuffs the man like Red Hogan or Mike the Bite. Can you beat it?

We can come pretty close to even if we cannot beat it; offhand, but the point is that the writer needs to realize that circumstances alter cases. Police do not treat the tough: the professional criminal as they do the man of standing. It is to be expected that Boston Mike will try to get away after a crime and it may be a wise precaution to handcuff him, but a man of standing and intelligence will not try to kill the officers and make his escape, and so he is not manacled. Write your action to fit your story and your people. It may be that a director will proceed to spoil it with some supposedly clever touch of realism, but do not have the crime on your own conscience. Fit the situation. Make your people act naturally.. You can if you give the matter thought. Possibly in this case the director thought it would add realism. He saw only the visual side and did not get the thought beneath the action, though always this is as important as the action itself and sometimes more so.

"Quick Diaphragm."

Seven letters have come in asking what a "quick diaphragm fade in" means. One of the letters explains that it is used in a sample script. A "quick dia. &c." is merely a quick fade. The diaphragm is opened quickly instead of slowly. Why in thunder will people worry over these tiny points of mechanics when they might be giving their time to plotting? Never mind the technical terms. They are useful, but not essential. GET AN IDEA and the director will attend to the quick diaphragming and the slow fades and the fades to vignettes and the irising and all the rest of the shop talk. That is his business. Yours is to write stories.

Question No. 123.

Best answer will be published and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theatre managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is a mercury arc rectifier? What is its purpose and how does it operate? What is the source of the light emanating from its bulb? Is the current it supplies true D. C.? Does it take A. C. direct from the line into its bulb?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 117.

The Roll of Honor on Question No. 117 contains the following names: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; Bert Carlson, Minneapolis, Minn.; W. A. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; G. Betz, Osgood, Ind.; E. I. Wilson, St. Joseph, Mo.; W. E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Mass.; P. R. Dey, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Mr. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.

Again I have decided to publish two answers, viz.: those of Brothers Crawford and Hays. These cover the various points very thoroughly, also briefly and concisely.

Reply to Question No. 117.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Question:

What is the ideal shutter? What test would you apply to determine whether or not the outside shutter of your new machine was of the right proportion? Is shutter proportion altered by local conditions? How would you proceed to determine the best place to place the outside shutter—how far from the lens?

The Answer:

So far as the elimination of flicker and the minimizing of light loss be concerned a 50-50 shutter would be ideal. But travel ghost all too frequently prevents the use of such a shutter and local conditions should decide the type of shutter to install, since the type suited to one condition may be unsuited to another. For example: Working with a lens of short focal length, one is compelled to use a shutter with a wider main blade than when working with a lens of longer focal length. To decide where to place the shutter on its shaft, proceed as follows: Place in the slide carrier a metal slide having a round hole about one-quarter of an inch in diameter drilled in its center and project the light to the screen. Blow smoke through the ray in front of the objective and set the shutter where the beam of light is narrowest. To test the shutter of my new machine, I would substitute one with blades made of cardboard and would trim down the main blade a little at a time until travel ghost appeared on both sides, whereupon, using the cardboard for a pattern, I would cut my main blade a little bit wider than the pattern. If, on the other hand, the blade was too narrow and there was already travel ghost, I would proceed in the same way, but instead of trimming off would add a little to the blade until the travel ghost disappeared, and then make the main blade of the metal shutter the same width. After doing this I would cut down or add to the flicker blades, as the case might require, making them as nearly as possible the same width as the main blade, always provided it seemed practical to do so, which would depend on the necessary width of the main blade. In making the test I would of course locate the shutter in the proper place on its shaft in the manner before described.

Reply to Question No. 117.

By Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.

The ideal shutter is one with three blades of equal width with each other and three exposure openings of the same width as the blades. Shutter proportion is altered by local conditions (focal length of lens, length of throw, size of picture, and whether A. C. or D. C. is used). The proper distance of the shutter from the lens is determined by the following process: Drill a hole one-quarter inch in diameter in the center of a piece of metal, the size of a stereopticon slide. Place this slide in the carrier and project the light through the objective. By blowing smoke into the ray in front of the objective you will find that it, the ray, will narrow down to a thin point, and again begin to spread out. The narrow place shows the proper location for the shutter.

Tired Knocking—Start Boosting.

George Kerrigan, Columbus, Ohio, writes:

> This is my first letter to our department, though I have been reading it for four years, and it certainly has done me a lot of good. That light ray dope was the real goods, though I am afraid some of the boys did not think so. Well, you should worry! When they get tired of knocking they will have to start boosting. Would like to know price of the new Handbook, and when it will be ready.

Yes, Brother Kerrigan, you are perfectly right. When they get tired of knocking they will start boosting; also you are correct in another way, for I am not doing the least bit of worrying about knockers. If it relieves their minds and makes them feel better, why, who am I that I should spoil their amusement. The sound of their hammers probably is music to their ears, and it don't harm me in the least, so—there you are.

One reason that "some of the boys" do not appreciate the light ray dope is found in the fact that they seriously object to anyone insinuating that their profession or trade consists of anything but making a splice, twisting a handle, and drawing a little, measley pay check on Saturday night. Their tribe (The Ancient and Accepted Order of Boneheads), is, however, on the decrease. Many of the Hammer Brigade have already deserted the anvil chorus, and are now enthusiastic boosters.

As to the Handbook, why I cannot tell you the price, and the present guess as to its time of issue is the latter part of February. We are doing all we can to get it out, but it is a slow job. However, it's going to be some booklet. You may take that from me as a fact.

Film Cement.

B. Crowe, Toronto, Canada, says:

> Following the advice of a brother operator I am writing with regard to film cement. Have tried ascetic ether and film, but find it fails to give satisfaction. True, it makes a good splice for the time being, but pulls apart as soon as it becomes thoroughly dry. Could you favor me with a formula for cement that will be O. K.?

No, I've given up, sworn off and raised the nothing doing signal on recommending film cement, or film cement formulas. It seems that none of them are thoroughly reliable, and this, so far as I can make out, is due to variation in chemicals. For instance: I send a certain formula to an operator in Wisconsin. He gets the drugs, mixes, them, and raises a paen of joy. "Eureka! Fine! Excellent! Great! Muchas Gracias," he cries. I send the same identical formula to another operator in Texas or Alabama, or somewhere else, and he gets the drugs, mixes them, and promptly writes back: "Thatsaheluvadoseyouhandedme" * * * and there you are. Nothing doing! I've back pedalled on film cement. The best formulas I know of will be found in the new Handbook, but—but—BUT—at your own risk, my boy, at your own risk.

Meniscus-Bi-Convex.

With reference to meniscus-bi-convex combinations, I wrote to Brother C. D. Armstrong, Ashland, Wis., asking him to make comparison between them and the plano-convex as regards their optical properties. I present herewith Friend Armstrong's reply:

> Replying to yours of the 7th inst., asking for dope on the comparative relationship of the meniscus-bi-convex and the plano-

> bi-convex combinations, would state that, in the instance you quote, their relationship would be equal—that is to say, if it was the intention to supplant a plano-convex with a meniscus, providing we do not alter the E.F. of the combination by altering the distance between the two convex faces of the lenses, or the distance of either conjugate foci point from the convex surfaces of the lenses. (See Fig. 1.) We could, however, substitute a lens of one kind and focal length for the other kind of a different focal length without altering the ultimate results, providing we alter the distance of separation between their convex faces to maintain the same E.F. in each instance.
> Now if we alter the distance from the crater to the convex face of the rear condenser, or the distance from the crater to the convex surface of the first condenser, or we alter the distance of separation between the two convex surfaces of the lenses, we therefore alter the E.F. of our combination.
> When a lens of one kind, and a certain focal length, is supplanted by a lens of another kind but of the same focal length, the distance of either point of the conjugate foci to a point bisecting the distance between their convex surfaces must remain the same (Fig. 1); that is to say, the distance from the crater to the apex of the convex surface of the rear lens must remain the same, and the distance from the focus to the apex of the convex surface of the front lens must remain the same.
> As I said before, if we disturb the distance between their convex surfaces we alter the E.F., and this is why I have always contended that the basic points in determining a condenser lens combination are the focus and the apex of the convex surface of the front condenser, and the crater and the apex of the convex surface of the rear condenser. When there is no separation, or distance between these convex surfaces, the dividing point is the same in each instance. The center of our condenser lens combination means a point that bisects the distance between their convex surfaces.

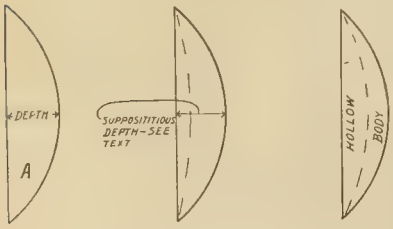

Figure 2.

> Now if we have a 7½-inch plano rear lens and wish to put a 7½-inch meniscus in its place without disturbing the focus or size of our spot, it is absolutely essential that the distances, "B," incidence; "C," emergence, and "D," separation, be in no wise altered. If it were possible to obtain a meniscus 7½-inch lens which was of the same depth as a 7½-inch plano-convex (see Fig. 2), we would but have to insert the one in place of the other, but a 7½-inch plano with a 4½-inch face has a depth of about 28/32 of an inch, whereas a like meniscus has about 31/32 of an inch, or a difference of about 3/32 of an inch, so you see we could not insert the meniscus in place of the plano without disturbing our distances of incidence ("B," Fig. 1), and our E.F., because we would alter the distance between the convex surfaces of the lenses.
> Again, we will assume that our plano-convex lens is a certain distance from our arc, and in changing to a meniscus we still wish to maintain this distance (here I mean the distance from the arc to the incident plane of lens) we will have to move our lamp forward a distance equal to the differences in the thickness of the body of the two lenses. Now this action would lessen the distance of incidence and alter the result of our combination at the spot.
> Summing up the whole matter, I will say that the comparative relationship between the two combinations is equal, providing the distance of conjugate foci points to convex surfaces of lenses remain the same.
> I do not know whether I have given you the exact information you want; if not, I would be only too glad to go further.

Just now I am head over heels in the last reading of the Handbook proof and cannot give this letter the careful going over it ought to have; moreover, I do not understand this particular thing very well myself. I will therefore refer it to our optical correspondents, asking them to check up Brother Armstrong's statements. Brothers Griffiths, Martin, La Grow, and Deutsch are appointed a special committee to clean Brother Armstrong's condenser clock—if it needs it. Incidentally an article dealing with the same matter has just been received from Neighbor Martin. It will be published later.

An Argument.

Brother John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., proceeds to land on Neighbor Martin of Los Angeles, Cal., as follows:

> Mr. Martin, on page 2175, December 18th issue, says: "The rays of light which actually pass through the film taking their direction from the condenser, cannot have any power to form the picture on the screen, but merely gives a quantity of light which carries no definition from the film, and is not focused at the screen."
> This statement is not true, because the objective lens, if corrected, is capable of focusing or directing any or all rays incident upon any portion of its rear surface from a point on the film to its respective point in the film image, so that our chief concern is to place the condensers so that all rays will enter the objective lens. When we introduce a piece of ground glass back of the aperture, however, we scatter the rays in all directions, so that only a small proportion reach the objective lens, and, as Friend Martin says, we duplicate the conditions of an opaque projector, and get similar results on the screen. The diagram accompanying the article is not correct as showing the conditions where ground glass is actually in use, since from each point of the film the rays would diverge at a very wide angle, instead of a limited angle as shown, therefore, in view of the tremendous waste of light, which would occur through diffusion, I would consider the scheme as being impractical, but, in any event, it is not a difficult matter to try out, and the proof of the pudding is in the eating.
> LATER: Since writing the foregoing I have made some experiments with ground glass and find that the results tally with the foregoing precisely. There is a scattering of the light rays, so that only a very small proportion reach the screen, and in addition to this it breaks up the two sets of rays. The ground glass is radiating rays in all direction, the same as the crater originally did, hence the first surface of the objective is receiving one set of converging rays and one set of diverging rays, the same as does the back condenser, and the result is entirely different in front of the objective lens. With the ground glass the image of the condenser in front of the objective entirely disappears, which is another proof that the image is formed by that set of rays crossing at the back-surface of the condenser.

So far as the statement Brother Griffiths quotes from Friend Martin's article is concerned, I cannot see but that Martin is correct, and Griffiths is wrong in saying it is not true. Certainly the rays of light which actually pass through the film cannot have any power to form the image on the screen without the aid of an objective, and these rays are not and cannot be focused at the screen.

So far as Brother Griffiths' argument on the ground glass be concerned, I had come to the same conclusion myself. Certainly the ground glass would operate to break up the condenser beam, and diffuse it in all directions, though I did not grasp that important fact at first.

Friend Griffiths has a very excellent grasp on the practical end of the projection optical system—better, I believe, at this time than any other one man in the country. Brother Martin has, however, sent in a series of articles, soon to be published, which, to my mind, proves him to have a most excellent knowledge of certain phases of light action as applied to the projector system, particularly with relation to chromatic and spherical aberration; also he brings in a new factor, namely: anastigmatism, though I am not certain as to how far his ideas along that line apply. You can judge for yourself when the articles are published. Incidentally, Brother Martin has sent in some really magnificent light ray drawings—by far the best work the department has ever received in that line. In fact, two of the drawings were so very beautiful that we have, at the request of Mr. Binder, Executive Secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, presented them to that body for framing and display on the walls of that institution's offices.

Endorses the Handbook.

Local Union No. 626, Nashville, Tennessee, sends in a list of its newly elected officers, which will appear in the official roster, and says:

> Please advise me as to when I may secure the Handbook. The Union has endorsed it as the official text book.

Can't tell you yet, but I think we are entirely safe in saying not later than March 1—maybe sooner. It is all in type now, but the ways of the printer and binder are devious, and we can but wait.

Addresses of Traveling Exhibitors.

H. P. McElrath & Company, Benton, Kentucky, wants the addresses of a few men who are presenting open air picture shows traveling in southern territory. Will anyone who knows the addresses of such men kindly send them to the above firm at their earliest convenience.

Aldermanic "Wisdom."

Recently, as set forth in the department, the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity of New York City introduced into the Board of Aldermen an ordinance which proposed to charge a fee of $2.50 for examination, and a further fee of $2.50 if license be issued, with an annual renewal fee of $1.00.

This department firmly believes that the entire cost of examination should be borne by the incompetent. It believes that if a man can prove his ability, and therefore his right to work, no charge should be made for permitting him to do so; this on the broad ground that the competent man has the right, which cannot justly be denied him, to pursue his calling in life, nor has society the right to compel him to pay for the privilege of so doing.

The ordinance was submitted to Local Union No. 306, and by that body was approved. It was also presented to this department, and though not entirely what we could have wished it to have been, was nevertheless approved, and the editor was at the open hearing and advocated its passage.

The aldermanic committee which held the open hearing recommended the passage of the ordinance, but the law makers, led, I am told, by Alderman Dowling, throwing aside the judgment of the committee which had conducted the hearing and acquired some degree of information by listening to the arguments of those who favored and opposed the law, promptly proceeded to vote the proposed ordinance down, at the same time informing the representative of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity that if it could be so amended that no fee would be charged against the man who failed to pass, but a fee of $5.00, with $1.00 annual renewal, for license, then it would probably pass. In other words, these highly intelligent (?) law makers insist upon assessing the entire cost of examination upon the COMPETENT man, and allowing the incompetent (who, according to figures of the board, exceed the competent by about ten to one) to consume the time of the board in taking examination after examination until they finally succeed in passing, without paying one cent in fees.

I cannot understand the weird process of reasoning which insists upon letting incompetency go scot free, and taxing competency not only with its own burden, but with that of incompetency also. The right law—the law which would spell common sense, would be one that would charge a fee for examination, with the entire fee refunded if the man proved his competency, but with no refund in event of failure; this on the ground, as before stated, while society has the unquestioned right to protect itself from incompetency, it absolutely has no right to charge the competent man for the privilege of working and, moreover, charge the competent man with the cost of examining the incompetent.

In this connection it might be said that these aldermanic Solomons could have, by passing this law, shut off the continual pouring out of a horde of incompetent school-taught "operators." The aldermen had a chance to do the moving picture industry of New York a splendid service, and fell down flat.

Structural Analysis of the Condenser Beam.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, has sent in a number of articles, and really magnificent drawings, the first of which is herewith submitted.

> In Fig. 1, the crater is shown focussed at the aperture by means of a bi-convex lens. It really makes no difference in the present case whether the condenser lens system is shown single or double.
> The resulting ray system is shown by drawing a great number of lines in order that the figure will represent actual working conditions as near as possible, so that, by sheer force of ink, it becomes evident that the entire beam is composed of an infinite number of intersections.
> Not only do the light rays cross at the rear and front surfaces of the condenser, but they cross in the middle, and in fact at every possible cross-section of the beam. If it were possible to draw an infinite number of light rays, instead of the few shown, the beam would be composed entirely of points of intersection; and the points would be arranged in lines according to the system shown in Fig. 1.
> Now, according to ideas set forth in a previous article by the author, the point O is a front focal point of the condenser, with an imaginary conjugate back focal point at an infinite distance back of the crater. Also, O is a back focal point of the objective with a conjugate focal point at the shutter. Again, P is a front focal point of an imaginary lens at or behind the crater.
>
> Also, P is a back focal point of the equivalent action of the condenser and objective, with a conjugate point in front of the objective, very close to the objective, and possibly between the two factors.
> Again, S is a front focal point of the condenser, with a conjugate point an infinite distance behind the condenser. Also S is a back focal point of the objective, with a conjugate point some distance in front of the shutter.

In this particular article, while Brother Martin is entirely correct in his analysis of the structure of the condenser beam, still if he has any design of applying this argument to the argument advanced by correspondents relative to where the light rays cross, he is to that extent in error, because the former contention on that point dealt with a very different matter. It is a fact that the whole condenser beam is made up of light ray crossing points which are literally numberless. The former argument, however, dealt with the point at which certain rays emanating from the condenser crossed each other, the idea, as understood by myself, being that rays emanating from different portions of the crater must of necessity meet and cross at the first plane of the first lens. That particular thing is, however, largely an academic discussion, which does not amount to very much one way or another. Friend Martin's drawing will, I think, make the actual structure of the condenser light beam plain to the average operator, but he must remember that points A, B, C on the crater are but three of many, many thousands of other similar points, rays from which are acting precisely the same as are the rays from the three points shown. The result of attempting to draw all these rays would simply result in a perfectly black surface, since as the black lines represent rays, and rays in the condenser beam are everywhere.

Distortion, Etc.

M. P. Williams, Attica, Indiana, has a 14 foot drop in 92 feet, presumably in a new house he is building. He wants to know: (a) Would projection at that angle shown be objectionable? (b) Would the distortion be too great? (c) How could the distortion be overcome other than by shaping the opening of the aperture plate? (d) Should you find any radical error in the plan of the house as shown I would appreciate your criticism. Sky-light in the building furnishes a place for the projection room. Could you suggest a better location? I write but seldom, but during the past five years have learned worlds from your department.

(a) Projection at any angle is objectionable, but in this case it would not be highly so. (b) Any distortion is "too great," however I cannot say whether it could be reduced or not in this case without having a drawn-to-scale elevation of the house along its center line. (c) The distortion can only be overcome by placing the projector more central with the screen. Filling the aperture does not affect distortion. It simply overcomes the keystone-shape outline of the picture. (d) As before said I could not criticise without having a scale drawing of the center line elevation; also I could not make any suggestions for change of operating room location without a scale plan. In sending in matters of this kind it is absolutely essential that I have drawn-to-scale elevation along the central line of the house. You have a 27 foot ceiling, and it is quite within the range of possibility that your operating room could be located practically central with the screen without seriously interfering with anything, and that, of course, would give you a very considerably improved projection. However, how can I tell about that when I don't know, for instance, how high the front end of that balcony is from the floor?

From Baltimore.

Baltimore, Maryland, says:

> I have all the projection departments from 1912; cut them out, paste the pages together and punch holes at the top, then put them in a stiff cover like a loose leaf binder. In that form they are as compact as a book. I am a member of local union 181.

And there are a great many who follow a somewhat similar plan in the binding of the department. When properly indexed such a volume forms a work of reference having a large value.

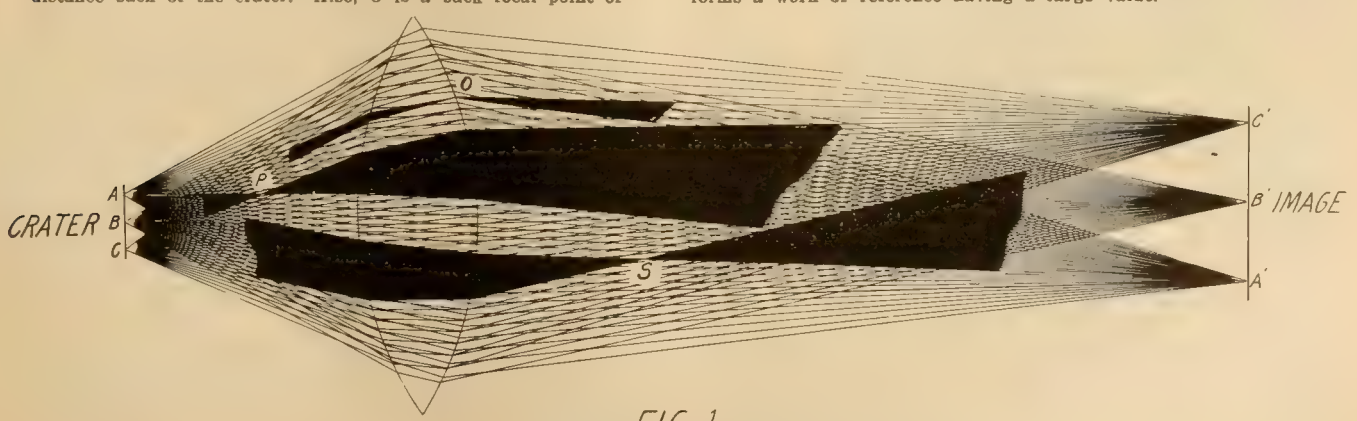

FIG. 1.

Structural Analysis of the Condenser Beam.

Report on Carbons.

G. D. Vandervoort, Milford, New York, writes:

> In December 18th issue you ask data on "Speer" carbons from operators who might be using them. I have been using 9/16 Speer for some time, and find they needle badly with 35 amperes A. C. Perhaps this is due to the fact that they are too small. I then used 5/8 Electra top and 9/16 Speer bottom and got a beautiful light. The Speer carbon is, in my judgment, a trifle too hard. Possibly my opinion won't carry much conviction, as by this time your experiments with these carbons must have proven something that will carry more weight than the opinion of an operator in a one-horse town where if we get into trouble we have to dig down to find it. Have been operator, manager, janitor, bill boy, and in fact the whole thing here. The house seats 200; use Paramount program, and get away with it. Current conditions bad; 25 cycle, 110 volt. By using a three-wing shutter we can get rid of most of the flicker by speeding up, but I don't like that, as things appear unnatural on the screen. Don't like to see people come through a door as though shot from a 16-inch gun.

From all I have learned, I think the Speer carbon is a very good article, but that, ampere for ampere, a little larger diameter is necessary when using the Speer than when using the foreign carbons; in other words, the Speer won't stand overloading. That, however, cannot be called a fault. The reports on the Speer have been for the most part very favorable. You are mistaken, Friend Vandervoort, it does not follow that because a man is in a small town his opinion is of no value. I have often found small town men to possess a remarkable fund of very accurate information. One reason for this is, I think, that he has to study; the small town man is literally compelled to hoe his own row. Another reason is he is shut out from all sources of information except those presumed to be at least fairly reliable. Many a mistake has been perpetuated through city operators meeting and discussing things at film exchanges and elsewhere. They learn many things, which are of service; also they learn many things they would be better off without knowing.

Yes, you are perfectly right in saying 25 cycle, 110 volt current is bad. You ought by all means to have a motor generator for that sort of juice. It is barely possible the needling is partly due to poor contact with carbon arms, though it would, of course, effect all makes of carbon the same.

Oh, Yes, You Can.

W. E. Campbell, Ringling, Oklahoma, says:

> I am projecting a 14-foot picture at 95 feet, with a 6½ e.f. and a 7¼ e.f. (which is supposed to be a 7½) plano condenser. Am using 40 amperes D.C. that I generate myself with a 6 K.W., 110 volt, 50 ampere Fairbanks-Morse dynamo. I cannot line up my system with the table in October 16th issue, owing, I think, to size of aperture of lens barrel, which is 1½ inches. The back focus is 4⅜ inches. Will certainly be glad when the new Handbook is on the market; also wish to express my thanks for help received through the department. I was in the railroad service for a number of years, and still a member of the B. R. T. Expect to join the I. A. T. S. E. in the near future.

In the first place, Brother Campbell, you are wrong when you say you have a "6½ e.f." and a "7½ e.f." condensing lens. A single lens has no e.f. Equivalent focus applies only to a combination of lenses. When you join a 6½ and 7½ you then establish an e.f., which means that the combination of the two lenses is equal to a single lens having the same refractive power as the two together possess. For instance: if the e.f. of your condenser combination is, say, 3½ inches, that means that it is equal to a single lens the focus of which is 3½ inches. No, you cannot line up your lens system with your present objective. As I understand you, when your picture is in sharp focus on the screen it is 4⅜ inches from the back lens of the objective to the film. Three-eighths of an inch equals .375, so that 4⅜ equals 4.375 written decimally, and looking down in the right hand column of Table No. 1, October 16th issue, in the fourth row, we find 4.52, which is near enough to 4.375 for practical purposes, or we can take the one above, 4.29, which is also close enough. In the latter case we find that the smallest permissible lens diameter is 1 13/16, and in the former 1⅞ inches, using two 7½ inch condensers with not less than 22 inches between the apex of the front lens and the film. However, that is the extreme condition, and you cannot get 22 inches between the film and the lens with all projection machines. Looking over in the sixth column from the right we find 4.466 in the twentieth row from the top, and opposite this in the right hand column 2⅛, which gives us a good working condition. In other words, with an objective 2⅛ inches in diameter we can use one 6½ and one 7½ inch condenser, with not less than 17 inches between the apex of the front lens and the film, and that is about the combination you need. By close examination of the table, however, you will find many other combinations, from which you can take your choice, remembering, however, that the closer your condenser is to the film the wider the light beam will be at the point where the shutter cuts it.

Light Trouble.

R. G. Perry, Waverly, New York, has trouble as follows:

> Please tell me what size condensers I ought to use, and what causes my trouble. Machine: American Standard Master Model; 4½ inch lens, 6½ and 7½ inch condensers, the latter in front; 14 foot 4 inch picture at 64 feet. Both new machines. Cannot get a clear picture, particularly on titles. Center is clear, and clean cut, but both sides of the picture is blurred, and the letters look to be shaded. Picture from one machine seems to be better than from the other, though not perfect. Using 110 volts A.C. through a Hallberg economizer. Have always used an Edison, and am quite familiar with same, but this machine was recommended to me, so I bought two motor-driven ones for my new place, which has just opened. The factory sent a man here and he remained two or three hours; said they were O.K. and that the trouble would work out, but it does not get any better. Sent for a new head, which arrived today; put it in, but the picture is just the same. Am using Paramount service, and don't feel the trouble can be in the picture.

No, and I do not think it is in the machine, either. Are you using the same kind of screen you did in the old house, or have you put in a polished aluminum screen? That ought not to set up the trouble you complain of, however, or rather if it did, it should be all over the screen, and not just at the sides. I would recommend that you very carefully examine your objective lenses. The American Standard Master Model is a good projector. Put your picture in exact focus on the screen, and then send me the following measurements. First: exact distance from back lens of objective to film tracks in aperture plate; second: exact diameter of your objective lens opening. I will then tell you what you need in the way of condensers, and what the distance should be from your condensing lens to the film. Meanwhile, as I before said, examine those objectives very carefully, taking them apart, and washing their interior surface with alcohol, polishing them afterwards with an old, clean, dry, soft handkerchief, or a perfectly clean chamois. That is as far as I can go until I have the other data.

Griffiths Corroborated.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, says:

> Have just read, December 18th issue of the department, Brother Griffiths' article entitled "Light Ray Corrections," and the same proved of much interest and profit. I was already quite familiar with Griffiths' theory of the "two sets of rays," but now the whole thing stands out clearer than ever; in fact, his whole system of reasoning is as clear as a bell, and I agree almost wholly with his conclusions.
> Several days ago I sent in some corrections as to Table No. 2, but the fact, as Griffiths explains, that the tables were arranged for the minimum front focal length and the sharp spot, instead of for the true focus, probably accounts for the difference between his figures and mine, as my experiments were made by using the true focus. Doubtless my articles on chromatic and spherical aberration will help out very considerably on this point. Naturally I am very anxious to have his ideas on "high lights and shadows" which he calls "ghosts." I don't quite get his idea as expressed in those terms.

Up to date I have had no reason to doubt the correctness of Brother Griffiths' deductions. In fact, everything so far has tended to corroborate them, and, as already remarked, I am beginning to believe that Table No. 1 is really a wonderfully elastic piece of work.

As to the corrections in Table No. 2, I don't believe I will disturb Griffiths' figures. Any way you put it there is bound to be considerable latitude, and I think he has taken the right course in selecting the sharp spot and minimum front focal length. In fact, as I understand the matter, it would be practically impossible to figure on the true focus unless you could eliminate spherical aberration, which we can do in experiments, but not in actual projection. Will Brother Griffiths kindly favor us with his idea as to "high lights and shadows," or "ghosts"?

Carbons.

G. Sago, Saginaw, Michigan, writes:

> For the benefit of operators, here is a report on National and Speer carbons. Am using 35 amperes through mercury arc rectifier, with ⅝ inch cored above and below. I find that when using National carbons the arc is easily handled, and does not sputter even when the tips are brought quite close together; crater burns evenly; carbons seem quite soft; also powder away, leaving a deposit on the bottom of the lamp house. Spot on cooling plate appears bright in center, with slightly discolored edges. With the Speer carbons the upper and lower both needle slightly, and better results are obtained by carrying a long arc. Notice many small, lengthwise cracks which sometimes cause the crater to be thrown to one side. There is very little deposit in lamp house, and the spot appears very bright, with well defined edges. I trust the foregoing will be accepted in the spirit in which it is written.

Yes, Brother Sago, we are glad to have letters on practical things such as this. I don't think the report requires much comment. So far as the National carbons be concerned, we have had a number of reports in which comment was made on the fact that they had a tendency to disintegrate, or "powder." This is the first time I have ever heard the claim made that cracks running lengthwise of a carbon did any harm. I have always regarded them simply as evidence that the carbons are well and thoroughly baked. If anyone else has experienced this trouble with longitudinal cracks, I would like to hear from them. The reports on Speer carbons are quite favorable. We have some fifty reports to date.

From Buffalo.

Buffalo, New York, says:

> This is my first letter, but I want a little help; also would like to tell you how the "game" is progressing up here by the Big Falls. First as to my trouble: Am working on the west side, in a fairly large house, using a 4½ K.W. Westinghouse generator, projecting with two Simplex machines, using Power Six A lamphouses. When I throw in the juice the armature revolves at normal speed, but can't get the voltage to correspond. All connections seem to be O. K.; also commutator and brushes. It is beyond me. Have spoken to an electrician who tells me it is in the brushes. What is your idea? And now for conditions. The picture business in general seems to be fairly good here. There are about one hundred and twenty houses, and all but a few seem to be getting along very nicely with a handsome weekly profit. In the business section, on Main Street, the largest and best houses are to be found, and projection along the street is excellent. At the Academy, which runs continuous vaudeville and pictures, projection is in charge of L. Maguire, a very competent man. In Keith's Columbia, where General Film first run holds the boards, Art Miller has charge of projection, and that particular article in that particular house is very good. The Hippodrome runs sensational features, catering mostly to the foreign class. Projection is fair. Up the street a little further is the beautiful "Palace," with Triangle features. F. Taylor has charge of projection, which is very good. Next comes the Strand, showing features, the projection of which is high class, thanks to Brother Davison. The Happy Hour is a five-cent house, showing General films. S. Clark puts on the pictures, and does it in excellent shape. Shea's Hippodrome also shows features, with Charles Gail producing the very last word in perfection of projection.

Well, brother, it is a rather difficult thing to diagnose a generator trouble of that kind without being on the spot. First, I would recommend that you take all wire connections apart, examine them carefully, polish with fine sandpaper, and then try the machine. Next take a piece of No. 1 sandpaper and, placing it around the commutator, with the sand side toward the brushes, draw it back and forth several times until you grind off the face of the brushes. It sometimes happens that a brush will collect dirt, which, combined with the paraffine in the brush forms a semi-insulating compound. These two things are the most likely causes of your trouble. You have not really given me a fair show at this thing, because, for one thing you have not even said what kind of a machine it is. A 4½ K. W. Westinghouse generator may mean a generator pulled by a motor, or may mean a converter. I am not quite sure whether the Westinghouse people put out a converter or not. In asking questions of this kind you should be very careful to give all information possible. It is also possible that there is a loose joint in your magnetic circuit. The residual magnetism is O. K. or the armature would not start.

Some two years ago it was my pleasure to be the guest of the Buffalo Operators' Union for a day, and they did the job of entertaining up brown. The boys at that time impressed me as a wide awake bunch, and I am glad to know they are delivering the goods on the screen in the latest most approved fashion. If they care to arrange for a meeting about February first I will be glad to address the organization on projection.

Another Think Coming.

Lowell, Massachusetts, says:

In answer to the letter in December 25th issue, signed by "Hasco," while I have only been operating since 1902, and don't pretend to know as much as some folks, I certainly do know that Friend "Hasco" has another think coming as regards his argument on speed. Most emphatically cameramen do not take all scenes at standard camera speed. "Hasco" says that the cameraman "judges the action of the subject by varying the speed of the camera." Yes, I guess he does, and that is the cause of most of the trouble. For instance: Some time ago, while running a well-known Weekly, I projected one scene at correct speed, the next following being a parade, which the cameraman had so misjudged that I was compelled to hold my fire shutter up with one hand in order to run slowly enough to prevent the marchers from doing a puppet dance, instead of walking as they should. Three scenes thereafter was another parade, and if I had run my projector at correct speed there would have been a funeral march on the screen. Does "Hasco" claim that those cameramen ran their machines according to the action of the subject? Ridiculous! Another instance: In my travel picture last week the first scene was a square in a city in South America. By running the projector at sixty a minute the people would have been almost running, whereas they should have been shown as taking a leisurely stroll. Well, I make no pretence of being an expert on camera operations, but "Hasco" needs considerable schooling as to the needs of speed-governing in practical projection. In closing I wish you a happy and prosperous New Year, and want to place my order for one of the new handbooks.

Comment on this matter would, I think, be superfluous. Lowell is absolutely correct. The position taken by "Hasco" was absurd on the face of it.

Sure You Can.

Bishop and Bishop, Bridgetown, Nova Scotia, say:

We are thinking of putting the moving picture in towns where there are no electric lights, and wondering if a motor car could be fitted up with a dynamo so that it could be stationary in the car all the time, and it would not be necessary to remove the tires to run the dynamo. Can you make a dynamo for that purpose with the equipment for fitting it on the car? Do you think it would be practical, and would it give a good, steady light? Size of picture in some places about 14 feet—this would be the largest. If you could fit up a dynamo and all that goes with it outside the car, kindly let me have your price.

I am not in the supply business, gentlemen. I have nothing to sell except such knowledge as I am possessed of. I don't want to mix my writing with buying and selling of merchandise, because the minute you try that you are more than likely to become biased regarding the goods you deal in. That is only natural.

Yes, it is entirely practical to rig up such an outfit as suggested; in fact, several have done it. I am referring your letter to a large manufacturer, requesting him to take the matter of providing you with the necessary generator up with you direct; also I would suggest that some of our correspondents who are using outfits of this kind communicate directly with Bishop & Bishop, P. O. Box 36, Bridgetown, N. S., giving them such information as would seem to be of value.

Wants to Start Something.

H. H. Momyer, Great Bend, Kansas, says:

Have read your dope on projection with great interest, and now I am anxious to start an argument. Would not a bi-concave lens, placed as shown, be an improvement? As it is impossible to produce a film without some thickness, every ray of light passing through it at an angle tends to diffuse or blur the finer lines of the photograph, just as with the old printing out photograph paper much sharper prints were obtained by direct sunlight than with diffused light. In my judgment this is really the reason why setting the arc back as you do gives better results. It is not so much that more light passes through the film, but that more rays strike the film perpendicular, or nearly perpendicular.

An interesting experiment in this connection is to take a mirror, a sheet of cardboard, and a lens, and arrange as shown. With the same lens you get a better picture than with the condensers. I find that it gives better results than even when the condenser is used to concentrate the beam of sunlight—I mean the quality of the picture.

Well, Brother Momyer, your proposition does not look unreasonable on the face of it, but I am not at all certain just how it would work out in practice. I would like to have the opinion of Brothers Griffiths, Martin, and Armstrong on this particular scheme. For one thing, it strikes me it would be extremely difficult to put into operation by reason of the fact that every varying condition would require a different bi-concave, though, on the other hand, it is possible, always supposing the plan to be really practical, that it would allow us to work with a standard arc position and condenser lens. Well, I will pass this up to the above named brothers, asking them to kindly favor us with the correct dope.

Focal Length.

J. I. Bujan, Jr., Naco, Arizona, says:

Why do they call a stereopticon lens "6 inch e.f.," "12 inch e.f.," etc? I don't understand these terms.

Brother Bujan, why don't you invest in a Handbook and study the technical side of your profession? The third edition will be out within a few weeks, and an investment of a few dollars in this book will enable you to study all these various things, and perfect yourself in the finer points of operating.

"Six inch e.f.," "12 inch e.f.," etc., refers to the equivalent focus of the lens. It means the distance from the screen at which the lens will focus the image of a distant object. Pin a piece of white paper on the wall of a room opposite a window, and, holding your lens in front of it, focus a distant scene on the paper. The distance in inches from the screen to a point half way between the two combinations of the lens, when the image is in sharp focus on the screen, will be the e.f. of the lens. If it be a single lens, then it has no e.f., but only a back focus (b.f), which is found in the same way.

Difficult to Say.

F. J. Campbell, Fairlee, Vermont, orders the question booklets, and says:

Do the booklets give diagrams of proper carbon sets? Can you tell me why the light seems at times to die down soon after starting? Am using 110 volt, 60 cycle A.C., through a Fort Wayne compensarc. After a few seconds it will work all right. One night the arc went out entirely. It began to turn purple, and then went out entirely, whereupon I struck the arc again and it was all right. This theater, the Star, was opened for the first time November 6th. Seats 550, and is equipped with Powers Six machines.

Your data is altogether too insufficient to enable me to answer your question with any degree of accuracy. According to your statements, I should say that just at that time a heavy short circuit occurred somewhere on the lines, which blew a fuse, probably at the power house, but that, of course, is only a guess, and may or may not be correct. Better have the power company hunt the trouble down. No, the booklets do not illustrate carbon sets. You can get that very fully in the Handbook, copy of which I would by all means advise you to invest in. It will be ready in a short while—about 800 pages. Don't know the price yet.

The Free Lance Photographer.

There has never been before in the history of motion pictures so big and broad a field for the free lance photographer as there is at the present time.

The increased output of programs has demanded a greater variety in choice of subjects than ever before. Every distributing company is looking for films that will help their brands to surpass all the others in novelty, attractiveness and popularity.

The picture business is a publishing business just as much as newspapers, books and magazines constitute a publishing business, and while nearly all of them employ their own staff writers, yet many of them depend, as many of the film companies are commencing to do, for much of their most interesting matter upon the free lance.

In the past the continental producers were the leaders in everything cinematographic; gradually they were surpassed in drama and comedy by the American producers, but they retained until the present great war their undoubted superiority in both quantity and quality of their educational and scenic subjects.

On account of a great aversion by the exchanges for anything scenic or educational the producers on this side have never given them adequate consideration, and when they did release any such, they were almost sure to be of inferior quality and little interest.

It requires interest, training, ability and time to make good scenic and educational pictures, and up to very recent times, none of the American producers would put any more of these qualities into an educational than was absolutely necessary to get some kind of a negative. The newest crank turner on the job was generally the man selected to go out and take a scenic, which was generally the most profoundly educational type of picture ever attempted by American manufacturers.

With a large percentage of the better class of film shows today, an educational film is considered an indispensable part of the program.

I wish it were possible for every exhibitor in the United States to see the audience in the Strand theater in New York when an interesting educational picture is being run. I am sure it would be a revelation to a great many of them.

With the advent of the war, we have the usual condition of a greatly stimulated demand and a very much decreased supply. The good houses are finding it difficult to supply themselves with good educational pictures.

That is the chance for the free lance man. What a chance for combining your hobby with a remunerative profession. We may not be big game hunters in Africa like Carl Akeley, Professor Garner, Lady MacKenzie, Paul Rainey, Cherry Kearton, Buffalo Jones, Jane Grey and many others. We may not be Polar explorers like Ponting, Fiala, Kleinschmidt, Mawson and others; but we are all of us interested in something that if pictured in an interesting way will be of interest to others also.

Edward Salisbury spent three years filming the wild game of North America, and is now in Central America with Rex Beach, the celebrated author, at the same kind of work.

China, Japan, India and the Orient have been filmed in a beautiful series by Dr. George A. Dorsey.

In a studio built at his home, Scarsdale, New York, Professor Ditmars, curator of reptiles at the New York Zoological Park, makes natural history studies with his wife as an able assistant. Toying with deadly cobras, tarantulas, Gila monsters, rattlesnakes and other venomous pets, puts the spice of variety into his work that may not appeal to some.

Professor Edward Wright in his home at Flushing, Long Island, introduces us to the many interesting wrigglers and curious plants that thrive in wayside ponds and streams.

George E. Stone, of Berkley, California, hunts grasshoppers and humming birds with a motion camera and telephoto lens and on days when this palls he blithely kinephotomicrographs the festive microcci and the twisty spirillum.

"Vic" Forsythe, cartoonist on the "Evening World," divides the film in his camera between animated cartoons of his comic characters "Axel and Flooey" and his young son.

Get your thinking cap on and consider what is there is natural history, scenic places, natural resources, industries, historical, etc., that has not been filmed yet? You must know of many.

Pyro Developer.

On account of the shortage of metol which has been almost universally used by film concerns for development of films, many manufacturers have reverted to the old drum system of development for their negatives.

On account of the rapid deterioration of pyro and consequent staining after being used for a short time, it is too costly for tank development, which requires many times the quantity of developer necessary for drum development.

Developing drums must be made more impervious to developing and fixing solutions than racks on account of the increased surface for absorption and the relatively small amounts of solution in which they are used. They should be kept well painted with an alkali and acid proof paint, such as Probus, unless they are of brass, in which case they should be run for some time before using in an old hypo bath until they acquire a good plating of silver. In an old hypo bath, brass acquires a plating of silver which is impervious to the action of the ordinary developing chemicals.

Pyro developing bath should be discarded after using once unless it is ascertained that the second drum to be run through it is considerably overexposed, when it may be used a second time to advantage.

Pyro may be mixed in very concentrated solution and kept for days or even a week in a large glass carboy if a layer of thick mineral oil be poured over it to protect it from the oxidizing contact of the atmosphere. A glass syphon tube and a glass funnel, with a long stem both reaching nearly to the bottom of the carboy, are placed through the stopper. The syphon may be kept continually full and ready to run by stretching a short piece of pure gum tubing over the discharge end and constricting it with a strong spring clothes pin. The long glass funnel is necessary to replenish this stock solution without disturbing the protective layer of oil which floats on top of the solution.

A solution of pyro developer may be made so concentrated that one quart of the stock solution may be diluted with twenty times its volume of water for ordinary use.

As pyro gives a much harsher print than a metol-hydroquinone negative of the same apparent visual density it requires considerable experience at first to get a negative that is not too contrasty. It is also hard to judge printing time of a pyro negative by inspection, therefore tests should always be made on the printer before going ahead on the first print.

Three to five gallons of developer in a properly shaped trough with drum development is enough for a two hundred foot drum. Each drum is thus developed in absolutely fresh developer and not, as with tank development, in a constantly deteriorating developer from each successive rack.

A Good Book on Lenses.

How to Choose and Use a Lens—Practical Photography Series No. 3. American Photographic Co., 221 Columbus Avenue, Boston, Mass. Cloth, 50 Cents; Paper, 25 Cents.

Perhaps no other department of photography occasions the beginner more perplexity in decision than the choice of the lens, and no other topic is the occasion of more correspondence indited to the editor, with the exception of the query, "How can I become a cameraman?" and none requires more lengthy replies. The factors are so numerous that it is next to impossible to give comprehensive and adequate information in the pages of an ordinary letter. It is, therefore, that we appreciate the publication of this little work on the subject of the choice and use of the lens, not only as a labor saving to ourselves, a book to which we may, with assurance of the correctness of advice contained therein, recommend to the study of our correspondents, but also as a valuable and trustworthy book of information on all matters relative to the lens in its application to photography.

While not confined to cinematographic lenses, the principles which govern the ordinary still camera lens are practically the same as those which relate to the smaller size motion picture lenses.

Musical Setting for "A Man and His Soul."

(Released by the Metro Pictures Corporation January 31.)

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg by special arrangements with G Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Metro films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "A Man and His Soul" were prepared by the photoplay department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

The story of a young college professor, John, who has a deep conscience. For his theories which they regard as dangerous, the wealthy trustees demand his resignation. After several discouraging attempts at other work he prevents a girl from committing suicide and together they seek positions with the same firm. The junior member of the firm proposes to the girl, and John, believing she has accepted, throws aside all his conscience and begins a fight for wealth. He becomes a power and crushes his former employers by unfair methods. Meanwhile the girl, having refused the marriage proposal, is working in one of John's mills. A fire breaks out and John rescues her. They are reunited and conscience again enters John's soul. The whole character of this picture is dramatic and the music should be subdued at all times.

THE THEME.

By S. M. Berg.

AS THE theme for the Metro release, "The Final Judgment," in which Miss Ethel Barrymore starred, "Elegie" by Massenet was selected. It was suggested to be played at the title "The Men by Whom She Is Loved," the action portraying the actress seated in her boudoir thinking of her three admirers. At the title "Evening" is shown the garden of her Long Island home where A, B and C (her admirers) are visiting. B, the banker, has proposed and been refused, while C is awaiting the opportunity. A, who is the favored one, is debating whether he dare propose in view of his poor financial condition, when she says, "Don't Be Afraid to Ask Me, John." At the title "The Kingdom of the Heart," A and the actress are happily married.

From this point the music must portray a tone of impending disaster. C, the criminal investigator, in jealous pique, has left for Russia to investigate a baffling mystery. So overpowering is his jealousy that he decides to return to America and kill A with a poisonous Oriental incense which he has found to be the solution of the mystery. To the Russian officials he says, "I Am Sorry, But I Have Failed in the Investigation. The Incense is Harmless. I Sail for America Tomorrow." Upon his return he carefully experiments with the poison, meanwhile visiting the happy couple. His plans mature and on A's birthday he sends him an anonymous letter which is impregnated with the poison. B, who is present on the arrival of the letter, opens it at A's request and thereupon meets his death. Owing to a little jealous quarrel, A is accused of B's murder and is tried and convicted.

The actress reads in the newspapers of the death of Kato, C's Japanese valet while he was supposed to be offering up some religious rite to his God. With a woman's intuition she suspects C and sets out to solve the mystery. She visits him under the excuse of loneliness and at an opportune moment searches his laboratory. She discovers some notes of experiments and by wiles and trickery she ultimately secures a confession from him. The picture closes with the title "Her Reward," with husband and wife happily reunited.

The only correct solution of the musical interpretation for a picture of this kind is the completed score. Then the theme could be arranged to portray the impending disaster, the grief of the wife, her utter despair, her resolve to save her husband closing with a maestoso joyous in character when they are reunited.

The productions of the Triangle Film Corporation in the few short months of their inauguration are being played in almost every town and city in America, including Canada and far off Australia. How much of this success, with all credit to their excellent production and acknowledgment of their enormous advertising campaign, can be attributed to the completed musical scores that are prepared for every film? Few realize what an enormous undertaking it is to prepare a musical setting. To assemble a quantity of music and print it with descriptive and sub-titles in the order of its playing is no easy task. But to prepare a score where each scene has its own musical interpreation, to select and rearrange a theme so that it will portray the emotions of joy or sadness, tragedy or disaster, at the story's bidding, is a task requiring thorough musical knowledge and experience. This is what is being accomplished for the Triangle Films and the writer will state, without fear of contradiction, that musical scores have materially helped to place Triangle Films in the high notch of public opinion they are now occupying.

Greater opportunities are opening for musicians than ever was conceived by grand opera, which is limited to the range of human voices or even symphonic performances, owing to the absence of such musical intelligence that enables one to interpret the riot of expression and passions embodied. Just as the great artists interpret the story of the ballet by their dancing so will the motion picture in the near future explain to the masses the beautiful allegories bound in the symphonic poems. The highest conception of musical arts is the symphonic poem, which may be described as a theme elaborated with all the wealth of expression that the composer could conceive. It is only the favored few who have a thorough knowledge of music that have grasped these beautiful allegories. But in the near future it is most certain, from the constant ebb of standards towards the ideal, that motion pictures will portray for the masses the symphonic poem, and all will realize that the fitting accompaniment is the theme with all its variations.

The New Knickerbocker.

By S. M. BERG.

Considerable interest was awakened among managers and musicians associated with the motion picture industry, when it was learned that the Knickerbocker theater was to be closed for a week and reopened under the management of that wizard of presentation, Mr. S. L. Rothapfel. He stated: "In assuming the direction of this theater I will endeavor to give to the Triangle pictures my very best efforts and I will exert everything in my power to make it truly a model moving picture theater;" and the result reflects the greatest of credit upon him. The whole atmosphere of the theater appears to be changed and in fit keeping with the presentation of Triangle films. The place has been redecorated, the booth removed to the uper balcony and a beautiful stage setting representing a garden summer house with latticed roof entwined with flowers and a vista of trees and valleys through the back and sides are pleasing improvements. The screen is lowered and raised as required and a handsome pair of tableaux curtains complete the view. The orchestra pit has been built up and is now on a level with the orchestra floor.

Mr. Hugo Risenfeld wields the baton and there is under his direction an excellent orchestra of four first violins, two second violins, two violas, two cellos, two string basses, flute, two clarinets, oboe, bassoon, two French horns, timpani and drums, piano and harp.

At the opening week Miss Billy Burke was presented in "Peggy." As the curtain rose a voice off stage could be heard singing the incidental theme entitled "Peggy," which was dedicated to Miss Burke, composed by Victor Schertzinger, lyrics by Thomas H. Ince. As the song continued, the singer appeared and at its close the film was projected.

When Peggy decided to go to Scotland and ordered her maid to pack, the picture disappeared, and in the distance was heard the skril of bag-pipes gradually increasing in volume, then dying away. A mixed quartette was then heard singing Scotch airs, and when the picture was again shown at the scene in the Scotch village such a striking atmosphere was created that one almost called for a "wee drappie."

Mr. Rothapfel promises novelties in song and instrumental music at every change of the programme and in the week commencing January 23d, there was presented Alfred de Manby, late baritone of the Royal Opera House, Convent Garden, London, who sang "Tim Rooney's at the Fightin.'" Thornton D. Urquhart (late of the "Naughty Marietta" company) sang "I'm Falling in Love with Someone." Miss Alys Baldwin sang "Love's Own Kiss," assisted by Alfred de Manby. The way in which this last number was presented was another of those Rothapfel flashes of genius.

Mention must also be made of the excellent results that were obtained from the orchestra by Mr. Risenfeld. Such an entertainment as presented at the Knickerbocker theater reflects credit upon every one associated and will materially help to raise to the highest pinnacle of success the whole of the motion picture industry.

Children Are to Have Their Day

The Bunny and Morningside Theaters to Take the Initiative in Responding to an Appeal for the Children.

THE question of the moving picture theater and its moral influence on the child has long been a point at issue. Philanthropists and social workers have struggled with the problem in vain, and only in some communities and cities throughout the country has there been any attempt to set aside a couple of hours during the week when a program suited to the child mind might be exhibited.

Then there was the question of providing the kind of program that children like. It has been discovered that the American child at least is not going to be "bull-dozed" into seeing nothing but the purely educational film. It has been learned that they adore Charlie Chaplin and his competitors, none of whom are always to be relied upon to do exactly the proper thing; and it has therefore been found necessary to sprinkle the children's program with a goodly amount of comedy, when the clean sort is available, and other pictures with wholesome human interest plots, or harmless tales of adventure, etc.

Not until now has any distinct move been made to formulate a co-operative plan wherein exhibitors, manufacturers and exchanges may reap a financial benefit from the provisions of the once-a-week children's program. During the past few weeks a couple of enterprising women, namely, Mrs. Philip Speed, and Mrs. G. A. Dussez have been busy on just such a plan. As a result of their efforts the Bunny theater at Broadway and 145th street, and the Riverside theater at Broadway and 96th street, and possibly other neighborhood theaters throughout the city will give a selected program for children each Saturday morning from 10 to 12, commencing on Lincoln's birthday. Competent chaperons will be provided at these performances, one to every fifty children. The move is a good one and it is anticipated that theaters responding to the call will be taxed to capacity.

To Aid Crippled Children

A Successful Children's Program at the Strand Theater Morning Performance.

ON SATURDAY morning, January 29, a most delightful entertainment was given in the Strand theater. The Mark Strand Theatre Company donated the theater and its entire staff to a benefit performance for the Seaside Home for Crippled Children at Coney Island. Managing Director B. A. Rolfe had arranged a splendid program for children. The program consisted of about eleven reels of pictures, interspersed with musical numbers, which latter were all rendered by volunteers. The pictures consisted of a Pathe colored educational reel, the London Film Company picture, "A Christmas Carol," adapted from Dicken's immortal story; "The Foundling," the splendid Famous Players feature with Mary Pickford for the star, and a comedy produced by the Juvenile Film Company, a new concern which will shortly be heard from and which is under the aegis of Paul Cromelin. The films were all donated for the good cause.

The musical numbers consisted of a piano solo, played in masterly fashion by a tiny Miss of five or six, whose name is Constance Hulsmann; the recitation and dance from "Midsummer Night's Dream" by Sally E. Hamlin (Puck) and Betty Spence (Queen of the Fairies); a violin solo by Master Max Weinberg, "Meditation from Thais," and a finely rendered song, "In the Garden of the Gods," by Master Raymond Abrams. Weinberg, the clever violinist, and Abrams, the singer, are both amateurs and belong to the Strand's efficient corps of ushers. All the musical numbers were generously applauded, but none was received more enthusiastically than that of the dainty Miss Hulsmann, who, despite her extreme youth, carried herself with the grace and dignity of a prima donna.

The performance was keenly enjoyed by the large crowd of children and no doubt yielded a substantial sum for the Seaside Home.

A WELCOME FOR FAIRBANKS.

A miniature Lambs' Gambol was held in Los Angeles last week upon the arrival of Douglas Fairbanks in "the moving picture city" of the coast. The actor, who has just come out there on a long term Triangle contract, was met at the train by an enthusiastic delegation of fellow actors and carried off to a stag party in celebration of the occasion. There is quite a colony of exiled actors at the coast, and it is a great event to get news "right off the Broadway griddle," as it were—especially when it comes through such a proficient cross-continental newsmonger as Douglas Fairbanks. What the actor didn't know he promptly made up in answer to their questions, and, thanks to its being a very hilarious party, no one was any the wiser. Allan Dwan, who is to direct the new Fairbanks production at the Fine Arts studio, and John Emerson, under whose direction "The Lamb" was staged, were both at the party and amply aided and abetted the star's imagination.

SAILS FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

B. F. Clinton, formally with the General Film Company, sailed January 29 on the S.S. "New York" for London en route for Johannesburg, South Africa, where he will have charge of the studios of the African Films Trust, Ltd., with headquarters in Johannesburg. Mr. Clinton was preceded by Lorimer Johnstone who is in charge of productions. Mr. Clinton stated that in a short time the United States will have an entirely new line of films with all the local color of beautiful scenery in and about Johannesburg. Mr. Johnstone has just completed a three months' trip through Africa for the purpose of obtaining locations, and the results should be looked forward to with more than a passing interest, as the African Films Trust, Ltd., will do big things in a big way.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Sol Lesser, the Young Napoleon of Picture Rights.

SOL L. LESSER, owner of the United States rights to Selig's "The Ne'er-Do-Well," accompanied by his family, arrived in the city Tuesday, January 25, and stopped over until the Thursday following, attending to business connected with the big feature, when he departed for New York, where he will make his headquarters until the bookings are completed.

This keen, young business man from the west, who has already shown remarkable ability and foresight in the distributing department of the business, having already established an efficient exchange system on the Pacific coast that has been in successful operation for some time past, is in nowise perturbed over the bigness of the task that now confronts him in the exploitation of "The Ne'er-Do-Well." He undertakes it with just the same poise and assurance that characterized his business methods when he asked Mr. Selig the price for the American rights of the picture and without any quibbling paid it. That the price was $150,000 did not cause him to hesitate, for he had not only seen the picture himself and estimated its value personally, but he had witnessed its remarkably popular run at the Clunie theater, Los Angeles, before he left the coast to make a bid for it. And now in a correspondingly systematic business way he will engage in its demonstration and in the sale of state rights.

In conversation with Mr. Lesser before he left Chicago for New York I learned that on his arrival in the metropolis he will arrange for an indefinite run of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" in one of the large theaters there and that another concurrent run will be made in a first-class theater in Chicago, these runs being made by way of demonstration to show the drawing power of the picture.

In the meantime Mr. Lesser will be ready to place the film for exclusive first-run privileges in any large first-class theatre in the United States on a rental basis for a run of not less than one week and upwards.

If any prospective buyer of state rights wants his territory clean, Mr. Lesser will consider any reasonable offer made in due time.

The Pacific coast territory is now being handled through his own established offices, already referred to.

Mr. Lesser guarantees that "The Ne'er-Do-Well" will have one of the most complete and efficient publicity systems ever prepared for a big feature, one that is in every way worthy of the prominence and artistic standing of the picture. A complete line of printing by the Goes Lithographing Company, of Chicago, has already been printed, and this has been supplemented by original and attractive lobby displays. Advance press matter, with cuts for illustration, has also been prepared.

Mr. Lesser told me that since his purchase of the United States rights of the picture he has been besieged with offers by telegram, by long distance telephone calls and by special and night letters. He has attempted to answer all of them, and if any have not received attention he desires to state that the oversight has not been intentional. He states that he will be ready to do business just as soon as he is settled in his New York office.

He will also open an office in Chicago just as soon as arrangements have been made for the Chicago run of the picture. Then he will be in readiness and fully equipped to handle the surrounding territory and all sections of the country.

While on board the Overland Limited on his way to this city, Mr. Lesser received the following telegram from Eugene Roth, owner of the Portola theater, San Francisco, where "The Ne'er-Do-Well" opened Sunday, January 23, for a run of two weeks: "Matinee topped 'Spoilers' by six dollars. Showed on the first day about same as first day of 'Spoilers.' Public much pleased with picture. Feel confident of successful two weeks' run." Mr. Roth paid $2,000 rental for these two weeks.

Mr. Clunie, of the Clunie theater, Los Angeles, paid $1,000 per week for a two weeks' run, and then held the picture over for an extra week, and since that time has rebooked it for two additional weeks.

Turner & Dahnken, owners of a chain of houses in California, offered $4,000 for the use of the picture on their circuit, which was accepted. In San Diego, Cal., which has a population of 90,000, the Pickwick theater paid $600 for one week.

Chicago Ordinance Passed Permitting Use of Slow-Burning Film in Churches and Schools.

An ordinance providing for the exhibition of moving pictures by non-licensed operators in schools and churches, where non-combustible film is used, has been fought tooth and nail in the Chicago city council for over six months past.

The ordinance was once recommended by the building committee of the council and was returned on the charge that it would create a monopoly for the manufacturer of the film used. That objection was met by the patentee of the film granting his rights to others; but the opposition of union operators led to the placing of the ordinance on file.

A minority of the building committee again recommended its passage, but it was re-referred. Again the same minority brought it back for council action, and on Monday night, January 25, the long-debated ordinance was passed by a vote of 37 to 26.

The ordinance permits the use of portable projection machines in churches and schools, without being placed in regulation booths, on condition that incombustible, or slow-burning, films alone are used.

The Board of Underwriters, after testing the film designated, pronounced it safe, and this had much to do with the passage of the ordinance.

Mayor Wm. Hale Thompson has promised to sign the ordinance, and it will become effective in about three weeks afterwards. Once before the council passed it, but the mayor vetoed it on the ground that labor leaders had not been given sufficient opportunity for a hearing.

Chicago has now followed the example set by New York, Boston and Los Angeles which for some time past have permitted the use of the film in question under conditions similar to those specified in the Chicago ordinance.

Premiere of "The Dumb Girl of Portici" on Sunday, January 30, at the Colonial.

"The Dumb Girl of Portici," with the incomparable Pavlowa, will be given its first presentation at the Colonial theater Sunday evening, January 30. The great artiste herself will be here in the flesh for the occasion, if she is successful in cancelling an engagement at Cleveland, O., for that night, and Chicago's film fans are on the tip-toe of expectancy to see her not only on the screen but in person. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, will also be on hand at the premiere of the big film.

Director Eugene Wayne, of the fine symphonic orchestra of forty pieces which has been engaged for nearly eight months in playing the accompanying music to "The Birth of a Nation," has spent all his spare hours for the past week in rehearsing the specially written score for "The Dumb Girl of Portici." The music is not the original score of Francois Auber but one that has been composed to interpret vividly the filmed opera after a careful study of the production on the screen.

The souvenir program, one of which is before me as I write, is a work of art from the literary, pictorial and typographical points of view. A brief history of Pavlowa's career in America and of her engagement by Universal to appear in the title role is contributed by Carl Laemmle. Then follows a short biographical sketch of the talented directress of the screen production, Lois Weber and a tribute by Phillips Smalley, her husband, who assisted in the production. Next is the cast, which is followed by the story, finely illustrated. An article on "The Greater Pavlowa" by Robert Grau with marginal illustrations showing scenes in the play comes next, and this is succeeded by an article entitled "Pavlowa and the Screen" by H. H. Van Loan, which is also illustrated by interesting scenes from the production. The artistic merits of this program alone give one a foretaste of the beauties and excellence of the big nine-reel production.

Chicago Film Brevities.

E. M. Asher, special representative and publicity promoter of Sol L. Lesser, arrived in the city Saturday, January 22, where he transacted some preliminary work connected with "The Ne'er-Do-Well" before the arrival of Mr. Lesser and his family. Mr. Asher has been connected with Mr. Lesser for the past five years, representing his interests in sales and publicity of the various programs handled by Mr. Lesser in his own established offices. Mr. Asher accompanied Mr. Lesser to New York City, where he will assist in the campaign now begun for "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

Pictures were taken of toboggan slides, fancy skating, hockey matches, curling matches, skiing and snow-shoeing, etc. Indians are shown making moccasins in the village of Lorette. Mrs. Leslie Carter (Mrs. Caroline Payne in private life) was witness in behalf of her son, Leslie Dudley Carter, in Judge John Stelk's court, this city, on January 25. The hearing was on an intervening petition brought by her son to restrain Attorney Daniel Levy from executing an attachment for $6,075 on Mrs. Carter's interests in the "Du Barry" film, in which she played the lead for George Kleine. The young man contends that his mother transferred her interest in the film to him two years ago. Attorney Levy obtained his attachment over a year ago and claims that the amount involved is owed him by Mrs. Carter for legal services. This Mrs. Carter denied, stating that she had made the transfer to her son in consideration for money he had loaned her to exploit the film. The son holds that the film cannot be legally levied upon by Attorney Levy.

Louis Wm. Bass, scenario writer for the Eagle Film Manufacturing & Producing Co., has succeeded Clarence A. Frambers as president of the Photodrama Club of Chicago. Mr. Frambers has joined the western Lubin forces, so that the club will now be under the direct supervision and instruction of Mr. Bass. Mr. Bass tells me that the club has suffered in its membership during the past year by the departure of some of its most successful writers to other cities. Clarence J. Caine and A. W. Thomas were the first to leave, and now they have been followed by Mr. Frambers, who will be sadly missed. Maude Moore-Clement, S. A. Van Petten, Charles J. Buckley and Minnie Strehz are now the only prominent writers left; but Mr. Bass is cheered by the hope that there are several promising newcomers who will soon be heard from. The members of the club wish Mr. Frambers great and continued success with the Lubin Company.

No. 8 of the Selig-Tribune included a feature which marks an unusual use of moving pictures in the apprehension of criminals. This feature was the re-enactment of the robbery of the Thomas Cook & Son Tourist Agency, this city, and the accompanying murder of Policeman Bror Johnson. Through the description furnished by the manager of the Cook Agency, Chief of Police Healy was able to select a photograph from the Rogues' Gallery that fully resembled him. This photograph was one of a criminal by the name of La Trasse. The Selig-Tribune man in charge had La Trasse duplicated as closely as possible both in stature and facial appearance by a capable actor, and the robbery and murder were reproduced as closely as possible. Chief Healy asked the Selig-Tribune to undertake the picture in the hope that it would assist in leading to the capture of the murderer. "Criminals must not get the idea that they can kill policemen and go scot free," said the chief. "For this reason I urge the capture of Johnson's murderer. Every method should be used, and I think the moving picture camera is a huge asset. Not only is the picture valuable from the point of identification, but it will teach the public the hazards that a policeman encounters in the performance of his duties." This release of the Selig-Tribune was made in Chicago Wednesday, January 26, one day before the regular release date. It excited great interest, and wherever the picture was shown crowds were waiting outside for the next showing.

The Chicago city council finance committee directed at a meeting Friday, January 28, that an ordinance be prepared increasing the fee charged for censorship of moving pictures from 50 cents to $1.00 a reel. The aldermen also decided that all exhibitions for censorship purposes should be given in the quarters of the censor board, in the City Hall. The reason for the increase of the censorship charge is owing to the excess of expenditures of the censor board over the revenues, such expenditures having exceeded the revenues by about $9,000 during the past year. It was at first proposed to increase the fee to 75 cents, but the committee finally decided on a $1.00 charge per reel.

Fifteen Reels of Vitagraph

Mixture of Comedy and Drama in Proper Quantities Marks the Releases of the Week of February 7.

FIFTEEN reels of well balanced drama and comedy will be released by the Vitagraph in the week of Monday, February 7. They comprise a five-part Blue Ribbon feature, "The Crown Prince's Double"; a four-part drama, "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel"; a three-part Broadway Star feature, "From Out of the Past," and three one-reelers—"A Cripple Creek Cinderella," "Betty, the Boy and the Bird" and "Freddy's Last Bean."

"The Crown Prince's Double," released on Monday, February 7, features Maurice Costello in a romantic drama that has its climax in his refusal to relinquish the true love of an American girl for a mere kingdom in Europe. He plays the character of the Prince and that of a young American who is hired to assume the Prince's identity. Costello is supported by an all-star cast of Vitagraphers, including Anders Randolf, Thomas Mills, Howard Hall, Anna Laughlin and others. The film was produced under the capable direction of Van Dyke Brooke, written by Gilbert Patten and picturized by Ann Mehring.

Picture fans will find a real thrill in "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel," a four-reel drama written by Archibald Clavering Gunter and produced by Theodore Marston, released on February 7. The 100-foot yacht, "Wayward," formerly the luxurious plaything of a New York millionaire, was blown to pieces in Raritan Bay to furnish a climax for the mystery that the play tells of. Charles Richman and Arline Pretty in the leading roles give their usual splendid performances, assisted by William Dunn, Leo Delaney, Robert Gaillard, Ethel Corcoran and Charles Eldridge.

In a lock reel with this film is a one-part comedy-drama from the coast players of the Vitagraph, entitled "A Cripple Creek Cinderella." William Duncan, Alfred Vosburgh, Carleton Weatherby and others portray the principal roles. The girl in the play is a dance-hall beauty who loses her slipper. That article is found by a miner who uses it to mark a claim with, and when the mine develops a rich lead he determines to wed its owner. He is shocked to find that the girl works in a dance hall, but when she saves his life he decides that she is good enough for him.

Another Monday release is "Betty, the Boy and the Bird," showing Zena Keefe in a splendid comedy by Wilfrid North, produced by Tefft Johnson. Gerald Gordon, a new face among Vitagraphers, makes his bow to the motion picture public.

"Freddy's Last Bean," a one-part comedy produced by Frank Currier, written by Agnes C. Johnston, serves to show William Dangman in a new and successful type. Dangman played Freddie the Ferret in "The Goddess." Freddy, through force of circumstances, is reduced to the last bean of a can which a 'longshoreman heaved at his head. He is saved from starvation by a food expert named McKann, who gives him money for the last food delivery.

An all-star cast of Vitagraphers is seen in the Broadway Star feature, "From Out of the Past," written by Ruth Handforth and produced by William Humphrey. The latter, Belle Bruce, Harry Northrup, Charles Wellesley, Garry McGarry, Bobby Connelly, Carolyn Birch, Eulalie Jensen and Lillian Burns are seen in the film. The story tells of the double life led by a wealthy man and the subsequent meeting of his daughter and a youth believed to be his son. It is released on Saturday, February 12.

Lasky Releases for March

Mae Murray, Fannie Ward and Blanche Sweet to Be Seen in Suitable Productions.

WITH three prominent women stars in the leading roles, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in March will release on the Paramount Program some feature productions of exceptional interest.

The stars and the plays in which they will appear are: Mae Murray, her debut on the screen in Paramount theaters, in a picturization of Mary Johnson's "To Have and to Hold"; Fannie Ward in "For the Defense," and Blanche Sweet in "The Sowers." The first of the three to be released will be Mae Murray in "To Have and to Hold" on March 5. Miss Murray will take the role of Lady Jocelyn Leigh in this production, and Wallace Reid will play Captain Ralph Percy. Others in the cast are Tom Forman, Raymond Hatton, William Bradbury, James Neill, Bob Gray, Lucien Littlefield, Camille Astor and Bob Fleming.

Following her recent sensational success in the Lasky-Paramount photoplay, "The Cheat," Fannie Ward will be seen in another Lasky production, released March 12, entitled "For the Defense." Here again is the happy combination of author and star, as the story of the play is by Hector Turnbull who wrote "The Cheat"; Margaret Turnbull wrote the scenario and Frank Reicher is the director. Miss Ward will have splendid opportunities for her talents in "For the Defense," a stirring modern melodrama.

This is a story essentially written for the screen, and the action occurs at places as widely separated as France, from which a young woman, played by Miss Ward, flees when war is declared, to the far west of America.

The third play of the month will be Blanche Sweet in "The Sowers," a picturization of Henry Seton Merriman's story of the same name.

ARMSTRONG MAKES BOW IN CUB COMEDIES.

In the Cub Comedy release on the Mutual program for February 4, David Horsley introduces a featured comedian new to this brand. The newcomer is Billy Armstrong, recently an associate of Charley Chaplin in his releases with Essanay, and previously a member of Fred Karno's various pantomime companies in England.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G P VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

LOS ANGELES CENSORSHIP FIGHT NEARING END.

Public Welfare Committee of City Council Recommends an Ordinance Abolishing Local and Adopting National Censorship.

THE Los Angeles censorship fight is nearing an end. The campaign here has been hot and heavy. The picture interests have been opposed by crank reformers, church people and civic bodies. What "galled" the picture people more than anything else was the apparent indifference if not say unfriendliness of the commercial interests and administrative powers of the city, which did not seem to appreciate the millions of dollars spent yearly by the industry in Los Angeles. This attitude rapidly changed, when it was hinted that motion picture producers might remove to some other location where the surroundings were more congenial.

With the getting-together of the producers and the formation of the Motion Picture Producers' Association an added impetus was given to the censorship fight. Several meetings were held by the city administration and the local commercial associations to consider the motion picture interests and the censorship question. These meetings the producers attended in force and the outcome has been to great advantage for the motion picture industry.

The censorship question has been a paramount issue with the producers, and to have a meddlesome censorship board in Los Angeles, the very home of the motion picture industry, was to set a bad example for other cities.

The Los Angeles daily papers have taken an active part in the campaign and given considerable space to this burning topic. Especially the Examiner has been a champion for the rights of the picture community and a decided opponent to censorship of any kind. Several excellent editorials on the censorship question have appeared in this paper and one was reproduced in our columns quite recently. Says the Examiner on censorship this week:

> Censorship is still a live issue and will be until the ordinance establishing the board of censorship is repealed and there is the same freedom for pictorial expression on the motion picture film that there is for literature, the press and oral expression.
> Here are two quotations which have a direct bearing on the subject:
> Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.
> Article 1.—*Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or the press.*
> Constitution of the State of California:
> Section 9, Article 1. Every person may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press.
> That these guarantees are applicable to the drama, spoken, pantomimic, or pictorial, cannot be doubted by anyone of common sense. Freedom of EXPRESSION was in the minds of the authors of the federal and state constitutions, and moving pictures are a FORM OF EXPRESSION.
> If judicial decisions do not so codify public opinion, it is merely because the modern innovation of moving pictures has never been brought to judgment.
> Censorship in California is doubly unconstitutional.

That the press is taking considerable interest in the question of censorship is not surprising when we consider the close relation of the story told in pictures to the story told in print. From pictorial expression to printed expression is not such a long step. What is a danger to one might become a danger to the other if crank reformers and "would-be" legislators get the upper hand.

The campaign of the picture and the press against local censorship culminated this week in a meeting held Tuesday afternoon, January 24, at the City Hall, where representatives of the city, its various bodies and organizations, met the picture people for what we hope may prove to be a final hearing.

As a result of this conference the Public Welfare Committee of the City Council decided to recommend an ordinance for abolition of the local censor board and instead adopting the rulings of the National Board. It therefore recommends the appointment of a single commissioner, whose duties shall be to see that the eliminations recommended by the National Board are made and that no pictures except those passed by the National Board of Censors shall be exhibited in the city of Los Angeles. Current news pictures, however, will be exempted where they are presented for exhibition before the National Board has an opportunity to view them.

Under this arrangement, the authority of the police to suppress anything immoral will be the same as that power is with reference to the spoken drama.

The Public Welfare Committee will recommend that a salary be provided the commissioner that will insure the services of a competent man who is fully qualified for the place.

The report of the Welfare Committee has been referred by the council to the city attorney with instructions to draft the necessary ordinance.

Councilmen Wheeler and Betkouski made a strong fight against this action, and on the question of reference to the city attorney they were supported by the vote of Councilman Roberts.

Mr. Wheeler declared that he was surprised that Mrs. Lindsey, chairman of the Public Welfare Committee, should bring in such a recommendation in the face of a statement on the part of the city attorney that the action proposed was clearly illegal. He called attention to the provision that all pictures must have the approval of the National Board of Censors, characterizing it as so absurd that he was amazed that it should be given a moment's consideration. Many of the moving picture men, he said, were not affiliated with the national association, and the adoption of such an ordinance, he said, would merely tend to create a monopoly.

Councilwoman Lindsey and Councilmen Conwell and Topham strongly defended the recommendations, stating that one of the purposes was to shut out the "wildcat" pictures and that the plan proposed was similar to the one adopted by several of the large cities in the country.

The discussion at times bordered on the personal, as for instance, when Mrs. Lindsey called attention to the fact that Mr. Wheeler was violating one of his own New Year resolutions in that he was playing to the galleries, to which Mr. Wheeler made the warm retort that at least he "was not pandering to the baser elements of society and providing them with an opportunity to make money."

Councilman Wright said he was so tired of the present system of moving picture censorship in this city that he was ready to vote for almost anything. "We will get along better without any censorship at all," he said. Mr. Wright contended that the recommendation should be sent to the city attorney to see if an ordinance along these lines could not be drafted and he would undoubtedly report to the council as to whether this could be done or not.

The committee declared its belief that censorship of the national board is just and reasonable, and that the instinct of self-preservation will prohibit the showing of any picture that runs counter to public opinion.

Among those who appeared before the Council Committee were: E. G. Judah, president-elect of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association; Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman"; Frank A. Garbutt, L. M. John, Attorney Ray Nimmo for the Universal Film Mfg. Company; Mrs. Samuel Clover, of the Los Angeles Drama League; David Horsley, J. H. Pieper, of the Los Angeles Ad Club; J. A. Quinn, Mrs. E. K. Foster, City Mother; Mrs. Aletha Gilbert, L. M. Johnson, Mrs. Martha B. Law, of the W. C. T. U., and Mrs. E. R. Brainerd of the Woman's City Club.

In presenting his side of the case, Mr. Judah touched on the business and economic phases of the situation.

In part he said:

"The motion picture industry in Los Angeles is under an enormous expense and this expense is growing all the time. Our organization believes that this industry is worthy of the strongest support we can give it.

"We are especially opposed to the interference of so-called reformers and the local plan of censorship which is harassing the industry to its great detriment and without doing any meritorious service to any one."

Mr. Dixon maintained that common police power is sufficient in any city to prevent the exhibition of any improper picture. His remarks were frequently interrupted by applause.

In part Mr. Dixon said:

"When I was a preacher one of my sermons made such an impression on my audience that I revised it into lecture form. It was not censored as a sermon. It was not censored as a lecture, and I delivered that lecture in every State. Then the lecture was written in book form and it was read all over the world, but the book was not censored. Later the story was dramatized, and played in practically every important city of the country. Even then the spoken drama was not censored. In the course of time I wrote the story and it was reprinted for a motion picture play and I spent at least $75,000 fighting censorship.

"The motion picture industry will assist in seeing that the men who try to circulate obscenity are sent to the penitentiary where they belong just as all citizens should be interested in putting the circulator of obscene literature behind the bars.

"Every movement for federal censorship will fail and all laws for local or state censorship will be wiped off the books, but we want Los Angeles, the home of the motion picture industry, to take the lead in doing away with the useless interference of local censorship."

Fair treatment, Mr. Dixon maintained, would tend to bring to Los Angeles certain studios from New York and Philadelphia. If such a campaign were carried out the speaker said Los Angeles no doubt would have a population of 1,000,000 within five years. If certain eastern studios were brought here the committee was informed that there is no reason why the payroll should not mount to $1,000,000 in Los Angeles a week.

Mrs. Martha W. Laws, president of the W. C. T. U. Federation, disputed Mr. Dixon's position and declared that censorship is necessary to protect the morals of the youth from bad motion pictures.

Councilman Topham asked the producers if the national censor board could not be located here. He was informed that this was impossible because the board must be located close to the financial center.

The following resolution was adopted by the W. C. T. U.:

"Resolved, that we, the W. C. T. U. Federation of Los Angeles express our deep appreciation for the stand taken by members of the Los Angeles censor board, in their endeavor to protect the morals of our community, especially the youth, and declare our sincere desire in favor of the continuation of the city censor board."

Mr. Dixon filed with the committee a petition signed by producers, exchangemen and exhibitors and indorsed by the Chamber of Commerce, Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, and many other civic and commercial bodies asking for the abolition of the motion picture censors and the appointment of a single commissioner who would enforce the rulings of the National Board of Censors.

The Meeting of the Producers.

On Monday night the Motion Picture Producers' Association met at the Alexandria Hotel and outlined a screen campaign to arouse the American public against all forms of film censorship.

A committee of three was appointed to prepare "film editorials" and general protests to be used in the camgaign for the next thirty days. The committee consists of H. O. Davis, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," and David W. Griffith, the producer.

Twenty-five producers, comprising the new organization, signed an agreement to join in the battle for film independence. Incorporation and permanent organization of the association also was completed.

CARL LAEMMLE RETURNS EAST.

Given Jolly Birthday Dinner by H. O. Davis—Entire Producing Staff Present.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., who has spent the past month in Los Angeles, left Tuesday this week for New York. On Wednesday last week a dinner was given in his honor by Vice President and General Manager H. O. Davis, at the Los Angeles Athletic Culb.

It was Mr. Laemmle's birthday, and in addition to the chief of the big "U" organization there were present the directors of the twenty-six producing companies and the head of the various departments of Universal City.

Said Mr. Laemmle at the conclusion of the banquet:

"This has been a jolly dinner. I have been at many a festal board but none at which I enjoyed myself more. I certainly appreciate the compliment of Mr. Davis in making me the guest of honor tonight and I thank him most heartily for the pleasure that has been afforded me. Mr. Davis, in the presence of this large force of directors and heads of departments of the Pacific Coast studios, I want to take occasion personally to thank you for the efforts you have put forth during the past few months at Universal City for the advancement of the interests of our organization. I appreciate all you have done in the short time you have been handling the reins and will be happy to carry the good news back to New York with me."

Vice President Davis in responding to Mr. Laemmle, smilingly wished him "many happy returns of the day" and all the Universal success which he wished himself, and that, he said, undoubtedly was as boundless as the sea.

One of the pleasant surprises of the evening was the singing of several songs most charmingly by Myrtle Stedman, who accompanied Marshall Stedman, manager of production at Universal City. Another was the dancing in costume of eight-year-old Lena Baskette, who soon is to be featured by the Universal Company in several films.

Those present at the dinner were: Carl Laemmle, H. O. Davis, George E. Kann, Charles Rankin, H. H. Barter, Frank D. Ormston, H. R. Hough, Marshall Stedman, John M. Nickolaus, E. G. Patterson, Otis Turner, Allen Curtis, Joseph De Grasse, William C. Dowlan, Francis Ford, Jay Hunt, Jacques Jaccard, Rupert Julian, L. B. Carleton, Robert Leonard, Lynn Reynolds, Phillips Smalley, William Worthington, Richard Stanton, Roy Clements, Henry McRae, E. J. LeSaint, Henry Lehrmann, Abe Stern, Sam Behrendt and M. G. Jones.

LASKY STAR MAROONED.

Last week, with a number of other members of the company and a hundred or more extras, Miss Murray went to Catalina Island to participate in the filming of "To Have and to Hold," in which she is playing the lead.

After passing most of the night, exposed to wind and rain, alone on Church Rock, eight miles from Avalon, Catalina Island, she was rescued the next morning through a heavy sea and taken by power boat and automobile to her residence in Hollywood, where she is gradually recovering from the ill effects of her ordeal.

The affair happened this way. On Saturday, in two vessels, they went to Church Rock. Early in the afternoon the sky began to look like rain, and Director George Melford decided upon a return to Avalon. Those in each vessel thought Miss Murray was in the other and it was not until 8 o'clock that night, some time after their arrival at Avalon, that they learned definitely that she had not left the rock with either party.

Melford and Wallace Reid headed a rescue party in a launch. They reached the vicinity of the rock, but the sea was so heavy they could not make a landing. They beat about the rock for several hours and finally, in a skiff to which one end of the anchor line was attached, they managed to land.

By this time it was raining heavily and they found Miss Murray vainly trying to obtain some shelter from the storm as she crouched by the side of the rock.

She was so cold and wet and exhausted that they found it necessary to lash her to the skiff, which was then pulled to the launch by the anchor rope.

It was 5 o'clock in the morning when she was rescued. Her physician says that she will suffer no very great illness, but will have to rest a week or so.

PATHE NEWS MAN AT FRONT.

J. H. Buffum, Crack Cameraman, Filming Mexican War Scenes.

A card received from J. H. Buffum in El Paso this week tells volumes in a few short words.

"They wished me down here getting war stuff. Very dangerous work. Jumping tonight to the Arizona flood."

The fact is that he has already filmed many various thrilling and exciting scenes along the Mexican border, showing troops patrolling the Rio Grande, on the lookout for Mexican bandit raiding parties and Mexican refugees at Juarez.

United States troops maintain great vigilance along the border not only to stop Mexican bandits from crossing, but to prevent bodies of armed Americans from entering Mexico for the purpose of seeking revenge. The camera man assigned to El Paso filmed Uncle Sam's soldier boys on the job, and also caught on his film the hundreds of Mexicans who fled from El Paso and other American border cities and towns when enraged Americans threatened reprisals against Mexicans for the murders of Americans in Mexico.

We have heard no further, but Buffum must have got some very good scenes of the big flood in Arizona.

REEL AND UNREEL ROBBERY.

Ince's Company Plans Robbery in City Bank and Actual Theft Takes Place Between Scenes.

While the office of the Culver City Commercial and Savings Bank in Culver City was hung with light reflectors and equipped with two cameras ready for the filming of a "bank robbery" after the lunch hour, a pale-faced boy who had been a hanger-on at the preparations returned to the bank alone, and held up the cashier, George McHugh, with a revolver, locked him in the vault, looted the coin cabinet of $600, and escaped.

In the forenoon a company under the direction of Charles Swickard had asked to use the bank. The idle of the town loafed in front of the place, watching the preparations. Among them was the boy, about twenty-two years old, five feet six inches tall, blonde, smooth shaven, weighing one hundred and thirty pounds, with slender and peaked face and wearing an olive fedora hat, a dark tan cravenette overcoat and new black shoes.

As the lunch hour approached Mr. Swickard and his camera man, C. Devinne, returned to the studio. They had just gone and Cashier McHugh was at work on his books, when he heard the door open. He started toward the window and looked into the unmasked face of the boy, who had a blue-barreled revolver leveled for action.

Without a tremor of speech or flutter of the fingers he said, "Hold up your hands, cashier, and be quick about it—this isn't any movie either."

Well, the boy got the money and made good his escape after locking the cashier in the vault.

And soon came the moving picture men, ready to start turning the wise old cameras that had looked unseeing upon the extreme expression of banditry, while the room was flooded with light ready for fiction to begin its glib tale.

FORTY-THREE ACRES FOR INCITY.

According to plans now being entertained by Thomas H. Ince and his staff, it is likely that two or three more stages will be built on the newly acquired tract of thirty-one acres. Should these plans be carried the company will have eleven stages at its disposal.

Negotiations for the purchase of this property have been under way for several months and with their termination a corps of more than a hundred men immediately were put to work, preparing the land for building activities.

The new tract will be used almost exclusively for the erection of particularly large exterior settings, such as streets, office buildings, churches and the like. Level in character, it offers unrivaled facilities for this kind of work, which was in a large measure hindered at Inceville because of the mountainous surface of the land.

Coupled with the disclosure of the deal, two other important announcements also were made, affecting the problem of transportation. The Harry H. Culver Company, which is responsible for the rapid growth of Culver City, has agreed to open a sixty foot street between Washington Boulevard and the car line, thus creating a new and convenient boundary line for the north side of the plant. On this boulevard the railway company will construct tracks, in order that cars from either Los Angeles or the beaches may be switched direct to the entrance of the studios.

Now that production of pictures is in full swing, work has commenced on the construction of twenty other structures that will be included in the group on the twelve acre tract. These are the carpenter shop, garage, receiving room, projecting room, cutting room, commissary, heating plant, directors' headquarters, factory, hot house, natatorium, stars' dressing apartments and the four stages.

Work on the construction of the pretentious administration building, is progressing favorably and the structure should be ready for occupancy within another month. The buildings now complete and in use are four stages, scene dock, wardrobe, dressing room, property buildings and the vault.

What are expected to prove two of the most unusual structures now in course of erection are the hothouse and the natatorium. The hothouse will be employed for the protection of plants and trees so frequently seen in the pretentious Ince society dramas, while the natatorium will serve for scenes requiring miniature coast cities, ocean settings, etc. The tank will have a capacity of one hundred and four thousand gallons.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

R. E. Barron, who for some time past has been outside salesman for the local Fox Exchange, has been promoted. Mr. Barron left Los Angeles this week to take charge of the New Orleans exchange, where he will act as manager. He left hurriedly, having received a wire from Winfield R. Sheehan, Fox's general manager, to hurry to New Orleans.

Tally's theater, one of the most popular broadway houses, last week treated its patrons to a six reel feature free of charge. On Friday evening just before the regular projection of "The Great Divide," Mr. Tally flashed a slide inviting every patron to remain seated after the show and witness the preview of "The Beloved Vagabond," Pathe's wonderful hand-colored master picture. Then after the regular show was over he projected a slide, "Keep seated and see this picture the treat is on us this time," which caused great merriment and applause.

Mr. Tally says the news spread like wildfire and that the same night the following week people were turned away from the doors, and he said he thought it was because those that had seen the preview, thought it was a regular event and had told their friends and had come on the same night the following week expecting to see another show gratis.

G. A. Metcalfe, of the firm that bears his name, was a visitor in Los Angeles this week. He came down South to look after the new store which has just been established here under the management of J. A. Slipper. Mr. Metcalfe reports business has been very good both in this office and the San Francisco one, and says he expects the same from the new Seattle branch.

At the Universal Lynn Reynolds is directing a feature starring Myrtle Gonzales, in which she has to portray a society dope fiend. The story is a very clever one, and is admirably suited to the Reynolds company. This is a good chance for Miss Gonzales to demonstrate her versatile qualities by the transition from a sharp witted moral woman to the eccentric and high tension bearing of the woman who succumbs to the dreaded drug.

Last week at the Universal studio, Mr. Laemmle was standing on the stage when a terrible looking character passed by. Mr. Laemmle stared at the player whom he did not know, and the player nodded and spoke to Mr. Laemmle. The mysterious man was a terrible crook, a regular "hard guy"—with a bad scar across his cheek and one eye closed and other facial disfigurements. The actor smiled and shook hands with Mr. Laemmle, having to tell his name. It was needless to say that the player was our old friend Sanford Quest, known in private life as Herbert Rawlinson.

It is not often that a photoplayer is arrested, but Miss Gloria Fonda, a well known Universal player, was placed under arrest one evening last week while returning home from the city. The young woman was driving her big machine, when rounding a curve she was suddenly confronted by the flashing headlights of another machine, and two men in the road were hailing her. As it was getting late and she was alone she thought it best to keep going because the two men apparently did not have a broken machine, but wanted her to stop. She thought they might be hold-ups, so she sped past the car and they yelled at her. She hastened the car's speed and in a short time heard the other car approaching. It drew up alongside of her and a man yelled "stop that car." She obeyed and soon at the side of the road a big burly deputy asked her why she did not stop down the road when they yelled at her. She explained and then they told her that they were on the lookout for a stolen automobile. They apologized and Miss Fonda drove away.

The battle between Eddie Foy and Mack Sennett has been patched up for good. The fight grew out of the request that Foy and limburger cheese, it is said, should mix for the films, but that's where the shoe pinched. As a result the suit started by the comedian against the film company for one week's salary will be dismissed, it was announced by one of Fox's attorneys.

In spite of the weather, James Davis completed a two reel story for "The Hazards of Helen" series for Kalem on schedule time. Many good scenes were filmed after the heavy rains of the floods and breakage which fitted into a story in making admirably. What might have furnished a greater thrill than intended was narrowly averted. To get a scene of Miss Gibson jumping from an engine on a bridge crossing a raging stream an engine was taken over a trestle, the jump was made, and the players were about to leave the location for other scenes, when the trestle that had carried the engine across the stream but ten minutes before was swept into the water. The camera caught the wreck, and the scene will be used in the picture.

William Beaudine has completed a one reel comedy featuring Ethel Teare with Jack McDermott and Victor Rottman in the cast. Miss Teare drives a big racer in two of the scenes. She drives the big car in the first one like a Barney Oldfield, but in the second scene she succeeded only in stopping the car after it had backed up on a neighboring lawn. The machine used was a 100-horsepower monster, and Miss Teare did well to even attempt driving it.

The "Ham Comedies" Company is producing a war burlesque comedy, burlesquing a very amiable war. The story was written by Lloyd Hamilton and Bud Duncan, and will amuse rather than offend any whose interest may be centered on the present European conflict. Ham is a general, and Bud also one, and the maneuvers they put their "armies" through form the nucleus for particularly funny situations. "Ham" will make an aeroplane ascension, taking the reluctant Bud with him, and the war ends when the two generals return to earth from the clouds, anxious for peace at all costs. Norma Nicholls, whose work in "The Ne'er Do Well" will be remembered, is playing opposite "Ham" in the production.

James Horne is now producing the fourth episode of Kalem's new series "The Love Pirates," by George Bronson Howard. A large stage has been built at the Glendale studios to accommodate the elaborate sets being built for the production of this series. Mr. Horne and his company leave soon for San Francisco and Portland, to film scenes on the boat en route and locations in and around Portland. Paul Hurst, technical director for Kalem Company, who is responsible for the high standard of artistic settings used in the past series produced by the company, has designed interiors to represent scenes made aboard ship. There will be an elaborate ballroom set and cabin for the fifth episode and special mechanical devices are being installed to give the affect of a storm at sea.

Members of the Static Club of America are planning for a number of novelty events at their third anual ball to be held in Rutherford's Hall, 1024 South Grand avenue, on Friday evening, January 28. Anna Held and Thomas H. Ince will lead the grand march, and many film celebrities and players will join with the cameramen in the annual event.

Ralph G. Rosher and Harry Gersted are on the ball committee, with Ralph Merollo acting as chairman, and more than five hundred invitations have been accepted by players at the various studios.

The citizens of Santa Cruz turned their little burg over to Cecil B. de Mille and his company, when they were there last week to film scenes for "The Lonesome Pine," the Lasky production, from John Fox, Jr.'s, popular story. Entertainments were given every night in their honor, and the Chamber of Commerce offered to build a studio for the Lasky Company, complete in every detail, if they would only move there.

Fight and a fall into the ocean nearly ended in the death of Harry De Vere of the Morosco Photoplay Co., Saturday, last week, when scenes in "The Code of Marcia Gray" were being filmed at San Pedro. Harry DeVere and Howard Davies pulled off a film fight on the pier, ending in a splash into the ocean. DeVere can swim; Davies can't. But DeVere's heart went back on him at the last moment and so it was Davies who had to hold up the other in the water with one hand, while his other arm clasped a pile until boats came to the actor's aid.

The Universal Film Company purchased two big auto busses this week. These busses, which have a seating capacity of sixteen persons, are to be used for auto service between the studios and Hollywood at night, when there are companies working at the new electric light studios. They will run from six in the afternoon until one o'clock in the morning. Tickets for rides will be given out by the employment department to those players whose work extends into the night hours.

A school with a teacher, supplied by the Board of Education, has been established at Universal City. Miss Hazel Hunt has been employed to attend to the education of the youngsters, and a school room has been fitted out with blackboards and other necessary implements. Every child at work at the U studios of school age is enrolled for attendance and each has been examined and placed in the class to which he belongs.

Ben Corday, tallest man in this vicinity, has been added to the Rolin family of "queer ones," and is bound to make a pleasing member of the Phunphilms family. It is said that he can without assistance look over Harold Lloyd's head with Lloyd standing on Harry Pollard's shoulders. At any rate Big Ben is some tall and coupled to his length is his marked ability for good falls. He makes a good addition to the Rolin forces.

HORKHEIMER PLAYS ATTORNEY.

Gets Into Court to Defend Friend, and Poor Unfortunate Wins His Help.

We were unaware that the well known H. M. Horkheimer, head of the Balboa Company, was a gifted lawyer, but he is.

That the law lost a promising possibility when "H. M." identified himself with the amusement world was evidenced in Judge Underwood's court. He had gone there in the interest of a friend who had been taken on a speeding charge, and as he entered the court the case of a man who had been arrested on a charge of issuing a fictitious check was called. Unable to employ counsel the man threw himself upon the mercy of the court.

Knowing Mr. Horkheimer's benevolent nature, the judge told him the circumstances of the case and requested that he take charge of the defense of the prisoner. Although very busy, the motion picture producer was touched by the man's plight and agreed to assist him. As the trial proceeded, Mr. Horkheimer gained an advantage over the prosecuting witness. When he outlined his defense, the state's attorney moved to dismiss the case.

The court acceded to the motion on account of the logical way in which the defence was made. Mr. Horkheimer showed that his client had never been involved in a case of the kind before. Due to sickness in his family and the lack of facilities to provide for his loved ones, he drew a bad check on a bank where he had a small balance, without realizing the seriousness of the offense. To prevent the man from being sent to prison, Mr. Horkheimer personally redeemed the bad check, and gave him employment, in this way helping him on his feet again.

In dismissing the case, Judge Underwood not only commended Mr. Horkheimer for the manner in which he had handled the case, but also drew special attention to his humane character in coming to the rescue of one of his fellows who was on the downward path.

ANNUAL SNAKE YARN.

Every spring we present a reptile story. Last year the Lasky studio stampeded when a box of snakes arrived and became accidentally opened. The year before the—but for the spring of 1916 yarn—It "happened" as Doris Schroeder of the Hollywood Vitagraph says—on the lot at the new studio.

As you all know, warm weather and little blades of green glass denote spring. It's here now. This same spring is also denoted by several other little things. This was responsible for a rather exciting incident at the Vitagraph studios. The property is extensive and there are places on it that still retain a "wild and wooly" appearance in spite of the new buildings erected. Director Wolbert was staging a big "Bohemian Club" scene on one part of the great stage and Producer Sturgeon was engaged with a double-dozen of "free-traders" and "whiskey runners" at another. Suddenly from the direction of the Wolbert set came loud shrieks and a scurry to get on chairs and tables—the elaborately set tables were soon covered with ladies in evening dress, frantically staring at the floor—and young men sad to say just as scared as the ladies, endeavoring to persuade them out of their panic but at the same time climbing to the safety of the chairs themselves. Director Wolbert, tearing his hair looked for the cause of the excitement and discovered almost at his heels, a pretty little family of snakes, Mamma Snake, Papa Snake, and some cute wriggly little snakelets—out for a sunning on the stage.

Exit Director Wolbert gracefully.

By this time the alarm had been given to the wicked whiskey runners at the other side—and they stampeded—in spite of their formidable appearance. A brave property man, carefully following Mr. Sturgeon's orders, captured the happy family and consigned them to a box. Inspection by the combined forces, disclosed their identity as harmless gopher snakes, after which everyone went back to work. And the edict has gone forth that the "untamed" places on the property are to be visited by an investigating committee in the very near future.

Scene from "The Perilous Swing" (Kalem).

Bruce McRae

BRUCE McRAE, the noted Broadway leading man and recent star of several of the past season's successes, replaced Emmet Corrigan as principal player in the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation's production of Richard Le Gallienne's "The Chain Invisible," which is now in the course of construction at a small town twenty miles inland from Havana, Cuba. Mr. McRae assumed the role in "The Chain Invisible" upon an hour's notice, he having been informed at noon that he must sail for Cuba at 2 o'clock the same day. Hurriedly packing, arranging his letters of credit and the required wardrobe, of which he has a score of trunks full, Mr. McRae made the steamer, just as the gangplank was being drawn aboard.

Bruce McRae.

Bruce McRae, an Englishman by birth, and nephew of Sir Charles Wyndham, was born at Bombay, India, and was educated at Boulogne sur Mer, France. He made his first professional appearance in 1891 in "Thermidor." From that year until 1912 he appeared in over two hundred different stage productions, gradually ascending from obscure roles to the leading or star parts. The most important of his many stage roles were in such plays as "Aristocracy," "Shenandoah," "The Fatal Card," "Camille," with Olga Nethersole, "A Coat of Many Colors," "Moth and the Flame," "Sherlock Holmes," "Barbara Freitchie," "The Country Mouse," and "Carrots," with Ethel Barrymore, was under the management of David Belasco in "The Lily," and with Charles Frohman in "The Commanding Officer," and "Alice Sit by the Fire."

During the past three years Mr. McRae played in "Nearly a Husband," "Years of Discretion," and "The Right to be Happy."

In "The Chain Invisible" Mr. McRae will handle the most difficult role ever given a motion picture actor. Le Gallienne and Roy McCardell are responsible for the scenario, while Frank Powell, one of the most exacting of directors, is in charge of production.

ANOTHER SOLAR SCREEN PATENT VICTORY.

Judge Mayer of the United States District Court for the Southern jurisdiction of New York, Thursday, Jan. 27, granted an order for a permanent injunction to A. H. Simpson, Inc., on that company's patent for metallic surfaced motion picture screens against the Vitalite screen, made by the J. P. Payor Company. This is the last of several similar injunctions that have been granted the Simpson Company against infringers of the Solar Screen patents. Other suits are pending and proceedings will be instituted against any who attempt to put out a metallic surfaced screen.

Metro Opposed to Censorship

Did Not Favor Hughes Bill and Is Against the Federal Brand of Supervision.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation is not and never has been for Federal Censorship of motion pictures. It's position is exactly what it always has been and Metro resents any suggestion that it has made a change of front in the censorship fight.

This, in brief, is the announcement made at the office of the Metro Pictures Corporation in the Longacre Building, following publication in several of the trade papers devoted to the industry, that Metro had broken away from its associates in the censorship fight. Metro's full statement is as follows:

"On Tuesday of last week Mr. Hodkinson, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, requested that Metro give a written statement of its view on the matter of Federal Censorship and Metro readily responded with the following, which, it was understood, was to be taken by Mr. Hodkinson with him to Washington:

We have been opposed to the spirit and essence of censorship because it places on the few the responsibility of judging for the many, because censorship is often construed as an invitation to censoriousness and because in operation it bears fruit in rulings that are hampering, petty and needless. Such a condition makes against progress in any art.

On the other hand, we welcome regulation, not censorship, that will protect the producer of clean and entertaining pictures from the competition of salacious pictures.

In our opinion such regulation should in plan and operation be broad, sypathetic and designed solely for the protection of the public and the manufacturer against pictures that are indecent, obscene or inciting to crime.

The regulation should be free from the influence of the professionally virtuous, free from the whims of politics and operative in so hard-headed and sensible a manner as to solve the problem for the entire country.

We hope that this makes our position clear on the subject.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION,
Richard A. Rowland, President.

Metro definitely stated that it was not for censorship, but that it did favor federal regulation and this view is in full record with the position taken by the Board of Trade and other opponents of the Hughes bill.

Apparently Metro's very definite letter was misconstrued because in the published reports Metro was lined up with those favoring Federal Censorship. This was diametrically opposite to Metro's position, as is shown by the following letter written by Mr. W. W. Hodkinson in answer to a request to sign a statement addressed to Chairman Hughes of the Committee on Education, which statement favored Federal Censorship:

Confirming our telephone conversation of this afternoon, we beg to advise, that after a careful reading of the letter addressed to the Hon. D. M. Hughes, Chairman of the Committee on Education, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., we find ourselves opposed to its contents and therefore unable to sign it.

Metro Pictures Corporation stands by its previous expression in favor of regulation, not censorship, and believes the proposed amendment to the penal code, which includes motion pictures in the same class with and amenable to the laws governing magazines and newspapers, fully solves the problem nationally.

Metro Pictures Corporation regrets that it is forced to differ with the point of view of Paramount Pictures Corporation in this matter, but it cannot undertake to assume responsibility against its convictions in a matter of such vital importance to the welfare of the motion picture industry.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION.
Richard A. Rowland, President.

Metro's attitude has been so firmly against the idea of Federal Censorship that it is making these letters public in justice to itself and its associates in the film industry.

EDWIN MIDDLETON DIRECTING "THE SORCERESS."

The first Mutual Masterpicture Edwin Middleton will direct for the Gaumont company at Jacksonville, Fla., is "The Sorceress," a five-reel feature from the pen of O. A. Nelson, Mr. Nelson is the author of many popular Gaumont successes, including two of the favorite photodramas, which are now on the screen, "The Ace of Death" and "As a Woman Sows." Mr. Middleton has been directing at the Flushing studios of the Gaumont company, but he will spend the rest of the season at the Jacksonville headquarters.

C. M. WHITE IN CHARGE.

While F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont company, is spending several weeks at the winter studios, Jacksonville, Fla., the main plant at Flushing, N. Y., is in charge of his assistant, C. M. White. In addition to directing the customary activities of the Flushing organization, Mr. White is also making the preliminary arrangements for the large building operations which will result in a new studio by the time the Gaumont companies come north in the spring.

Triangle's February Releases

Billie Burke, DeWolf Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks, Bessie Barriscale, Lewis S. Stone, William S. Hart, Lillian Gish and Orrin Johnson Featured.

EIGHT unusual Griffith and Ince dramatic features together with the usual quota of Keystone comedies from the Mack Sennett studios are announced by the Triangle Film Corporation for release to exhibitors during the month of February. Of prime importance are the general film debuts of Billie Burke and De Wolf Hopper. Both stars have been shown in New York and "Don Quixote" and "Peggy" have received metropolitan approval. Douglas Fairbanks is due for his third Triangle release. Also in prospect is the first screen appearance of William Collier.

For the week of February 6th "Acquitted" with Wilfred Lucas, and Orrin Johnson in "D'Artagnan," a film adaptation of "The Three Musketeers" of Dumas, will be released. Griffith has provided a typical Fine Arts cast in support of Lucas, who in "Acquitted" is rewarded for his good work with Lillian Gish and Rozsika Dolly in "The Lily and the Rose" and with Marie Doro in "The Wood Nymph" by big type honors. "D'Artagnan" is proof of the belief of Ince that the country will welcome a revival of the good old swashbuckling drama of the days when knights were bold.

"His Picture in the Papers," the new Fairbanks comedy, and "Honor's Altar" follow. In the latter drama from Inceville Bessie Barriscale and Walter Edwards are featured with Lewis S. Stone, the well-known leading man of Broadway productions. Fairbanks made "His Picture in the Papers" under the direction of John Emerson in and around New York. It is a comedy from start to finish and shows the young star to be a versatile performer of seemingly impossible stunts.

The week of February 20th brings the long awaited Billie Burke picture, "Peggy." Thomas H. Ince spared no expense to obtain this favorite legitimate star, was extravagant in his staging of the play and assembled an unusually distinguished cast headed by the veteran character actor, William H. Thompson, and including Charles Ray, William Desmond, and Gertrude Claire. The Griffith contribution for that week is Lillian Gish in "Daphne." The French atmosphere of this piece is in marked contrast to the Scotch settings of "Peggy."

Right on the heels of this combination of star features is the general release of De Wolf Hopper in the picture play version of the "Don Quixote" of Cervantes. As Billie Burke is undoubtedly the biggest woman legitimate star snared by the Triangle, so Hopper is the most prominent male player taken from the American stage for film productions. Interest in "Don Quixote" is doubled by the appearance of the big comedian and the first pictorial presentation of the Spanish classic. The popular William S. Hart is joined with Hopper in the closing February releases. A powerful western play called "Hell's Hinges" is the medium in which this favorite actor is presented. Real spectacle is provided by the burning of an entire town. Ince has given his star a well-balanced cast.

EDYTH ROBERTS IN NEW ROLE.

"The Unconventional Girl" is the title of Bob Hill's Imp-Universal latest comedy drama in two reels, with Edyth Roberts playing the leads.

Field for Real Educational Films

Writer in Washington Times Suggests that Courses of Study Should be Illustrated for School Uses.

THERE has been more or less talk of late of the alleged lack of educational pictures and even of biblical productions in the local theaters. The agitators for these are really producing a false demand, for many of the Washington managers who have tried to comply with these limited requests have found that the public demand is for material of a much lighter nature. An occasional topical subject or a scenic is acceptable, but when fed as a steady diet it becomes another proposition. The exhibitors naturally are not in business for their health and must cater to the masses, yet the agitation continues. A merchant might buy a single bill of goods because three or four people asked for them, but he would soon discontinue the line if the merchandise proved unsalable: the exhibitor is much like the merchant and desires to handle only the films which take with all.

"The educational value of film has been only partially developed," says the Washington Times. "A motion picture enthusiast who has given some thought to the subject has recently suggested that great things would be accomplished by pictures in the schools if the educational film was changed from a passive to a positive quantity—meaning that instead of the hit-or-miss system that is now in vogue some regular course of study should be provided.

"It is the educational value of the film that spurred the pioneer inventors to the development of the motion picture camera and the projecting machine. The educational possibilities of the motion picture formed the attraction that drew the mind of Thomas A. Edison to the field. Mr. Edison is a self-educated man. What he knows he learned on his own initiative, and he values observation as an educational factor above everything else. He believed that photography of moving objects, if perfected, would permit the placing of the actual thing to be studied before the scholar. He believed that a motion picture of a State capitol would be a greater lesson to a school room full of children than an entire book of statistics.

"That is one of the reasons he devoted so much of his time to the development of the camera and projecting machine. In Washington, C. Francis Jenkins was kept at his work on projecting problems by the desire of the scientists of the Department of Agriculture to make pictures of growing plants as they grew which could be run off in a few minutes so that the process of growing could be watched.

"Despite the fact that these two pioneers in motion picture development—the two men on whom rests most of the credit for American progress in cinematography—had an educational incentive behind them, very little has been done in utilizing the film for popular educational purposes. Pictures without number of educational subjects have been made, but up to date the United States does not possess a single laboratory where special pictures can be made nor has there been any attempt to do aught but gather special feature pictures of travel or scientific subjects which were shown by themselves and had no relation whatever to each other.

"Courses of study in history, geography, botany, physics, sanitation, public health, elemental geology, or physical geography, zoology, biology, electricity, agriculture, and a host of other subjects might be prepared in a popular way that would make them invaluable in primary schools where more or less unsatisfactory books are now being used. The State of California, the cities of New York, Chicago, Milwaukee and several others, have made appropriations of large sums of money to secure motion pictures for schools, but there is no regular course in any subjects that the schools might purchase. Films that are used must be bought here, there and everywhere and a course of study pieced together. Or the schools must make their own pictures—which is practically prohibitive because of the cost, except in the case of purely local subjects.

"In Europe there are one or two film concerns that maintain elaborate plants for the filming of scientific subjects. There has been no attempt to take any one subject, however, and carry it through a regular course of illustrative study. The idea is, generally, to get simply some interesting feature of animal, or bird, or insect life, and make a picture of from 200 feet to 1,000 feet. Few of them, however, have exceeded 500 feet in length. In this country the Department of Agriculture has made a rather comprehensive set of films on road building and of one or two other branches of the department's activity. These films, however, are not for general circulation and are not being used in primary schools, usually because the picture studies are too far advanced for such use, although the road building films are easily understood and ought to make good film studies.

"The field is open, therefore, for some enterprising film manufacturer who has acquired a fortune which he desires to invest safely. The educational value of the film is only partly realized."

Miller Speaks for Better Scenarios

To the Editor of the Moving Picture World:

In every journal interested in the moving picture industry we read that the crying need of the business is for better scenarios, better stories, and that the manufacturer stands ready to pay handsomely for them, but cannot get them. I am a successful producer of photoplays and find my services in demand by manufacturers, apparently glad to pay me good money to handle their productions. My part of a five-reel feature usually runs up to about $2,000. I have several scenarios, which remain in my desk because they are worth $2,000, and the very men who cheerfully pay me that amount for direction will pay nothing like that amount for what is the more fundamental requirement of their business.

Even adaptations of plays and novels should be far better done than they are. We see splendid material wasted because it was given to unskilled, careless or low-priced writers. Good producers are not necessarily good writers or even good adapters. Recently I saw one of the best handled productions of the month, which failed to hold the people because the really brilliant director had framed his own story and was an illogical and a mediocre writer. Nor are all good writers even capable producers. My idea is that the writers who know the screen game and have the creative gift should be paid as much as the man who, like myself, handle their creations.

I believe we are coming to this point, and perhaps "the wish is father to the thought," for I feel that there is more glory and more genuine satisfaction in being the Hugo, the Dickens, the Barrie or the Jack London of the screen than even the very best producer of their work, and that this work should be at least equally well compensated. I am a producer and fully appreciate the importance of this end of the business, but I am also the writer of more than one "best seller" of the film world. I find myself in the peculiar position of being able to get a lot more money for what I regard as my less important work of the two branches for which I am equipped; I receive more for the production of just an average scenario than for the writing of a really good and original one.

How about this? Let's hear from the manufacturer!

Respectfully,
ASHLEY MILLER.

MANGAN IN CHARGE OF CUMBERLAND.

Francis A. Mangan, lessee and manager of the Crescent theater, 167th street and Boston road, Bronx, New York City, has taken over the Cumberland theater, Cumberland street and Greene avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Mangan was at one time the manager of this house when it was a link in the chain of photoplay houses operated by the Photoplay Theaters Company.

Virginia Norden Now With Vitagraph

VIRGINIA NORDEN, an actress of considerable note on the American stage, has joined the forces of the Vitagraph and will lend her splendid screen personality to the success of that company's films. She is at present working under the direction of Ralph Ince at the Bayshore studio of the Vitagraph and will make her bow to the public in a Blue Ribbon Feature in which Anita Stewart will also appear.

Miss Norden will be remembered by theatregoers as the lead in Elinore Gates' "The Poor Little Rich Girl," which enjoyed a successful Broadway run two seasons ago. She also played in Guy Bolton's "Rule of Three." Although her screen experience is limited she is an actress of marked versatility and under Ralph Ince's guidance she is expected to take a high place among film luminaries.

Virginia Norden.

She is a Washington, D. C., girl, the daughter of Major William N. Dalton and Olivia Williams. Norden is a family name she has adopted for professional use. She was educated in private schools in Washington and has spent some time at a convent. Developing aspirations for a stage career, she was placed in the Empire School of Dramatic Acting in Manhattan, from which she graduated with high honors and was immediately cast in a well known stock company. Here she gained experience that added the finishing touches to her technique.

Interested in motion pictures from their very inception, she waited an opportunity to enlist with the Vitagraph and when the time came recently she was eager to begin her new profession. As a writer of short stories she has already gained quite a reputation and she plans to turn some of her attention to the writing of scripts.

Edward J. Brady

THE work that he has done in Balboa feature films during the past year has earned for Edward J. Brady the reputation of being one of the best "heavy" actors on the screen. In the old melodrama days he would have been able to play up to the contempt of the most exacting "gallery god."

But there is more finesse in the work of Brady than ever a ten-twent'-thirt' heavy displayed. Riding boots, gloves and a cigarette were their earmarks, together with a purring voice. The screen villain of today must be more subtle. He can't string out fine phrases or make the blood run cold with his mocking laugh.

Edward J. Brady.

In flickerland Ed Brady accomplishes all this and more with a cunning manner and an insolent leer. He first attracted attention to himself in the now famous "Who Pays" series, which was produced by Balboa. In this he portrayed a half dozen different villain types, each one of which was distinct.

Then came "Neal of the Navy," in which he played the terrible Hernandez. In this, he out-villained all past villains of the pursuing sort. Though he played an ungrateful role, Brady was generally credited with having made the biggest acting success of any player in this notable Balboa-Pathe release. The convincing note of his work was commented on everywhere.

Off stage, Mr. Brady is anything but a villain. When acting he might be described as a sheep in wolf's clothing, for his personality is mild and winning. There is no more popular member of the Balboa studio force for his social instincts are pronounced. His hobby is a Ford, every little movement of which has a meaning of its own. To hear him descant upon it is verily a rare treat.

"THE GUILT OF STEPHEN ELDRIDGE" (Biograph).

The strong contrast between two unusual female characters furnishes an absorbing human interest in the forthcoming Biograph feature, "The Guilt of Stephen Eldridge." Vera Sisson plays the role of the girl forced into marriage to protect her guilty father. Her prospective husband is in the power of an actress, who threatens to reveal her past relations with him. Gretchen Hartman is superb in the role of Marie D'Allot, the Frenchwoman.

To save himself, the man burglarizes his father's safe and discovers a signed confession which clears the name of his rival's father, long imprisoned for theft. The title role is admirably played by that sincere artist, Charles H. Mailes. Ivan Christy, G. Raymond Nye, Jack Mulhall and Jack Drumeir complete the cast.

Also on the week's program is a well-remembered Griffith production, "His Mother's Son." This will undoubtedly prove to be one of the most popular Biograph Reissues. Mae Marsh, Jenny Lee, Robert Harron, Walter Miller, and the grand old man of the screen, W. Chrystie Miller, form the cast of this appealing little drama, which is enhanced by touches of that gay comedy peculiar to the unfortunate.

PATHE'S "LONESOME LUKE" COMEDIES UNIQUE.

The Rolin Film Co., of Los Angeles, who make the "Lonesome Luke" comedies for Pathe, deserve more than passing notice because of the real and uniform excellence of their product. In Harold Lloyd they have a comedian of the first water and round him they have built a cast that is as able as any in comic-filmdom. It takes something to make a hardened film committee laugh, but when "Lonesome Luke's Double" was projected in the Pathe exhibition room the other day every one in the place was in laughter from start to finish. Harold Lloyd must be made of India rubber. The way he suffers himself to be kicked all over the map, hit on the head with a mallet and fall down a dizzy flight of stairs is marvelous. The "Lonesome Luke" comedies have fought their way to an important place on many exhibitors' programs, and it is because they are unlike anything on the market—they are unique.

OCEAN FILM WORKS COMBINATION POLICY.

The original policy of the Ocean Film Corporation to market its features under franchises to be awarded to independent exchanges covering definite territory upon an advance on account of a percentage, has been in part altered by the directors of the company, the new policy having been determined upon at a meeting held at the company's offices last Wednesday.

The franchise plan takes in the states of New York, New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa and the New England States, and the balance of the country is being disposed of on the states rights plan, being an outright lease on the Ocean Film productions.

The February release of the company, "The Fortunate Youth" by William J. Locke will be succeeded by "Driftwood, or the Wrong Way" in which Vera Michelena is starred, supported by Harry Spingler and Charles Graham.

Producing Forces Getting Together

Equitable Discovers that Better Results Are Obtained When Author and Director Agree.

THE Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, since the beginning of its newer program, is making a mighty effort for local color and the atmospheric detail so beloved by the exhibitor and patron alike. President Spiegel, of the Equitable Company, beginning with the release on December 6th of "The Warning," many of the scenes of which were staged in Luray Caves, Virginia, where the stalactitis and stalagmites added mysterious and sensational effects to the scenes in which Kolker appears as in Hades, has made one consistent and successful effort and maintain local color, detail and the effects procured through staging pictures in the locale called for by the authors.

"Authors, as a rule," said Mr. Spiegel, "know very much better than anyone else what atmosphere and environment they want to surround their plots and characters and we are submitting to responsible authors, the choice of locations. This is resulting in a remarkable improvement in every department of our productional end. C. Haddon Chambers, author of "Passers-By," went all the way to Nassau in the Bahamas to write the scenario for his play and then went into conference with S. E. V. Taylor and the star of the picture as to the most congenial surroundings in which to produce the play, with the result that five master minds were working on one detail, which heretofore was left to the choice of one man alone.

"Frank Powell and Richard La Gallienne concurred with Bruce McRae in choosing Havana and the surrounding Cuban atmosphere and the Caribbean Sea for the staging of "The Chain Invisible" and the company has been there two weeks now. They are taking their time in a harmonious atmosphere, selected by all the participating interests with the result that every foot of finished negative that comes in shows great effort, deep thought and earnest concentration.

"Frank Sheridan, John Ince, Arthur Ashley and Ethel Grey Terry concurred in picking Para, Brazil, as the most suitable spot in which to act and stage "The Struggle." "The Struggle" tells the story of a young doctor who contracts leprosy. We know little of this dreaded pestilence in this country. So, when it was learned that at Para, Brazil, there were large colonies of the poor unfortunates, it was thought atmosphere would be gotten there, while if staged in our own tropics, we would have to depend on what we could read about the terrible disease. Of course the picture has romance and intrigue and the other tangles in it, but the fact that the final reel is composed of an angle that treats on leprosy will more than repay us if we secure the atmosphere without being compelled to resort to morbid details such as we would have had to do had we depended on literature for our detail and atmosphere.

"Marguerite Leslie, Harry Handworth, Roy L. McCardell and Mr. Stoermer all made a trip to Saranac Lake, two weeks before beginning the production of "The Question" and mapped out the precise spots they deemed best for the producing of McCardell's story. The company is now there and are getting such results that we are now more than ever certain we will eventually accomplish with a slightly greater expense what we deemed a most elusive ingredient—perfect atmospheric detail."

Many Sorts of "Bluebirds"

Will have a Variety of Subjects in Schedule of Releases—"Undine" Said to be Interesting.

THE diversity of subjects comprising Bluebird Photoplays is held to be one of the strong points in the program of features which began with the release of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's "Jeanne Dore" production. Four more subjects have been prepared and set for regular release, and in none of the Bluebirds is there the slightest similarity in theme.

Helen Ware, in "Secret Love, "enacted a story of the coal mines; "Undine," based on the fairy story of that title, is a spectacular display of personal and scenic loveliness that is bound to create a commotion, and "Hop, the Devil's Brew," gives authentic and realistic details of the fight being vigorously waged by the government against the traffic in opium.

The interest Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt has taken in the progress of restrictive legislation, starting with the Harrison-Bloch law, which prohibited further imports of opium, has resulted in a nation-wide crusade against habit-forming drugs, with Mrs. Vanderbilt foremost among the public spirited citizens who are engaged in the work. "Hop, the Devil's Brew," when exhibited in picture theaters through the country, is expected to greatly stimulate the efforts being made to suppress the traffic; and, likewise, to herald a warning against the evil effects of narcotics upon humanity in general.

Rufus Steele, famous writer of short stories, and widely popular because of his contributions to the Saturday Evening Post, provided the scenario of "Hop, the Devil's Brew."

Bluebird makes further announcement of its coming features, on a program that has received a most propitious start. Carter De Haven, with Flora Parker De Haven, his wife, as his leading lady, will be featured in the "Wrong Door," a thrilling detective story, full of sensations, ready for release, February 21.

The "Wrong Door" was produced from Olga Prinzlau's scenario and Mr. De Haven directed. There are many sensational features, the story is well constructed and interest cleverly sustained throughout.

Films on Sanitary Dairying Methods

Eight Reels of Film Reveal Methods Used by the Borden Company in the Preparation of Milk for the Market.

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

AT a meeting of the International Pure Milk and Food League held at the Hotel Astor on Friday, January 28, Dr. W. E. J. Kirk of the Borden Company exhibited an interesting series of films calculated to dispell any qualms that might be felt regarding the cleanliness of the milk we drink. This series of films, only a portion of which were shown owing to the limited time allowed Dr. Kirk for his interesting discourse and exhibition of pictures, cover eight reels. The first three reels give a detailed account of the manufacture of condensed milk, showing also the bringing in of the cattle to the stables preparatory to being milked, the clipping of tail, flanks and udder, the wiping off of the udder with a damp cloth before the process of milking is begun, and the discarding of the first milk taken from the udder.

The second set consisting of two reels shows the preparation and bottling of Grade A milk; the third set also in two reels, answers all inquiries on Grade B milk; and the fourth set of scenes comprising only one reel tells the sanitary story of certified milk.

In connection with these pictures scenes in the laboratory of the Borden company are shown where samples of milk, condensed and otherwise, are put through a thorough test to ascertain whether or not an excess of bacteria exists.

These pictures are obtainable at any time, free of cost, by applying to Dr. Kirk at the General Offices of the Borden Company, 108 Hudson street, New York City.

HERE'S THE REAL YOUNGEST STAR!

Violet Mersereau has lost the name of youngest actress at the Eastern Universal Studios to little Edith Roberts, a fourteen-year-old, who is really playing leads there. There is no question about Miss Roberts being the youngest star on the Universal or any other program. Her birth certificate bears the figures "1901" in indelible ink.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

DUPLEX THEATER, DETROIT, MICH.

First Photoplay House of This Type Opened in Country—Method Enables Patrons to See Beginning of Multiple-Reel Subjects No Matter What Time They Arrive—System Very Popular—Admission Prices Range from 15 to 50 Cents.

THE popularity of Detroit's Duplex theater is said to be exceeding every anticipation. Open to the public for about a month, the Duplex has been showing moving pictures to phenomenal business. The Duplex theater has many pleasing features, architecturally and otherwise, and its pictures have been of the highest order. Their drawing power, however, has been added to considerably by the Duplex method of exhibiting them, which lies in simultaneously projecting different pictures, alternately, in two auditoriums, one picture being a multiple reel subject, the other being one reel pictures. Patrons who enter while the feature is running in one auditorium see short pictures in the other one until the long play has been finished, when it starts in the auditorium where the short productions were, the short reels being then transferred to where the long play was.

When the long picture starts in either auditorium its doors are closed, insuring patrons against the annoyance of others entering and leaving while the feature picture is running, as well as guaranteeing that the feature will be seen from start to finish, since one cannot miss the beginning of it when admission is not allowed to the auditorium where it has started. In this manner the Duplex method of exhibiting moving pictures remedies the one great fault with picture shows as ordinarily given, wherein patrons entering after a feature play has been started fail to understand its story or enjoy it to the extent they would if they had seen the beginning of the play.

Briefly described there are two auditoriums in the Duplex theater entered from one lobby, each auditorium having a stage, a picture screen and an operating room. The picture booths are intercommunicating, so that an exchange of reels between them can be readily effected. A unique feature is in regard to the pipe organ, which is located between the auditoriums and encased in a sound-proof organ loft, with openings into both auditoriums. These openings are closed by shutters so that the music can, at the will of the organist, be thrown in to either auditorium and excluded from the other one. The organ is operated in conjunction with one orchestra, which plays in the auditorium from which the organ music is excluded,—orchestra and organ effects being transferred with the picture from one auditorium to the other..

Compared with ordinary theaters it is not considered that the extra expense of operating the Duplex need be more than that required for an additional operator and assistant and additional ushers, items looked upon as relatively insignificant in the light of its comparative earning powers and in view of the fact that there is a considerable saving possible during afternoon performances when only one auditorium need be used to accommodate the attendance. The Duplex method of exhibiting moving pictures is set forth as the invention of Fuller Claflin, architect of Detroit's Duplex theater. Having handled as an architect and builder over seventy-five theaters in the United States and Canada, of which the Duplex theater in Detroit is one of his latest, he regards the Duplex as the natural result of an evolution of ideas as to how theaters should be built for exhibiting moving pictures.

The Fuller Claflin Company, of which Mr. Claflin is president, with offices in the Elks Temple, Detroit, claims it controls exclusive rights in connection with the Duplex method of exhibiting moving pictures, on which a patent has been applied for. In the Duplex theater in Detroit there is an initial working out of the idea, a model which may be duplicated with innumerable variations. Mr. Claflin states that, regardless of how any theater may be designed as to floor plan or otherwise, his company controls the disposition of all rights simultaneously to exhibit two or more pictures for what he describes as Duplex theater purposes.

The interior of Detroit's Duplex is finished in the Adams style of architecture, both as to relief work and fresco paintings. The color effects of this decoration are delicately blended in the most exquisite taste, old ivory, dainty rose, and blue predominating. Old rose tones are carried from the walls of the auditoriums into the upholstering of the chairs, the woodwork of which is finished in fumed oak. The aisles and the foyers are carpeted in harmonious colors. Elaborate stage settings are grouped about the picture screen in each auditorium with intricate lighting effects. The auditoriums are lit by eight main ceiling chandeliers, supplemented by side wall brackets artistically arranged in connection with the ornamental plaster treatment. The lobby is finished with a tile floor, marble base, and pilasters, with side walls surmounted by an ornamental plaster frieze and cornice, lighted by a series of chandeliers and brackets, all in the Adams style. A part of the lobby is covered with heavy carpet, and furnished with beautifully framed pictures and with easy chairs. The woman's room is supplied with every convenience, and a men's retiring room is conveniently located for each auditorium.

The heating and ventilating system of the theater is one of the most perfect which could be devised, immense exhaust fans continually changing the air in each auditorium. Particular attention has been paid to the installation of a thoroughly up-to-date lighting system, all of the lights in each auditorium and stage having a triple control, one from each picture booth and one from each stage, in addition to an emergency control near the entrance to each auditorium.

The investment in the Duplex theater is said to exceed $100,000. The seating capacity of each auditorium is 750. The building is located at Woodward avenue and the Boulevard, an exclusive residential section of the city, bordering on a business section. The Fuller Claflin Company secured a long lease of its site and then promoted its construction. It is said the company is now promoting other Duplex theaters on an extensive scale, and expect that eventually a number will be built throughout the United States and Canada.

H. M. Payne is general manager of the Duplex and Earl Heneszy is house manager. Pictures are changed three times a week. Prices range from 15 to 50 cents. Most of the seats at night are 25 cents in each auditorium. The Grand Boulevard Theater Company, which operates the Duplex, has about 800 stockholders. Downtown offices have recently been established at 602 Farwell Building. The Duplex was the first theater in Detroit to show Triangle films. It has an exclusive contract for first-run pictures.

LIBERTY THEATER, PITTSBURGH, PA.

New Photoplay House Embodies Every Detail in Scientific Striving for Beauty and Comfort in Theater Construction —Automatic Regulators Control Temperature of Auditorium—Patrons May Secure Box Seats by Telephone—Massive White Front Illuminated by Flood Light System.

THE East Liberty Theater Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has given to the motion picture industry in the erection and opening of the Liberty theater, situated at Shady and Penn avenues, that city, an institution devoted to the exploitation of motion pictures of which to be proud. The general manager of the company is R. H. Allen, and the manager of the theater is J. W. Helm. The structure was built at a cost of $260,000 and embodies all the improvements in the evolution of the motion picture theater. The Liberty is built on the principle that the public likes to be comfortable while it is being entertained, consequently the space between each row of seats is so broad that seated patrons need not rise to permit others to reach seats beyond them. This is only one of a number of features in the construction of the Liberty. For instance, of the 1,500 seats, 275 are box seats and the boxes extend from one side of the house to the other. They are situated right in front of the balcony. Naturally, they are very good seats.

Liberty Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.

But what perhaps will be most appreciated by the public is that box seats can be reserved by telephone. The theater patron in his home, wishing to see the show and not caring to get into the scramble of those waiting in the lobby and foyer for seats, can telephone to the ticket office for seat reservations. This removes all discomfort and uncertainty. The patron knows whether he can reserve a seat or whether he can't and can govern his course accordingly. The first floor has 900 seats, the balcony 325 seats, and the boxes 275.

The operating booth is placed in front of the balcony between the ceiling of the first floor and the floor of the balcony. The throw is sixty feet. Baird projectors are used. In line with all other provisions for comfort, the heating and ventilating system in the Liberty theater is on a par with other modern systems. A recapitulation of all the systems in vogue brought the owners to a choice of the hot blast heating and cooling method. This means there will be no need for furs in the winter or fans in the summer. Automatic regulators will control temperature. Pure air will be forced in continually and over-head draughts will carry away foul air. Rest rooms for women and smoking rooms for men have been provided by the policy of giving the public everything that conduces to comfort.

Next to the comfort and ventilation particular study was given to installing an organ in harmony with the character of the house and the clientele it will attract. The organ is built on both sides of the small stage, in front of which is the orchestra pit, with a capacity for twenty musicians. An organ manufactured by the Austin Organ Company of Hartford, Conn. was installed. It represents an investment of $15,000. The instrument is presided over by E. J. Napier, an accomplished organist. Mr. Napier has for years been organist in one of the largest churches in Pittsburgh and many times has operated the great organ in the Carnegie music hall.

Considered architecturally, the Liberty theater is a triumph of the builder's art. It embodies every detail in scientific striving for beauty and comfort in theater construction. The front of the building is a great panel of the cream white terra cotta, not unlike a massive picture frame, crowned with a cornice of unusual beauty. A system of flood lights, concealed in the Marquise and not visible from the street illuminates this massive expanse of white. By setting it back from the fixed property line and having the front nearly at right angles with Penn avenue the owners of the Liberty theater have contrived to make it visible, both day and night, for a distance of more than a mile down Penn avenue. This was made possible by the fact that Penn avenue here turns sharply to the right and that the theater is placed on the outside of the curve.

The electric sign, announcing the productions, is placed at right angles to Penn avenue and extends across the entire face of the building. A handsome lobby, 32 feet wide, leads into the short foyer which has standing room for 300 persons. The auditorium of the theater is a beautiful, high-ceilinged room done in Canne stone with a handsome enormous light suspended from the center of the ceiling. This gives a soft light at all times without in any manner interfering with the projection of the pictures. Up stairways, upon the right and left of this room, access is gained to the landing from which one enters the boxes and the balcony.

Interior of the Liberty Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The interior of the theater is distinctly Italian of the Renaissance period. The ceiling is old Italian, of wooden beams highly decorated, creating a perfect imitation of the ceilings one sees in the old castles of France and Italy. Special attention has been given to the side of the building closest to the Pennsylvania railroad tracks. Here there are no openings except fire doors, which will be opened only in case of necessity. Besides this precaution, sound-deadening materials have been used in the walls which are unusually thick. No sounds from the railroad will penetrate to the interior of the house.

Crane Wilbur makes his first appearance as a David Horsley star in a five-reel production on January 31 in "Vengeance Is Mine!" a Masterpicture, de luxe edition, the second of the Horsley Masterpicture productions to be released by the Mutual.

Stuart Paton, director of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has just returned from Washington, D. C., where he has been taking pictures with his Florence Lawrence Company. "The Elusive Isabel" is the title of this first Florence Lawrence production.

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

WITH the name of Louis D. Brandeis in the public eye as the latest man to be honored by President Wilson in the appointment of Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, and in view of the fact that he has been filmed, I went over to Melrose the other night to see how he looked in the pictures. As I wrote last week, Miss Alice H. Grady, his financial secretary, who draws the largest salary for a woman in the "Hub," has written and directed a film illustrating in detail the value of savings bank insurance. She also appears in the flesh, as well as in the picture, and tells the story clearly to young and old, for she is now en tour appearing before large audiences. The film is decidedly good and effective in bringing before the wage-earners the way to save and invest without risk, as the plan has state indorsement. I was much pleased at the scene showing our former Governor David I. Walsh and Executive Secretary Hamlin administering the oath to an insurance representative. It was in the Executive Chamber of the State House, and the picture of the popular governor is the best likeness of him ever made. Many scenes are introduced of interest to the working people, and all are effective, especially those illustrating the man who would not insure, and the man who did, and what happened to both as a result. It was cleverly done all through, and told a big story of the need to guard against the future as well as old age. Very small children have taken out policies and they were shown, much to the delight of the "kiddies" present, for it was an audience of school children and their parents. The photography was done by Leon Dadmun.

Score another for the moving pictures here, for "Vanity Fair," which ran two weeks in the Tremont Temple, proved so successful that it was transferred to the Copley theater (the defunct Toy) on Monday last, much to the edification of all within walking distance of that effete playhouse, once the rallying place of the so-called smart set. I predicted long ago that some day it would become a home for first-class pictures and was promptly reproved for entertaining such a thought. "Why, the idea!" said one highbrow subscriber. Well, "he laughs best who laughs last," you know. This theater is a gem in every way, has a tea-room, a dance-hall and numerous attractive features. When it was built, Mrs. "Jack" Gardner presented it with a beautiful winding staircase which once adorned her music room in Fenway Court, a veritable Venetian palace. The location is ideal, diagonally across from the Copley-Plaza (our only New York importation, and called by many the "Costly Pleasure"), and convenient to the Back Bay railway stations. This will be our third picture house (minus vaudeville) in the neighborhood, the others being the Fenway and the Exeter Street.

Over in Melrose I saw "The Boss" and liked the work of Alice Brady and Holbrook Blinn, rather better than in anything yet seen with them, notably "The Ballet Girl," seen at the World Film run off the other day. Both are full of action and differ widely in theme. The photography in "The Boss" was excellent and the battle between capital and labor went over well. The merciless camera makes Blinn a bit too old for the lover of so young a heroine, but it isn't age after all that makes or mars a manly man, when we think of some things in life like old slippers, old wine and old friends. Another reel seen that day was "Love's Cross Roads," featuring Marie Empress, a most pretentious Equitable offering sure to be a winner. It disclosed a jury room where a squabble was on with the result of disagreement resulting in the release of the accused. There were some quite new situations introduced well worth while.

What a splendid actor Theodore Roberts is in the pictures for all know of his work in the speaking drama. He seems so versatile and we are to enjoy his "Pudd'nhead Wilson" to the limit. This was first done by George Wilson of the old Museum company, and was revived annually at the historic playhouse. Then "Jack" Mason and others tried it in and out of stock. I recall stopping off in Denver some years ago and making a visit to Elitch Garden where Mason was playing in stock with his, then, wife, Katherine Grey, and this was the play, done so well that it lives in memory.

At the Kleine-Edison runoff last week I saw "The Innocence of Ruth" already released, and seen in New York. I heartily commend this film to all, for the novelty in the working out of a bit of a problem for the young chap who has had a ward thrust upon him unexpectedly, a pretty well grown up girl, too, but wholly unsophisticated in matters worldly. It is capitally done by Edward Earle and Viola Dana, a pair hard to beat in any company. Though fairly youthful they have dignity and considerable reserve force, all through. A neat little lesson is taught, unconsciously, by the young girl who wants to share "guardy's" cocktail and cigarette, much to his dismay. She says "if right for you, why not for me?" At this he thinks he'd better swear off, anyhow he gets to thinking about this and many things. The story is not quite new, but in their hands seem different from anything seen along that line in many a year.

Why say anything about "The Call of the Cumberland" when all that Dustin Farnum does is finished and "goes" with the audience. The Park theater is doing immense business and giving the public a good run of films and varied in theme. Marguerite Gallagher, a local favorite, made her re-appearance as a soloist last week. I had my first look at "Trilby" that day and I don't wonder it was preferred to the speaking version. It was good to see dear old Paris pictured in spots from across the Seine.

At the Exeter Sunday evening last I saw a dear little play put on by Thanhouser called "His Majesty the King," just the thing for young folks to see involving as it does a tiny baby suddenly saddled with the title of King. It is a fairy-like film, but has stirring features and is well staged all through. The punctilious court etiquette is well done and never once borders on burlesque as so often happened. That is a well behaved baby sure, despite the way it is whisked about to avoid cruel pursuers of the mother. One feature struck us all with wonderment. How on earth can that dear little girl ride rapidly here and there on that white steed. Some horse that! I noticed Col. Draper (now deceased) had more to do there than in other pictures and he made a gorgeous king.

A little friend in New York writes me that Mary Pickford is to cut her curls for her next play. Here is a chance for her friends in front to rebel. Cheer up fans, Mary can easily don a wig and the many plays now before us are good for years to come. Quite the prettiest picture seen of "Little Mary" of late is the first one shown in "Tess of the Storm Country," picturing her in evening dress, her arms laden with flowers, which she gracefully places in a tall jar. It is quite a contrast to all that follows for she wears her rags to the last. I hope Grace Miller White will give us another play as good as that.

Pathe's "Love Trail" at the Boston gave us our first glimpse of Agnes Glynne and in an important part of a heroine who endures much. The Boers are shown up realistically, and the work of Fred Paul was artistic. There was one of the most sensational scenes in this when the girl is tied to a horse and dragged along by the beast of a rider who finally meets a deserved end. It was exciting, virile and had atmosphere to burn. Especially beautiful was the fine character drawing of the Madonna like sister—the Mother—a singularly beautiful woman.

Florence Reed has done nothing quite so well as "At Bay," put on at the Fenway theater, which grows on me week by week. Being familiar with the story I sensed its possibilities for the screen, but was not prepared for the scenes which led up to the great one in the office of the rascal. This is a Gold Rooster offering of high character and sharing the honors with Miss Reed was Charles Waldron, an especially finished actor who, here, has the role of a young Irish officer from London. His quaint love making, typical of his race, makes the part stand out prominently. At the end the audience applauded which is a bit unusual, though I wonder why. Why not let the manager, who has given you such a treat, feel that you like a play—filmed or spoken? Wake up!

"I'm just crazy about it," said a friend at my elbow on leaving the theater. "About what?" "Why, 'The Strange Case of Mary Page,' of course." While I see no need to gush over it, let me say that it is going to pack the houses wherever produced, not so much for the mystery involved, but for the fine team work of Henry B. Walthall and Edna Mayo, both popular here, and more so, since the run of "The Misleading Lady," at two theaters.

"The Necklace of Pearls" is another Thanhouser offering to make a hit. It is one of the clever detective stories, with unusual working out, in this case through the children and animals winding up with a cat show and discovery of the lost necklace wound around the neck of a cat which had been exchanged at the pier by a kiddie who mistook the basket belonging to the thieves for her mother's.

The Film Club meets Sunday the 6th and will be addressed by Gustave Frohman and Alice H. Brady. The latest to join it from among the players is Earl Williams of the Vitagraph who when here at the ball met the members.

A "Mary Pickford Week" served to call out large audiences at the Exeter Street theater, where "Foundlings" and "Tess of the Storm Country" gave pleasure to young and old. Although I had seen both films I went over to observe the work and detail more closely. As to "The Foundling" it grows on one, but we wish that the cast iron matron of the orphan asylum might have been punished. However, the play ends in the happiest manner and aren't those pups dears? This play ought to please all lovers of dumb animals, especially the scene where "Molly-O" releases all those captured dogs. There is one big inconsistency in making an undersized rat terrior, the mother, all of a sudden, of four fat bull pups. It was the one "fool thing" in an otherwise perfect production. I think "Tess" about the best thing Mary has done. Then too we had Jack Pickford in another reel, though not mentioned or anyone else in the cast of "The Man on the Case," very well done but too much horse play here and there, for it is hardly possible in real life amid such surroundings as in this play. We had a glimpse of Edgar L. Davenport as usual doing a fine bit of work in a small part. His clear cut face films well, and one understands every syllable uttered. A sub-title had the word "alright" to queer it, for there is no such word in the dictionary, and therefore no place on the slide. There was a worse error, however, on a title in the Drew play "By Right of His Might." The "sub" Harvard man is made to say "Oughter to Go Home." Perhaps it was meant to be so, but I fail to see any fun in illiteracy perpetrated by a college man. Mrs. Ayer, who directs her theater, always has music to please, singers and instrumentalists as solists who do not play to the gallery. Jarvis Jocelyn has returned to the piano after a holiday and gets a hand every performance for his solo.

Mrs. Langtry, otherwise known as "The Jersey Lily," and legally as Lady de Bathe, made her re-appearance here at Keith's and now we read that she has felt the lure of the films and signed with Tom Terriss for an early appearance. Strikes me her face ought to film well with such regular features and so few lines. Her beauty and figure make good assets.

So Lasky has secured Harold Lockwood! We are glad and hope he will be given parts not so "goody-goody" as those played here of late. Ever notice his graceful gait? We like him, especially in parts calling for quick action and heroics for he never overdoes it. We shall miss his former opposite, May Allison, whose contract has I see expired with the American.

The Hub is to have Ernest H. Horstmann again elected president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, and Richard W. Drown promoted to the vice presidency. Col. Henry Kincaide of Quincy, one of the directors, is a well known military man, and a former member of the staff of the late Governor Guild. He is immensely popular, as well as executive.

"The Coquette's Awakening," a Selig masterpiece, was put on at the Exeter Sunday evening, and for the first time I saw Kathlyn Williams—that is, to notice her work. She is certainly a beauty and knows the art of by-play. It was a pretentious film and a bit fantastic in working out the dream. Most daringly did they treat Father Time who led the coquette about, illustrating in pictures many needed lessons to awaken her soul. It was a short reel and beautifully photographed.

McRAE STARTS BIG RAILROAD FEATURE.

Henry McRae has begun the production of his first film since returning to the producing staff at the Universal City studios. The story is a two-reel tale of the railroads written by Frank M. Wiltermood under the title "The Strife of the Iron Trails." Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill are to appear in the leading roles with a supporting cast chosen from among the best known of the stock players at Universal City.

Mildred Gregory with Gaumont

TO be able to fill any part from the ranks of its own players Gaumont is constantly strengthening its stock companies. Here Jacksonville, Fla., only five reel features are made, to be released as Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition. The latest addition to Gaumont forces is Miss Mildred Gregory, well and favorably known as a screen player of parts requiring youthful impetuosity and feminine fire.

Mildred Gregory.

Miss Gregory began her photodrama work with Lubin four years ago. At that time Edwin Middleton, now a director of Mutual Masterpictures for Gaumont, was directing for Lubin. He passed favorably upon the young and untried girl's application, and now she comes again under his direction as a finished player.

With Lubin Miss Gregory's talent was soon recognized, and it was not long before she was acting as leading woman for Romaine Fielding. Practically her whole career has been with this one organization. In the interim between her Lubin and Gaumont engagements, Miss Gregory appeared as the "dope fiend" in the Kleine production of "Bond Women," and with Cyril Scott in "Lords of High Decisions."

With Gaumont Miss Gregory will have a line of "adventuress" and "siren" parts that will give her unusual opportunities.

Maude George

MAUDE GEORGE is known to all Universal patrons as a forceful dramatic actress. She is an American by birth but her dark hair, olive complexion and expressive black eyes give her a very foreign appearance, which fits her for such roles as the Hindoo queen in "The Pool of Flame," or the Mexican adventuress in "Landon's Legacy." She likes these exotic parts best, and feels that they suit her personality.

Maude George.

She was born in Riverside, Cal., twenty-five years ago, and was educated in Los Angeles. She went on the stage as a young girl in the Burbank Stock Company of Los Angeles. She supported Nat Goodwin in "When We Were Twenty-One," and later played in vaudeville, replacing Valerie Bergere in an act.

Miss George is a tremendous worker, and a great reader. Her favorite books are the novels of Dickens and Alexander Dumas. But she enjoys all outdoor sports, and plays all games well. Her greatest ambition is to succeed in her work, and, although she has been with the Universal less than a year, her services are in constant demand among the directors of Universal City. She has original and striking ideas of costuming her roles.

BRITISH NOTES

MATTERS seem to be nearing the climax between the Essanay Company and the Exhibitors' Association. Arising out of the recent manifesto and statements issued by the association to its members and the trade generally, criticising the new releasing policy of the Essanay Company, Mr. Spoor has now issued a writ for libel upon the association, the committee and its secretary. While comment on a case that is "sub-judice" is a technical offence under English law it is not beside its application to mention that the case will be watched and followed closely by every American manufacturer. The Essanay Company forms the precedent, but it is no secret that a group of prominent producing units—I think that is the new and approved term—of the New World are simply waiting the result of Mr. Spoor's experiments before adopting varient methods upon the same basic lines of renting direct to the exhibitor. The Vitagraph Company, for instance, makes an important announcement this week in this respect, as outlined in the following paragraph. But whatever the Exhibitors' Association have done and notwithstanding the injunction obtained by them in the Scottish court to restrain exhibitors from showing Chaplin's, there is no one who can say the Essanay policy has been the failure that it was predicted it would be. And so far as the Exhibitors' Association is concerned, its success is due to one elementary fact, the weakness of human nature. A chain is only as strong as its weakest link and the weak links of the Exhibitors' Association were those showmen who were shown by the Essanay Company how to score a temporary success over their opposition by showing Chaplin exclusively. Particularly in the industrial districts of the north of England—and it is to these districts that every renter looks for a return upon his films—did the Essanay Company find exhibitors amenable. I asked the manager of a premier show in Leeds on Friday a certain question and this was his reply. "I wouldn't care if I can only run a Chaplin exclusively once in six weeks, instead of once in three, even considering that I have to take an Essanay program for each intermediate week. Look at this queue, estimate it at your own length."

"A quarter of a mile," I was bound to admit.

"And they," he added, "are for the shilling seats."

This week the Vitagraph Company enter the lines with a proclamation that they, in future, will operate their own renting exchange for films hitherto sold outright to private renters principally the Broadway Star and Blue Ribbon features. The handling in this country of the company's first serial, "The Goddess," has been a main factor in influencing George Smith to this decision, but here the departure both starts and finishes. There are to be no clauses in the Vitagraph contracts compelling the exhibitor to take other Vitagraph releases, he simply hires direct from the company—or rather a subsidiary associate company to be called the Vitagraph Renting Company—just what he wants and nothing more. The ordinary "six-a-week" program will as hitherto, continue to be sold to renters from the old offices in Charing Cross Road.

John D. Tippett, of the Transatlantic Film Company, Ltd., returned the other day from his flying visit to Universal City with news of the forthcoming Universal productions. "J. D." will probably follow on the current Universal serial in Britain, "The Broken Coin," with the "Terence O'Rourke" series and eventually "Graft."

The Chief Constables of Lancashire have an association and through it have been petitioning the respective authorities responsible for the licensing of moving picture theaters in that county to apply for a government censor of films. These chief constables are hardly to be blamed, for twelve of them have just been served with writs for libel by a certain film renter, whose wares they have been censoring on their own account.

Joseph Darling, of the Fox Corporation, is still in London, but as yet has not decided upon premises for the company's London office. He says it is not improbable that his company may open in Britain both a printing plant and a producing studio.

Miss Eve Balfour is among the first, if not actually the first woman in England, to start producing films on her own account. The lady's initial appearance on the screen is only a few months old, being in "The Woman Who Did," and she will shortly be seen again in an adaptation of Rathmell Wilson's novel, "When Woman Loves," and "The Life of Lady Hamilton." She and her Company are at present utilizing the Neptune studios in Hartfordshire.

I hear that a copy of the 10,000 foot army and navy film, the first of the war office official pictures will shortly be seen in New York.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

John William Kellette

AMONG men who have come through picturesque careers to occupy positions of importance in the motion picture industry, John William Kellette, newspaper man, scenario writer and director, deserves a high place. Mr. Kellette, now with the Pathe company in Jersey City, has done many things, and, what is more to the point, he has gained a reputation for doing them well. His school has been the world at large and his experience has been enlivened by many hard knocks, since, at the age of nine, he became a bootblack and newsboy in Boston.

From the newsboy he grew into a newspaper man, working up from a printer's devil to the place of star reporter on the Worcester Telegram in Worcester, Mass., later serving as war correspondent during the Spanish-American War. He enlisted with the Sixth Massachussetts Infantry, and after being mustered out took charge of the mechanical department of a newspaper in Rutland, Vt. His first experience as a scenario writer was with the Thanhouser Company where he succeeded so well that Lloyd Lonergan advised him to abandon newspaper work and devote all of his time to the preparation of scripts.

John William Kellette.

Last year Mr. Kellette joined the Universal Company as assistant to John G. Adolfi, leaving Universal with Mr. Adolfi to assist in the production of Fox pictures. He collaborated with his chief in adapting "Merely Mary Ann," from the Israel Zangwill comedy, with Vivian Martin as the star, which is soon to be released. Among Mr. Kellette's best stories may be numbered: "Justified Holdup," Universal; "When the Wheels of Justice Clogged," Thanhouser; "A Bad Tangle," Imp; "The Winner Loses," Reliance-Majestic; "Sid Nee's Finish," Thanhouser; "When the Cat Came Back," Princess; "His Winning Way," Princess; "Law of Humanity," Princess; "Cupid's Lieutenant," Princess; "A Circumstantial Nurse," Princess; "An Inside Tip," Thanhouser; "The Purse and the Girl," Princess; "When Paths Diverged," Princess; "The Grand Passion," Princess; "Her Way," Princess; "A Tangled Cat," Princess; "Billy's Ruse," Princess; "When Sorrow Fades," Thanhouser; "The Somnambulist," Thanhouser; "Getting Rid of Algy," Thanhouser; "Lost—A Union Suit," Thanhouser; "When May Rebelled," Princess; "Trail of the Lovelorn" (2), Thanhouser; "The Scrublady," Thanhouser, and "Algy's Alibi."

HESSER PROMOTING CANADIAN WAR PICTURES.

Edwin Bower Hesser, the well known film publicity man, has just been appointed general manager of the Official Canadian Government Film, "Canada's Fighting Forces," which began a transcontinental tour last week at the Princess Theatre, Montreal, where to "Dollar Top" prices they played a record engagement. Two companies will show the film, accompanied by lecturers who have returned from the front after active army service, in every city and town of the Dominion.

"Hazel Kirke"

Old Play Given Effective Screen Presentation in Pathe Production—Pearl White Featured.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS romantic old play by Steele MacKaye has thrilled many an audience in the days gone by. In the screen version, as presented in the five-part Gold Rooster Play, it may be more or less compelling than in the stage version; that is a matter of opinion. At any rate it is certain that the "Hazel Kirke" of the screen will be found palatable, and even delightful, to that large majority of the populace known as picture "fans."

Scene from "Hazel Kirke" (Pathe).

William Riley Hatch has the role of the old miller, father of the pretty, vivacious girl, whose name graces the title page. He plays it well. In fact there is nothing left to be desired in the character of the sturdy old man when William Riley Hatch gets through with it. Bruce McRae gives a fine impersonation of the unselfish character of Squire Rodney, and the wife of the miller offers a characterization that is worthy of praise. There will, however, be a difference of opinion with regard to the adaptability of Pearl White and Creighton Hale to their respective roles. Pearl White, who responded so readily to the strenuous calls of the role of Elaine in the memorable "Elaine" series, is not altogether flexible in her handling of the characterization of Hazel Kirke. Nor is Creighton Hale much in sympathy with a role that affords small opportunity.

Being an old play there is nothing new in its treatment of a subject that is both old and new. The story of the young girl, who, in spite of a sense of obligation to the man who has been her benefactor and expects her to become his wife at the end of her school days, finds a perfectly natural culmination in her yielding to the more youthful attentions of Arthur Carringford. There is a tactful handling of the plot by Arthur's mother and a servant of the family to bring about a fake marriage; a plan which, although it fails in its purpose, stirs up a "tempest in a teapot." And there is something especially pleasing about the screen presentation of "Hazel Kirke."

"The Ballet Girl"

Alice Brady Is Attractive in Story of Stage Life Released by World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHEN it is remarked that Alice Brady is a pleasing figure in the title role of this Brady-World Film production, the most hopeful element of the picture is noted. To be sure, there is another star in the adaptation of Compton MacKenzie's novel "Carnival," no less an actor than Holbrook Blinn, in fact; but his opportunities are so limited that his appearance means little. From first to last Miss Brady is the center of interest and she acts well. In playing first the mother, a dancer abused by her worthless husband, then the daughter, who likewise becomes a dancer, she gives two admirable characterizations. Miss Brady's charm of personality is effective on the screen and she is sincere in her expression of feeling. If "The Ballet Girl" is a somewhat disappointing photoplay, the youthful star is in no way to blame.

With a better judged development of the story and a smoother production, this pictorial version of Mr. MacKenzie's very appealing novel probably would have realized a gripping force now lacking. But at least some of the opportunities have been fulfilled in depicting life behind the scenes, more particularly as reflected in the tragedy of La Syrena. She is devoted to her child and for mature companionship turns to Vergoe, a clown, who has loved her hopelessly for many years. Although their friendship is entirely innocent, her husband, in a fit of drunken jealously, cuts the rope by which she is suspended above the stage during a dance, and the fall makes her an invalid for life. La Syrena kills herself and after a lapse of fifteen years the story is continued with her daughter as the heroine.

There is good characterization in Miss Brady's depiction of the restless girl, who has inherited her mother's spirit and with it the taste for a dancer's career. One of the most natural scenes in the picture shows Jennie's delight when she finds her mother's ballet costume in a trunk in the attic and dons it in place of her gingham frock. Mr. Blinn has the role of a severely moral young man, strong in his opposition to the girl's stage ambitions and finally successful in making her his wife.

Scene from "The Ballet Girl" (World Film).

He puts plenty of strength into the handling of the few impressive scenes allowed him. Alec B. Francis gives an excellent performance as Vergoe. Whoever wrote the letters thrown on the screen should take lessons in penmanship or find less conspicuous employment.

"Love's Crossed Trail"

Marie Empress Appears in Triumph Production to Be Released on Equitable Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE similarity between "Behind Closed Doors" and other mystery melodramas released from time to time, is marked. The skeleton of the story is easily recognized and the incidents clothing it are not conspicuously novel, neither are they calculated to carry conviction with an audience demanding plausible motivation. The picture makes extravagant claims on the spectator's readiness to believe what he sees without asking questions, and at the same time offers a fair amount of excitement, enough, perhaps, for a popular production in houses where the artistic standard is not high.

Marie Empress, the featured player, is permitted to appear in various disguises and altogether she acquits herself creditably. As the decoy for a fashionable gambling house, she is moderately effective in striking gowns and one may credit her power to fascinate the men subjected to her wiles. The fact that Inez, usually immune to kindly feelings, happens to fall sincerely in love with one of her victims, accounts for much that happens after the fatal night in the gambling house. The proprietor, posing as Inez's uncle, is shot, and, as might be expected, evidence points to King as the murderer.

Of course, there is a trial scene; the jury disagrees and King released on bail, is jealously watched by Inez, who fears his return to an earlier sweetheart. She even goes so far as to have him kidnapped and brought to the rendezvous of a band of crooks, where, attired as a gypsy, she urges him to escape with her and avoid another trial. For her first appearance among the crooks, Miss Empress is clad as a natty youth and later she adopts the disguise of a ragged newsboy that she may follow King without being detected

It is here that Director Joseph A. Golden denies two of his characters the ordinary faculties of sight and hearing. While King and his sweetheart converse, Inez breaks through the bushes not two feet behind them and remains there without being discovered. This seems to be overworking the photoplay convention that people may be both blind and deaf when the director so orders. Prominent in support of Miss Empress are William Huntington, Marian Swayne and Regan Hughston. Settings for the picture are good. Photography varies.

"The Upstart"

Satirical Comedy Produced by Rolfe Photoplays and Released by Metro Is Novel in the Extreme.

THE nearest approach to a character, such as George Le Guere draws in this adaptation of Thomas Barry's play, "The Upstart"—at any rate the comparison that first suggests itself—is the poet in Shaw's "Candida." An idealistic, erratic, impracticable person such as Coventry Petmore is a decided novelty among screen creations and he deserves a kindly reception for varying the monotony of conventional heroes. Probably most audiences won't know just how to take him for a while; they will be undecided whether or not to regard his views on love and marriage seriously, but after a time the producer leaves no doubt that he intends "The Upstart" to be a satrical comedy unburdened by weighty thought.

To be sure there is some pretense of advancing unusual beliefs, and at the very close of the picture Coventry is made to face the spectators with the statement that some day they, too, will accept the truth of his theories; but he fails to explain precisely what constitutes his theories. He is a bitter foe of divorce; he is equally disdainful of loveless marriage and between the two he is careful not to offer a solution for missmated couples.

Dropping any notion of a serious intent behind the carefully worded sub-titles and considering the production as a novel style of photoplay comedy, there is much to entertain in the acting of Mr. LeGuere, Marguerite Snow, James Lackaye and Frederick Summer, who are afforded the advantage of odd situations. Coventry Petmore is such a creature of impulse that he jumps out of bed in the middle of the night, leaving his wife and child that he may wage a fight against the divorce evil. In the household of the Mitchells he finds rich opportunities. The father is a judge whose specialty is granting divorces; the son is a minister, whose priggish spirituality has alienated the affections of his wife. Coventry arrives just in time to interfere with the wife's attempted elopement with the chauffeur. Seemingly he has no objection to the woman deserting her husband, but he insists upon directing the proceedings. Having been kicked into the street he returns home to find that his wife, in accord with the theories of love and happiness, has disappeared with another man.

Miss Snow, always an attractive figure on the screen, is well cast as the minister's wife, but first honors go to Mr. LeGuere for his spirited playing of a strange character. Edwin Carew supplied a good production.

play such as "Souls in Bondage" is seriously weakened by a well nigh impossible turn of events at a critical stage. If this five-part drama, accurate in detail and frequently impressive in characterization, maintained the promise of the first two reels, it would be considerably above the average feature. The contrasting characters of two sisters are faithfully portrayed from childhood to maturity, the acting is natural and the story is natural up to the point where common sense is too obviously ignored.

Author and director are at pains to show how, even in childhood, Rosa shoulders the blame for the misdeeds of her selfish, petulant sister. As young women the characters run true to form and the relationship in the household is not altered. Rita, jilted by her lover at a crucial time, goes to the city, finds companionship among people of her own stripe and does not send for Rosa until she is about to become a mother. Because Rita is disinclined to care for the baby, the self-sacrificing sister takes it to her home town and leaves it in charge of a poor family.

Now as the story is presented on the screen, it is not conceivable that Rosa's parents could think the child belonged to her, yet such is the belief attributed to them and on the strength of it, the daughter, refusing to disclose her sister's downfall, is driven from home. If the subsequent development of the plot demanded Rosa's banishment, as apparently it did, the author might have benefited the picture by supplying a plausible reason for suspicion. Barring this defect and the last half of the concluding reel—seemingly suggested by the case of Edith Cavell and not required to complete the story—the production is commendable.

Certain scenes, such as that at the boarding house table where Rita, true to character, invites a flirtation with the only available man, are handled with marked skill. The inmates of the apartment, which the wayward girl selects in preference to the Y. W. C. A., appear at home in their surroundings, and in entire contrast is the country home of the Brenners. The emotional method of Miss O'Neil is admirably suited to the character of Rosa and she is given able support by Ida Stanhope, William Corbett, and Bernard Siegel.

"Thou Shalt Not Covet"

A Remarkable Selig Production Directed By Colin Campbell and Featuring Tyrone Power and Miss Kathlyn Williams.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD has done some of his best work in the scenario line in the photo-dramatic story, "Thou Shalt Not Covet," which has been produced with remarkable realism by the Selig Polyscope Company, under the able direction of Colin Campbell.

The story treats of domestic life, in which married infelicity in one case is powerfully contrasted with connubial bliss in another, bringing into fine prominence the noble character of a man who has drawn a vixen in the marriage lottery. But there is no place for hum-drum life in the story. It abounds with thrills that are melodramatic in their intensity; powerful situations that stir the heart and hold the mind with the grip of a vise. And amid it all we see that the man, who has been despoiled by fate of his heart's dearest desire, rises superior to the ordeals that confront him, and in the conquest of self finds a solace in contemplation of the happiness of his neighbor's wife, whom he loves devotedly.

Interest centers on four characters in the photodrama—I, the hero; his neighbor's wife, his neighbor, and his own wife. As I, the hero, Tyrone Power has made the hit of his career before the camera, thus far. At least I have been so impressed, and a close analysis of his characterization only strengthens my opinion.

The hero is no ordinary type of man, as Mr. Powers presents him. Were he possessed of less culture, less strength and dignity of character than is given him by Mr. Powers, his own wife could scarcely have escaped the adoption of seven measures by him—even to the extent of physical punishment at his hands; and his neighbor's wife, pure and ideal as she is, might have had reason to bemoan her friendly intimacy with him.

The screen shows this man bereft of all home joys, flouted and despised by his wife, who takes a fiendish delight in wounding his feelings and his heart. At the outset the screen gives an inkling of his distress, in a few words from his diary that we see him writing: "I was a dreamer and a student and my home life was unhappy," we read, and then we understood the tragedy of his life. And we understand still better when we witness how his wife drinks heavily and plays cards with members of her social set, scorning his literary pursuits and delighting to disturb him when thus engaged, disdaining to speak to him at other times, except when she needs money to pay her gambling debts. And through it all the big man with the grave face, studious habits and pained look in his eyes never forgets that he is a gentleman and that she is a woman and his wife. Once, when his good taste is outraged by the sight of the huge earrings worn by her, we see him sternly taking her to task, and that she throws the vulgar jewels aside. This is the only sign of temper shown by him, and we understand that he is jealous for her good name and his own.

Is it any wonder that this man, whose soul is yearning for sympathy and understanding, finds inward joy when in the presence of his neighbor's wife? Her husband is his good friend, and she is the soul of wifely devotion, beautiful of face and character. When his neighbor is called away to Africa on business and his wife is left alone, the big man discovers that he loves her. Fearing himself, he also leaves on a foreign expedition. Soon afterwards she sails to join her husband. At Cairo, fate brings the big man and his neighbor's wife together, most unexpectedly. At Suez they both take the same steamer for Bombassa, where the husband is in charge of a trading post, their common destination being purely accidental.

On the voyage the steamer is wrecked. The big man and his neighbor's wife are cast alone on the shore, she mentally deranged and believing her companion to be her husband. In this trying predicament, the big man's face, as the mirror of his soul and conduct, becomes set as adamant. The pained look is still there, but it is dominated by one of sternness, which at times is softened by keen sympathy.

One night she comes to him from the little cave home he has made for her sole use, and, calling him husband, she clasps him in her arms and is soon fast asleep. As soon as he can release himself from her embrace without awaking her, he rises with great trepidation and rushes off to another spot on the shore, where, from sheer weariness, he falls into a deep slumber. When he awakes he finds her again in his arms, and, horrified by even the semblance of disloyalty to his neighbor, he seizes his revolver and seeks a secluded spot to end his life. He is interrupted in the act by a prolonged scream from the woman he loves, and reaches her just in time to save her from a ferocious animal. After the animal's attack reason returns to her, and we see her face expressing doubt and fear and soul questioning, as she listens to the big man's story.

Unknown to the two castaways, the husband's trading post, situated farther inland, in the same section of country, had been attacked by the natives, and he at that moment had reached the shore nearby, after an exhausting flight. They discover him more dead than alive, but the tender ministrations of his wife bring him back from the borderland to her and happiness.

The same morning a boat's crew lands and bears the neighbor and his wife away, but the big man, stronger than ever in soul and in fealty to duty, remains behind, and his neighbor and his neighbor's wife fully understand him. The sternness of his face has given way to a look of lofty resignation and the pained expression of his eyes has been changed to one of patient suffering. Years afterwards, a wanderer on the face of the earth, he is seen, all alone, drinking to the happiness of his neighbor and his neighbor's wife, and then he fades out of the screen.

Miss Williams will gratify her many admirers the world over by the delicate art bestowed on her impersonation of the neighbor's wife. The tender scenes between the wife and her husband are charming in their sincerity. Those other scenes in which the wife and the big man are the actors are just as true. She understands the sadness of his plight, but never by look or manner does she give aught than the sympathy of true friendship. Miss Williams looks decidedly natty and attractive in riding costume, in the scene where her mount runs away and throws her; and I cannot recall having ever seen her more winsome than in the scene in the hotel at Cairo, where "the wife" meets unexpectedly the "I" of the story.

Miss Eugenie Besserer invests the big man's wife with such Vixenish and devilish propensities that the spectator is fairly seized with feelings of hatred for that abnormal creature. Note the peck she gives her husband in place of a kiss of goodbye, when the steamer on which he has taken passage is about to sail, and contrast that leave-taking with the parting scene between the neighbor and his wife on a similar occasion. As "My Neighbor," Guy Oliver, meets the requirements fully. That scrap with African natives at Bombassa is a thriller, and so is his flight to the shore. During his flight through the jungle he witnesses a terrific fight between a leopard and a hyena, to which the spectator is also treated, a scene that bears testimony to the wonderful wild animal resources of the Selig Zoo.

Director Campbell furnishes the most realistic ship wreck I have ever seen in moving pictures, in those films. We catch a glimpse of the huge derelict just before the steamer crashes into it. Then we see the awful panic aboard and are given a view of the engine room, where the stokers stick to their work while tons of water fall upon them from above. We watch the passengers jump into the sea by dozens at a time, some of them sinking immediately while others seize rafts or overturned boats to bear them up. Here and there we catch sight of weary swimmers giving up the struggle and disappearing beneath the waves. The big steamer has listed to port until the water is almost up to the rail. Another flash and all that can be seen of the vessel is the captain's bridge, at an angle which shows that the ship has gone down stern first. The captain stays at his post till the waters close over him, and shortly afterwards we see bubbles rising over the spot where he went down. There are various thrills in these films, but this one easily takes first place.

The release date is Monday, Feb. 7, through V-L-S-E, Inc.

as any one of us might be in supreme moments, as many millions of men are at this moment, ready to die for a good cause, a smile on the lips. Can we see him in the screen portrayal as we saw him when reading Dumas' great story? Not at first. There are moments of theatricalism at the outset, but the action warms when the fighting begins, and the fighting is good. There are things in trousers who might as well be vegetables so far as defending honor and principle are concerned, creatures who eat, sleep, reproduce themselves, rot and die, but there are some real men left, and they all sit up and take notice when the sword-play is active in the Kay-Bee production of "D'Artagnan."

Throughout five reels we follow D'Artagnan's career of hair-breath escapes, now stirred by his courage, now in accord with his practical nature, now smiling over his cleverness at intrigue. The impersonation of Orrin Johnson is not striking, but it is adequate and satisfying to a marked degree. The rest of the cast is good enough to make us forget them in our story interest, with some flashes of fine acting where an opportunity is offered. An attractive feature of the presentation is the artistic framework of screen imprints, appropriate and sustaining the mood of the play. A decided success.

"Fatty and Mabel Adrift."

"Fatty and Mabel Adrift" for three reels under the conduct of Roscoe Arbuckle win as no theatrical star of other days ever won in Keystone comedy. The old theatrical stars are like some of the books we used to read—they were good enough once upon a time—but "Fatty" and "Mabel" are real screen artists of today, survivals of a natural selection that brings the fittest to the front. We need not concern ourselves about what they might have been in days gone by in some other art. They are interesting now, and they float about in a medium of expression with which they have long been on intimate terms.

They float about in the picture. Married and settled down in a cottage by the sea, they look out one night of terrible storm with an ill-advised sense of security. The house is very near the sea, and a villainous rival, a disappointed suitor, conspires with some conspirators, who eat dynamite and drink gasoline, to slide the cottage into the ocean. When Fatty and Mabel awake in the morning they are in mid-Ocean, her bed has floated into his room, and it is bumping his in a friendly manner. They splash about until they are enabled to send a note by an intelligent dog for help, and their adventures continue to be highly amusing. The story rises above farce-comedy in both construction and nice finish. It is one of the best Keystone releases shown.

"His Picture in the Papers."

"His Picture in the Papers," a five-reel Fine Art, is a delightful comedy, and nicely balanced, though it would be difficult to find an actor who could successfully carry the leading role as does Douglas Fairbanks. His personality is so all-pervading that he is like the sun when it rises in a sky of morning stars, the light by which some of them glow, the light which causes them all to fade. He is apparently in a class all by himself, at once an athlete of resource and daring, and a subtle interpreter of the amusing side of human nature as revealed in everyday experience by plain ordinary man attempting to be a god.

The play not only affords him just the sort of opportunity that suits his qualification, but it is highly ingenious, cleverly constructed and a work of art in itself. It has an abundance of merit, especially in characterization, outside of the variety of chances it throws in the way of Fairbanks. Back of it is a theme and treatment tremendously convincing, though not thrust upon the audience, the puny and futile efforts of man, "glory, jest and riddle of the world" that he is, in his struggle with relentless environment in misdirected effort until what he has been vainly seeking is thrust upon him unexpectedly. A corking good story, bright subtitles, well handled and finely interpreted, what more can one want?

"He Did and He Didn't."

"He Did and He Didn't," two-reel Keystone, portraying the adventures of Fatty and Mabel, opens with a glimpse of their departure from the Pacific Slope for perilous New Jersey and, incidentally, the Isle of Manhattan. They are soon in trouble as newly-weds through two unexpected visits, one from a former beau who knew Mabel "when she was a little girl" and one from a jumping-jack second-story man impersonated by Al St. John.

The story, like other recent Keystones, preserves the animation of older releases, is replete with action for the "Hee-Haws," while offering an abundance of amusement for minds not primitive. The early scenes, almost purely those of mirthful mental revelation, depicting Fatty's state of mind, his boyish jealousy in a struggle with his big and kind heart, are a source of delight to intelligent members of the audience and make just as much of a hit with the "Hee-Haws." The improvement is welcome, and we all hope it has come to stay. "He Did and He Didn't" is none the less popular that some charming touches of artistry have been incorporated in its structure. A sure success.

"The White Rosette"

A Well-Produced Mutual Masterpicture from the Studios of the American Film Co.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

LOOKING back on this five-reel production the one person in the cast who stands out more impressively than any of the others is Eugenie Forde. The role which she handles is not always a well-balanced one, according to the characterization the author has placed on it, but in so finished a manner is the character of Frieda Carewe interpreted by Miss Forde that it is easy to imagine just such a warp in the nature of a woman of lax principles as the picture presents.

The production, which is in five parts, presents a love story of the eleventh century wherein a knight who loves a lady is pursued by the passion of a woman who is the wife of another. The affair ends in the death of the husband of the woman and the betrothed of the knight, and all through the machinations of the older woman.

When this has come to pass we are taken into the confidences of a love tale of modern times almost identical with the former. The man of the second story awakens in time to an understanding of his own case and is able to stave off certain incidents that might have happened.

The hero of the second story is in the employ of Pierpont Carewe, a railroad magnate. A conspiracy to ruin Carewe affords considerable opportunity for interesting play which makes the wife of Carewe the unwitting tool of her husband's enemy in an attempt to gain power over the man whom she loves but who loves another.

Others of the cast are E. Forrest Taylor and Helen Rosson, who are featured in the production, and Harry Von Meter, Wm. Stowell and Richard La Rene.

The incidents of this production run smoothly; it is a well-dressed picture. It is altogether an enjoyable one and artistic in its method of production.

"Secret Love"

Helen Ware in Sympathetic Adaptation of "That Lass O'Lowries"—Six-Part Bluebird Photoplay.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

DIRECTOR Robert Leonard essayed a difficult task when he made a photoplay out of Frances Hodgson Burnett's "That Lass O'Lowries," a story of the collieries in England. He overcame most of the difficulties confronting him in finding appropriate locations, and his choice of players, physically and artistically capable of portraying the characters engaged in operating an English mine, was judicious. The total result, including as an important factor the acting of Helen Ware and Harry Carey, is a picture of exceptional merit at its best, and one that is passable even in its least memorable moments.

Scene from "Secret Love" (Bluebird).

Many of the scenes were photographed at a coal mine, and, as might be expected, the atmosphere in these is more convincing than that attained in the settings used for a primitive English town. There is the inevitable difference between that which is real and a clever imitation—a very clever imitation, in this instance, for the director achieved some extremely picturesque effects in his street scenes at night, with lights glowing in the windows and doorways of houses, hacks rolling over the uneven cobblestones and rough miners hanging about awaiting a brawl.

For sheer physical excitement, the outcome of sprited acting and expert direction, "Secret Love" touches a high mark in the prolonged fight between Harry Carey as Derrick, the engineer of the mines, and Jack Curtis as Lowrie, the trouble-making bully. It is just such an encounter as might occur between two powerful men, neither one of whom is ready to concede defeat as long as he has strength to lift an arm. The bully, beaten and disgraced in the eyes of his fellows, seeks new opportunities to be avenged and more than once Derrick's life is saved by Lowrie's daughter, who harbors a secret love for the young engineer.

Miss Ware makes a vital person of "that lass o'Lowries," a strong and temperamentally honest pit girl, a true daughter of the crude miner, save that she did not inherit her father's ugly nature. Joan is the first to sympathize with the foolish Liz, who is easily ensnared by the glib promises of the mine owner's promiscuous son, and we may even credit the force of character that makes possible the pit girl's advancement in the social scale, until she is a suitable wife for Derrick. The character is unusual and sympathetic, as interpreted by Miss Ware. In effective contrast is the girlish daughter of the village rector played by Ella Hall, whereas Mr. Curtis is entirely lifelike in his drawing of the brutal Lowrie.

"The Spider"

In the Famous Players Five-Part Subject Pauline Frederick Is Seen to Advantage in Dual Role.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

WITH "The Spider," the five-part production of the Famous Players, Robert Vignola makes his debut as a director for that company. In his initial work he has made an interesting picture. William H Clifford, the head of the company's scenario department, is the writer of the script. One of the notable factors in the subject, and one that as a general rule marks the difference between the original screen story and the stage play, is its short cast. There are but three principals—and around these the interest centers all through the picture. True, one of the three plays a dual role, mother and daughter.

Pauline Frederick is Valerie St. Cyr, the Spider, a woman who has left her husband and infant daughter to accompany Count Du Poissy to Paris, where she is installed in luxurious surroundings. The story opens years later, when the infant is grown to girlhood. Joan, the daughter, is employed in a flower shop. She is engaged to St. Saens, an artist just at the point of "arrival." Valerie, when St. Saens declines to paint her portrait, goes to the painter as a model under an assumed name. As the artist works on a commission for a painting of "Cleopatra" the model falls in love with him. Du Poissy sees Joan and when she repulses his advances and Valerie complains to him that the artist has insulted her—he has spurned her endearments—the Count kidnaps the girl. In a struggle she kills him. Valerie, too late, learns Joan is her daughter. She assumes responsibility for the crime and is executed without the daughter having knowledge of the relationship.

The simultaneous portrayal of mother and daughter is difficult under any circumstances. Miss Frederick has imposed on her the added handicap of interpreting two entirely dissimilar characters—the mother a woman the painting of whose portrait a reputable artist would shy at; the daughter a simple girl of straight living. That Miss Frederick establishes the illusion and maintains it is a tribute to her artistry. "The Spider" is a subject of strong emotions; and it is in pictures of this character that Miss Frederick is at the height of her power.

Thomas Holding is St. Saens. Mr. Holding splendidly portrays the man tempted by the charms of the woman of the gay world, frankly in love with him and accustomed to having her own way with men. It is a finely drawn characterization. Frank Losee is the Count. It is a far cry from his Denman Thompson, as he was last seen, to De Boissy. His conception of the Count is the antithesis of the melodramatic. He plays the part easily, naturally—to the life.

"The Spider" may in all truth be said to be played by a "star cast"; and the staging matches the acting.

"The Sphinx"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production, Featuring Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, Supported by Clever Juveniles.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A COMEDY-DRAMA of the better type, picturing an enjoyable and human episode in the lives of a father, his son and an actress. The latter is at first presumed to be a woman of the vampire sort, as all men love her and she will have none of them. Later the observer is relieved to find her a woman of the sweet, adorable kind, who has simply been misunderstood.

Effie Shannon is all that could be desired in the leading role. She never succeeds in looking very vampirish, it is true, but the weird Egyptian settings and her oriental costume help in the illusion. The father, portrayed by Herbert Kelcey, is already in love with the actress. He sends her flowers and comes nearer being the man of her choice than anyone else.

Then the son, Charles, comes under the spell of the actress. He goes with his sweetheart to the play, where he becomes wildly enamoured of the Sphinx. He forgets his sweetheart and all else but the actress, haunts the stage door and wings, and makes himself a nuisance generally. The son is an artist and induces the Sphinx to pose for him, at which time there is a good scene between the actress and the neglected sweetheart.

There is a strong dramatic situation when the relationship of father and son becomes known. Even the Sphinx had not suspected it. She accepts the father and turns the son back to his true love after many stormy scenes. Charles Compton does some very commendable work in the part of the son. There is perhaps too great a disparity in the ages of the actress and the son, but this is forgotten as the piece proceeds.

Louise Huff and Beatrice Noys are in the supporting cast; also Wm. A. Bechtel, who does much to keep things moving in the studio scenes.

"The Ragamuffin"

A Lasky Drama of Good Quality in Which Blanche Sweet Plays the Title Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITH pictures such as "The Cheat" and "The Golden Chance" the Lasky company has been setting a very high standard for itself of late, and it is not to be expected that each succeeding production will score so emphatically. "The Ragamuffin," starring Blanche Sweet, lacks the compelling force of the two productions just mentioned, nevertheless it is a first-rate picture certain to entertain, even if it does not stir enthusiasm. The technical excellence characteristic of the offerings of the DeMilles and Wilfred Buckland is pleasingly evident and Miss Sweet plays true to form—not the form of her early Biograph days, perhaps, for she has changed considerably since then—but true to the form that has many admirers.

Scene from "The Ragamuffin" (Lasky).

One might study "The Ragamuffin" closely, pronounce it an excellent example of photoplay workmanship, and find no sound reason for its failure to arouse the emotions mroe effectually. Surely, Jenny, the ragamuffin, a poor girl, and, owing to circumstances, a thief, reformed by the first human being who places confidence in her innate integrity, is an appealing character, according to precedents of sentimental drama. There is safe material here and if it does not quite realize expectations, the trouble probably lies in a story of too convenient coincidence. A sophisticated audience—and what audience is not sophisticated?—comes dangerously near to anticipating the action.

It does not require psychic power to foretell the upshot of Jenny's invasion of a wealthy home where a marriageable young man happens to be seated before an open fire at the time of her entrance. Her inevitable reformation begins with his belief in her trustworthiness, and her love, kindled at the same fortunate moment, can have but one conclusion. Of course, Mr. DeMille is far too adroit a craftsman to neglect introducing complications in his romance, and he turns the tables cleverly in giving Jenny an opportunity to prevent the hero from becoming a thief himself; but most of the time one feels that the obstacles are raised only that they may be brushed aside.

The thoroughly human notes in the picture are found in the bits of business giving point and character to many of the scenes; in sympathetic acting and in excellent sub-titles, such as that in which Jenny says to a negro boy who has adopted a stray dog: "Don't get him used to eatin' till I get a job." Tom Forman, Minnette Barrett and Mrs. Lewis McCord are seen to advantage in support of Miss Sweet.

"A Night Out"

Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Farce That Ends in a Gale of Laughter—May Robson Plays a Good Sport Grandmother.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

OFFERED on the V-L-S-E program, this five-reel picture, "A Night Out," made by the Vitagraph Company, will, barring lockjaw, make those who see it laugh. It is especially funny at the close, when the "villain work" part in the plot begins to be cleared off and the residue has a chance to be light hearted in a very true way. Nothing can be wholly funny until it has forgotten every unpleasant thing and is wholly joyous.

The picture features May Robson as Granmum. She is also collaborator in the scenario with C. T. Dazey. George Baker directed it. Granmum is the pal of her two grandsons (Jack Story and Arthur Cozine); but she is henpecked by her daughter (Flora Finch), mother of the boys, straight laced and tyrannical. The old woman is rich, not her daughter; but the deacon (Charles Brown), skinflint grafter, thinks it is the latter. The deacon's son (George Cooper) is a one-dollar sport and a thief. Kate Price is a buxom widow with two daughters (Belle Bruce and Ethel Corcoran) and they do good yeoman service rounding out the situations. Hughie Mack plays keeper of "The Three Lights," a cafe, and the deacon is grafting on him. Eva Taylor, as his daughter, does dances at the cafe. William Shea is a cop.

The deacon, after making love to both Granmum and her bossy daughter, after bleeding Hughie dry, decides to have the "joint" raided. The boys have bought tickets to a special night there and Granmum wants to go. It is she who, by bribing the waiter to get her just one more claret lemonade after twelve, provides the evidence the deacon wants and the cops come piling in. Granmum with the boys escapes; but the papers get the story and report that the boys and their "mother" were there. A lost pocketbook, a lost key, an awful headache next morning (Granmum's), a couple of accusations which the police are interested in, and these capped by a big bouquet from Hughie addressed to "Mrs. Haslem," but meant for Granmum, make a situation that could hardly be improved upon for good fun. The picture seems a bit too long; but the reviewer got a good time while watching it. The closing scenes will surely make it acceptable.

"Should a Baby Die?"

A Five-Reel Screendrama Written by Charles K. Harris and Produced by the Hanover Photoplay Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title of this five-reel photoplay was evidently inspired by a recent case in Chicago, in which a doctor and an unfortunate infant figured. Persons who select "Should a Baby Die?" as part of the program at their favorite moving picture theater will be disappointed, however, if they expect the subject of eugenics to enter prominently into the story. It is barely touched upon, and not until the last reel does the author, Charles K. Harris, take the spectators into his confidence and reveal his reason for giving the picture its name.

During the first reel we learn that a wealthy young girl has married the man of her choice, in spite of her parents' objection to his poverty; that she wrote letters to them which were returned unopened, and, at the beginning of the story, all traces of her have been lost. A wealthy young chap who chooses to go to work in the iron foundry of the unfortunate woman's father is the hero of the tale. One day he saves a young girl from a serious accident and falls in love with her. She is the child of a Hebrew pawnbroker. The Israelite is won over to the match, although at the start he strenuously objects to his daughter's suitor being a Gentile. The usual misunderstandings and cross currents occur in the first four reels; in the last we learn that the heroine is the adopted child of the pawnbroker and the daughter of the unfortunate woman who married for love. She and her husband were killed in an accident and the baby injured. The question, If the infant has been permanently crippled who will take care of her? gives the photoplay its title. The pawnbroker and his wife answer this question by doing everything that love and care can suggest and are rewarded by seeing their adopted daughter grow into a strong and beautiful woman.

Charles K. Harris has told this story in an interesting manner and, for the most part, shown a keen appreciation of dramatic values. In one incident he has struck a false note—the opposition of the Hebrew to the hero upon religious grounds loses its force when the secret of the girl's birth is known. The spectator finds that one of the apparently strongest motives in the play has been used to mislead him.

Scene from "Should a Baby Die?" (Hanover).

Arthur Donaldson gives a fine performance of the pawnbroker. In makeup, action and grasp of the character he shows an understanding and sympathy that is always commendable. Other parts are well played.

"The Drifter"

Five-Reel Gaumont of the Mutual Program, with Alexander Gaden and Lucille Taft in Leading Roles.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is a good leading idea in "The Drifter," one which may have been built up in the scenario. The idea of the author seems to be that of showing how a man may drift, urged on by the powerful force of circumstances, from a favoring environment into one bound to ruin him in the end, from which he is turned just in time by mere accident, the accidental death of another man with whom he was not in close relations. The idea is confirmed in many a human experience, and it admits of many interesting developments, but the treatment in this case is hardly adequate.

There are some well-handled scenes, particularly those of double exposure and large ensembles, but psychology is missing where it would be most effective, and the backgrounds are not selected with that taste which indicates a love of the beautiful. Mr. Gaden does well as the drifter who is converted from divinity student to gambler and back again to the original direction of his training, and Miss Taft looks sweet and pretty at times, but the real honors go to the young lady who impersonates a lively adventuress. Her's is a touch of artistry that brightens up the whole portrayal.

Ovation to Anita King.

Anita King, the Lasky star and Paramount girl, was royally received when she went to Seattle to open the new Coliseum Theater there. A delegation of prominent citizens met her at the train. She edited the motion picture page of one of the newspapers, viewed the public parks, was a guest of the Mayor and managed to have a very busy time. She became so popular that the management of the Coliseum wired Mr. Lasky for permission to have her stay over three days longer. At the conclusion of the three days, the Paramount Theater at Spokane asked her to make them a visit, which she did and then on her way home, stopped off a day each at Tacoma and Portland. She will start rehearsals on her first production very shortly.

"The Crime of Circumstance"

Three-Reel Knickerbocker Star Feature Gives Strong Denunciation of Capital Punishment Based on Circumstantial Evidence.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Knickerbocker Star Feature for February 4th features Lewis J. Cody and Madeleine Travers. The theme of the picture is based primarily on the eternal triangle, and resolves itself clevely into a revelation of what the title indicates. The play has been developed in an artistic manner and with an occasional exception is consistent in its flow of circumstance.

The story brings us into the domestic circle of a district attorney and his pretty young wife. The wife, goaded at the lack of attention shown her by her husband, and, furthermore, yielding to the affections of her husband's brother, one night leaves the scene of a dance at a friend's house and accompanies her brother-in-law to a country inn. A friend acts as chauffer, and in a fight which occurs in the inn is killed accidentally by the man whom he has come to serve. A drunken man, who is a husband and father, and who has been unable to get work, wanders into the scene of the murder after the man and woman have flown. He is arrested, tried and electrocuted on circumstantial evidence, while the guilty ones stand by and suffer it to be so. The attempt to rectify a wrong done when the terrible secret becomes known to the district attorney reveals what a mockery such an attempt must be.

"Ham Takes a Chance"

A One-Reel Kalem Comedy in Which Lloyd V. Hamilton Returns to the Screen After His Accident.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE isn't the slightest doubt that the many admirers of "Ham," the Kalem comedian with the hesitating feet, Kaiserian moustache and retiring smile, will be glad to welcome him back after his serious accident, without regard to the merits of his vehicle. His abbreviated partner, "Bud," has been successful in keeping the fun moving in the photoplays that have had his name in the cast for the last few months, but these two screen actors are at their best in team work. The big fellow just loves to knock the other about, throw him down and walk on him, and the little chap never appears to lose him temper, but bobs up serenely for the next onslaught. There is real humor in their efforts and it is never necessary for them to descend to vulgarity.

"Ham Takes a Chance" is a rapid-fire comedy in which "Ham" gives an exhibition of knife-throwing that is truly marvelous. He and Bud join a small road show, and Bud, of course, is the target when "Ham" displays his skill. The picture is equal to the best of the "Ham" comedies. Ethel Teare, Gus Leonard and Jack MacDermott help make the nonsense palatable.

NEW PRINTS OF BIOGRAPH COMEDIES.

The present demand for good comedies and the many requests from exhibitors for re-issues of the famous Biograph split-reel farce and burlesque comedies has resulted in the Biograph Company offering the General Film Company new prints of these subjects for their exchanges.

Altogether there are fifty-one reels selected, most of which were directed by Mack Sennet, featuring such players as Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Charles H. Murray, Fred Mace, Ford Sterling, Vivian Prescott and other equally popular comedy favorites. These subjects were selected from more than four hundred productions and have been carefully inspected as to negative and comedy quality.

No special release dates have been set on these comedies, nor will they be released in the regular service. Each exchange will be supplied with new prints for their stock and the exhibitors may book one or more reels a week, according to their needs.

"NE'ER DO WELL" OPENS AT PORTOLA THEATER.

"The Ne'er-do-well" opened for an indefinite run at the Portola theater, San Francisco, Sunday, Jan. 23, and from all appearances the production is destined to break the house record. At twelve o'clock noon opening day the line waiting to gain admission to the theater extended up Market street as far as Fourth, and hundreds were turned away during the evening performances.

Sol. L. Lesser who controls "The Ne'er-Do-Well" for the United States left San Francisco for New York on the Overland Limited Saturday, Jan. 22, and was unable to witness the successful opening.

ROBERT EDESON STARS IN PATHE'S "BIG JIM GARRITY."

The cast in Pathe's "Big Jim Garrity," adapted from the A. H. Woods play of the same name, has been selected by George Fitzmaurice, the producer. It comprises Robert Edeson, Carl Harbaugh, Lyster Chambers and Eleanor Woodruff. Mr. Edeson has just finished with another Gold Rooster Play, "The Light That Failed." Carl Harburgh used to appear in Pathe productions when that big concern had a stock company in Jersey City, Lyster Chambers played the villain in "At Bay."

TWO NEWS ITEMS (Lubin), Jan. 24.—The grim side of human existence is truthfully shown in this one-reel drama, written by Julian Louis Lamothe and produced by Edward Sloman. The author has told his story in a novel way and brought out the strong points with telling force. Adda Gleason is earnest and thoroughly competent as the heroine. L. C. Shumway, Jay Morley, Wm. J. Spencer and Adelaide Bronti complete the cast.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 7, 1916 (Selig), Jan. 24.—Chilean Ambassador leaving Washington; U. S. battleship Oklahoma at Rockland, Maine; Duke of Connaught leaving Parliament, Ottawa, Can.; J. A. Russell, 104 years old; Mrs. Pankhurst arriving at New York; Huerta dies at El Paso; novel motor sled, Portland, Ore.; German prisoners in south of France; German soup kettles, Liege, Belgium; trenches near Ypres, Belgium; bundle day, Chicago; C. R. Watson, murdered in Mexico, buried at El Paso; new owner of Boston Braves; Lillian Russell at San Francisco Press Club; an African belle (feature picture); week-end party at Yosemite Valley.

THE COLD FEET GETAWAY (Vitagraph), Jan. 24.—This one-reel comedy will be a treat to poker players and will also amuse those who cannot tell a full house from a bobtail flush. It introduces another of the wonderful inventions of the fertile Itsky, and is clever from start to finish. Harry Fisher and Albert Roccardi have the leading roles. C. Graham Baker wrote the scenario.

SNOOP HOUNDS (Kalem), Jan. 25.—Bud Duncan and Gus Leonard are the snoop hounds. In other words, they are detectives—and deadly rivals. The comic complications are many and as varied as the disguises which the two fly cops assume. A good burlesque comedy. Jack MacDermott and Ethel Teare are in the cast.

THE FABLE OF "FLORA AND ADOLPH AND A HOME GONE WRONG" (Essanay), Jan. 26.—The humorous side of a divorce case is dished up in the best Ade style in this one-reel fable. The subtitles overflow with wit and wisdom, and Charles J. Stine, Fred Wagner and Alice Edwards are cast for the judge and the mismated pair.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, No. 8, 1916 (Selig), Jan. 27.—Dead bodies of two Mexican bandits, Juarez, Mexico; transporting $5,000,000 in gold, Charlestown, Mass.; Belgium school children send presents to President Wilson; houseboat "Summer Girl" at New Orleans; playing hockey, Boston; New York "newsies" and Mayor Mitchel; new airship guns, Nancy, France; flood, Joliet, Ill.; feature item, friendship of monkey and cat; enacting the scenes of the hold-up of the Cook's Tours office, Chicago. This last item is both interesting and novel to a marked degree.

A SPECIAL DELIVERY (Vim), Jan. 27.—"Babe" Hardy as "Plump" and Billy Ruge as "Runt" are the leading funmakers in this one-reel farce, produced by the new Vim company. It bears a striking resemblance to the other Vim comedies—a twin brother, in fact—and is a succession of quick-moving antics by the entire cast.

CURED (Lubin), Jan. 29.—A Billie Reeves comedy, written by Mark Swan and directed by Earle Metcalfe. Scenes are laid in a doctor's office where Reeves, posing as a physician, has several amusing experiences with patients. Carrie Reynolds, Arthur Matthews and Jack Delson are in the cast. A fairly entertaining offering.

A REFORMATION DELAYED (Lubin), Jan. 31.—The conclusion of this drama by Julian Louis Lamothe and Melvin Mayo is especially well arranged to carry a surprise. At a masquerade ball two clever thieves are saved from arrest by the host's daughter and given a chance to reform. The picture is sincerely acted by William J. Spencer, Francelia Billington, Ronald Bradbury and Helen Wolcott. It is worth showing.

THE FATE OF AMERICA (No. 14 of the "Ventures of Marguerite" Series) (Kalem), Jan. 28.—This one-reel drama is the first of three episodes connected with an attempt to invade the United States, and was written by Howard Irving Young. The photoplay is full of action, and Marguerite becomes involved in a series of exciting adventures. Richard Purdon, Arthur Albertson, Robert Ellis, H. G. Hockey and Mae Miksecek are the star's support.

TOO CLEVER BY HALF (Vitagraph), Jan. 28.—This picture was released in place of "Peace at Any Price." It is a one-reel comedy with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in the leading roles, their principal support being furnished by a dictagraph. In the expert hands of the Drews the photoplay supplies fifteen minutes of excellent fun.

TAPPED WIRES (No. 64 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Jan. 29.—A band of crooks make things lively for Helen, during the action of this one-reel drama. They bind her in the station; she frees herself, hops into an auto and races after the train upon which the crooks escaped. Events move rapidly from then on, the end coming when the auto takes a leap into space and its occupants land in eternity. Robin Adair, George Robinson, Glen Gano and Franklin Hall are Miss Gibson's partners in the cast.

EVANGELIST (Lubin), Jan. 24.—In its original form this four-reel photoplay was a stage play, written by the well-known English dramatist, Sir Henry Arthur Jones. The plot is full of power and has been adapted to the screen with excellent results. Gladys Hanson has the leading female role and does it ample justice. The production and cast are both up to the mark. A review of this picture appeared in the issue of Jan. 22, page 621.

THE DRAGOMAN (Lubin), Jan. 24.—Edward Sloman is the author and producer of this two-reel drama, the scenes of which are laid in Egypt and the United States. The plot is highly romantic and involves an Arab guide, his sister, and American tourist and a young American girl. It is a tale of betrayal and vengeance and is effectively handled by Mr. Sloman. L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Adda Gleason and Violet MacMillan are seen to advantage in the leading roles.

TOM MARTIN—A MAN (Selig), Jan. 24.—Robert Mantell once starred in a play called "Monbars," in which he was bitten by a mad dog and the audience saw him cauterize the wound with a hot iron. This situation occurs in "Tom Martin—a Man," but the author, Wallace C. Clinton, has sacrificed the 'happy ending" in order to reach a big dramatic moment. The hero of the photoplay is a blacksmith. Finding that his drastic treatment has failed, he chains himself to his anvil, securing his fetters with a red-hot rivet, that he may not harm his sweetheart when madness overcomes him. Guy Oliver gives a fine performance of the title role. Two reels.

FOLLY (Essanay), Jan. 25.—H. Tipton Steck has written an interesting two-reel drama that is marred by an occasional false note. The story contains an excellent lesson to young wives and has been given a careful production. But what mother would make the unforgivable mistake of naming her child Folly? Darwin Karr fills every requirement of the leading male role and Ann Kirk is also properly cast. Richardson Cotton and Randall McAllister are useful members of the cast.

STRONGER THAN WOMAN'S WILL (Biograph), Jan. 26.—The story in this three-part Biograph drama is constructed along unexpected lines as the character of the selfish daughter of a mill owner is developed. There are strong scenes in the last reel, showing how the woman is kept from reducing the wages of the mill employees. Charles H. Mailes, Hector V. Sarno, G. Raymond Nye and Vera Sisson are in the cast.

THE VILLAIN WORSHIPPER (No. 10 of the "Stinagree" Series) (Kalem), Jan. 26.—This episode of the Hornung serial is filled with fresh material. A young chap, who admires the highwayman, gets himself up in the "Stinagree" style and attempts to rival the exploits of his model. The highwayman gets him out of a serious difficulty and sends him home to his mother. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Jan. 22, page 619.

THE EMBODIED THOUGHT (Lubin), Jan. 27.—Two Hebrews and their families and a pair of thieves are the chief characters in this quite unusual three-part drama, written by Julian Louis Lamothe and directed by Edward Sloman. Many of the scenes are presented in a dry-goods store where one of the partners falls in love with a pretty model, never guessing that she covets his money. For the main situation of the story, in which the spirit of a dead man attempts to communicate with the living, the author quotes a passage from "The Law of Psychic Phenomena" to the effect that a phantom, or ghost, is the embodiment of an idea or thought. The picture is moderately interesting as acted by Edward Shoman, Hazel Neece, Melvin Mayo, Adelaide Bronti, L. C. Shumway and George Routh.

THE RUSE (Vitagraph), Jan. 29.—Written and directed by Eugene Mullin, this three-part story of business and society will be liked. In the leading roles are Joseph Kilgour, Harry Morey and Naomi Childers. The subject was reviewed in the issue of Jan. 15.

THE HEART BREAKERS (Knickerbocker), Jan. 28.—Jackie Saunders is the luminary of this three-reel Star Feature drama. It is a well sustained comedy, considering its length, and the story is bright and interesting. The scenes are varied, many of them having been taken at the seashore. Miss Saunders is vivacious and attractive in the character of an heiress who passes herself off as her maid, in order to be loved for herself alone. The rest of the cast is capable. The picture was produced by the Hockhimer Brothers.

DESTINY (Essanay), Jan. 29.—Wm. J. Bryan would, unquestionably, indorse this picture. It contains a powerful temperance lecture and is a rattling good picture as well. It tells the story of a bright young man whose one failing is drink. His life is nearly wrecked through his weakness, but he wins out at the finish. Bryant Washburn, Ruth Stonehouse and Charles J. Stine are the leaders of a satisfactory cast.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE SERPENT (Jan. 23).—A five-reel vampire picture with Theda Bara. That it is a well made picture cannot be denied; but it is a unwholesome offering and a vulgar one.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE UPSTART (Rolfe), Feb. 7.—In this satirical comedy, far removed from the conventional photoplay, George LeGuere gives a clever characterization of an erratic young idealist. Marguerite Snow is well cast as the discontented wife of a priggish minister and James Lackaye has comedy opportunities in the role of a judge. The picture is a humorous treatment of love and divorce.

Mutual Film Corporation.

BUNGLING BILL, BURGLAR (Vogue), Jan. 27.—A low comedy number, featuring Paddy McGuire as a burglar, who upsets life in a hotel. The action is fast and furious and all of a rough house character. It has moments of humor, but is not unusual except in the great rush of action throughout.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 20, 'ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS" (Gaumont), Jan. 30.—This film presents several interesting views of St. Paul and Minneapolis. On the same reel with "Keeping Up with the Joneses."

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont).—In this number of the McGinnises escapades, Pa McGinnis goes fishing in an alligator pond. His experiences with Ma at his side passing encouraging remarks are very amusing.

AROUND THE WORLD (Cub), Jan. 28.—This comedy will be found very acceptable. The comedian, George Ovey, in his usual role of Jerry, does very good work. Jerry changes the position of two baby carriages and their occupants, one white and the other black. In making his escape he takes advantage of a stray aeroplane, which is wrecked on the Cannibal Islands. One objectionable scene in the picture, we understood, was to be eliminated. This would leave the production a thoroughly enjoyable one.

HE THOUGHT HE WENT TO WAR (Vogue), Jan. 30.—A farce comedy in which the center of attraction has a remarkable dream. In the dream he has various unpleasant experiences as a soldier. This will be found quite an amusing picture.

A CLEVER COLLIE'S COME BACK (Falstaff), Feb. 1.—A comedy subject in which a collie dog is featured. The young married couple move to the country, where the discontented dog performs so many stunts at night that they fear ghosts and move back. The dog is well trained. The number will perhaps have special appeal to children.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S WEDDING EVE (Beauty), Feb. 2.—This is a farce comedy of an indifferent sort. Its people are distinctly not of the better class—a husband spending his evenings at poker, a prospective husband alluded to as "the fatted calf" who is to be "led to the slaughter," spends one of the last evenings of his single life in a drinking dive, and so on.

HARRY'S HAPPY HONEYMOON (Falstaff), Feb. 3.—In this comedy number, a young couple, just married, evade their friends and take the train. On board this a baby is left on their hands, which leads to amusing complications, among them a charge of kidnapping. The number is not very strong in plot, but quite pleasing.

SAMMY VS. CUPID (Vogue), Feb. 3.—Sammy Burns is featured in this low comedy number. He starts out for a stroll and has numerous adventures. Some of the scenes are taken in a gymnasium and a burlesque wrestling match is featured. Rough, but laughable in spots.

MAMMY'S ROSE (American), Feb. 4.—A one-reel picture founded on the well-known song, "Mighty lak a Rose." This will please the average audience, particularly because of its relationship to the song. The picture is not a remarkable one in any respect, and is at times inconsistent, but is pleasant in sentiment.

THE LAIRD O'KNEES (Beauty), Feb. 6.—Good entertainment can be obtained from this farce comedy, in which two vaudeville artists down on their luck fall briefly in pleasant places. A mistake made by a rich widow at the pier where she is expecting a Laird from Scotland establishes an amusing situation.

WON BY ONE (Beauty), Feb. 9.—A comedy number, featuring Neva Gerber, Hugh Bennet, Dick Rosson and others. The scenes occur in a country hotel and the plot is of a slightly burlesque character. It concerns a theft of jewels and the efforts of some amateur detectives to trace the thief. This does not get a very strong hold on the interest and is only fairly humorous.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE WHITE ROSETTE (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), Feb. 5.—Made at the studios of the American Film Co., this five-reel production will be found to be an excellent sample of the Mutual Masterpicture de luxe. The finished acting of Eugenie Forde is one of the attractive points of the picture. The story presents a love tale first of ancient times and then of modern times, but identical in character, with the exception of the climax. A production that will please any audience by way of its artistic handling.

THE DRIFTER (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), Feb. 7.—A five-reel production from the Gaumont studios. The story, written by John Clymer, treats of a young divinity student who has a propensity for racetrack gambling, and is expelled from the college before his term is out. Later he turns over a new leaf, and on his way home he takes the clothes from a minister, his exact double who has been killed in a railway wreck, and impersonates him, filling his office in a new pastorate with satisfaction. The story is somewhat improbable, but is at the same time entertaining.

LILLO OF THE SULU SEAS (American), Feb. 8.—A three-part drama featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison. The story is a pleasant one of a romantic type, but not especially well constructed, and is therefore not at all times clear. It treats of the fortunes of a young man who was sent by his father to the south seas to get an understanding of the oyster industry. While there he falls in love with the daughter of an oyster gatherer, and later returns again to make her his wife.

THE SPIRIT OF THE GAME (Thanhouser), Feb. 9.—A three-reel college story, written by Clinton H. Stag. Morris Foster appears as a disconsolate substitute, who thinks he is to be left out of the game. The captain of the team goes on a "celebration" and the sub. is called upon to take his place next day. He wins the game by a touchdown at the last moment, and later gets the girl. The story is a pleasing one and handled with a fair degree of strength. It has no very dramatic moments, but there is a real football game pictured, taken on the grounds of Columbia University.

ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN (Mustang), Feb. 11.—Jack Richardson is featured in this three-part production, the moral of which works out very nicely in the end. The story portrays a rough western type of man being converted to the gospel through the sweet personality of the minister's daughter. When the minister's son, who has turned out to be a bandit, robs the stage coach, the convict sends a letter to the sheriff telling him to call at his cottage and he will find the robber and his plunder. Having found the cache of the thief he takes possession of its contents and gives himself up, in place of the other man.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 6, 1916 (Pathe), Jan. 19.—One of the interesting items of this issue is a view of the submarine E2 which was destroyed by an internal explosion in the Brooklyn Navy Yards. Another touches on the subject of "preparedness," giving us glimpses of the U. S. Army and Navy. The various methods of educating the public how to prevent the distribution of the "grip" germ is instructive as well as interesting.

PATHE NEWS NO. 7, 1916 (Pathe), Jan. 22.—Views of the new blast furnaces put into operation by the Government, at Le Creusot, France, are interesting. There is also shown a primitive method of spearing eels through the ice, on the Shrewsbury River, at Red Bank, N. J., after the manner of the Eskimos. The ice harvest at Cazenovia Lake, N. Y., is also interesting.

HEADDRESSES OF HOLLAND (Photocolor), Jan. 24.—A quaint and interesting study of the various headdresses used in different parts of Holland. This is on the same reel with "Au Sable Chasm."

AU SABLE CHASM (Picturesque America) (Globe), Jan. 24.—Showing many beautiful views of one of the beauty spots in New York State and of the East.

SHOOTING AT RANDOM (Starlight), Jan. 29.—Another Heine and Louie comedy which is amusing. The plots of these comedies do not differ very materially at any time, but each one being treated in a somewhat different manner usually assures good entertainment for those who like farce comedy. The closing scenes show the blowing up of a building by a bomb placed near it through the vengeful disposition of Louie.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

HAZEL KIRKE (Gold Rooster Play), Jan. 28.—This is a pleasing five-part version of the old play by Steele MacKaye, featuring Pearl White, with a supporting cast consisting of William Riley Hatch, Bruce McRae and Creighton Hale. The play has been produced by the Whartons, and will be found satisfactory in this respect. Pearl White does not fit as easily into the role of Hazel Kirke as she has into other roles that we have seen her play. Nevertheless the play is pleasing withal.

THE RED CIRCLE, NO. 7 ("The Third Degree") (Balboa), Jan. 29.—"The Third Degree" is the title of this episode of "The Red Circle." In it Alma La Salle (Lillian West) is put through the third degee on the accusation of a theft of jewelry from the ball at the seaside inn where she has stolen among other things a necklace from June Travis. The jewels are discovered at last hidden in the heels of a pair of old shoes with which Alma is on her way to "Smiling Sam," head of a gang of thieves. In this number the Red Circle again influences June Travis, and she liberates a monkey from his organ-grinding master who maltreats him. An interesting episode.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Chapter 6, "Helen's Wild Ride"), Jan. 31.—"Helen's Wild Ride" is the title of this thrilling chapter of the serial. In her wild ride down the railroad track on a hand car she jumps on the back of the train on which a couple of safe robbers are trying to escape. Later in the game she leaps from a rising drawbridge. This latter feat is an especially daring one, and the wonder is that the young woman escapes without as much as a sprained ankle.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

HER NAUGHTY EYES (L-KO), Feb. 9.—Another version of the familiar plot in which the leading lady has a winking eye. In this case Alice Howell is the victim of a hypnotist, who causes her to flirt with every man she meets, including the minister when he is marrying her to another. This is not new but quite amusing.

ACROBATIC ACT (Powers), Feb. 10.—A half reel, featuring Miss Leizel, a well-known vaudeville performer, in work on the rings, rope and trapeze. The act is a good one of its kind.

LEAP AND LOOK THEREAFTER (Joker), Feb. 12.—One of the funniest low comedies made by this company for some time. Mrs. Bill Durham's efforts to cure her husband of smoking bring about laughable complications. Gale Henry and Wm. Franey play the leads. A good number of the type.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK, NO. 8 (Uncle Sam, Fisherman, Postmaster, Health Officer) (Powers), Feb. 12.—An exceptionally entertaining series of glimpses into the government seal preserves in Alaska and the way whales are harpooned and cut up. Also contains instructive views taken in the post office and public health departments.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

SEPTEMBER MOURNING (L-KO), Feb. 6.—A two-reel ecentric number, featuring Gertrude Selby, H. Pathe Lehrman, Gene Rogers and Chas. Wininger. The action of the first reel contains some laughable moments, centering about the usual park flirtations. In the second reel the two artists invade the grounds of a girls' school, where they watch the girls dancing and try to choose a subject to pose for September Morn. This, of course, is not in the best of tone, but it escapes any pronounced vulgarity and has enough amusing features to keep the observer interested. Some of the settings in the second reel are quite picturesque.

A KNIGHT OF THE RANGE (Red Feather Photo-Plays), Feb. 7.—A five-reel melodrama of the West with plenty of dash and rough riding. It is a pretty well made picture full of unexpected thrills. Harry Carey has the lead and makes a fine hero. Oline Golden is wholly acceptable in the role of ingenuous heroine. It is wholesome and we count it a picture to please the hearts of the majority.

THE INSURANCE SWINDLERS (Universal Special), Feb. 7.—No. 9 of the "Graft" Series. The weirdest and most sensational of this series thus far offered. Tom Larnigan, while investigating the insurance trust, is locked in a vault. He is taken out, presumably dead, and placed in a casket. Later Dorothy jars the casket so that it breaks the suspended animation with which he is afflicted, and restores him to life. He then paralyses the head of the trust by his appearance at a board meeting. The instalment is interesting, though hardly plausible. The situations are well handled.

YUST FROM SWEDEN (Gold Seal), Feb. 8.—A three-reel number, by Robert Z. Leonard, featuring the author and Ella Hall. They first appear as a couple just arrived from Sweden. He gets a job in a lumber camp. The two characters are finely handled. Marc Robbins is also pleasing as Orvell and Rex de Roselli as the foreman. The development is natural and holds the interest well. The foreman fells a tree upon Karl and while the latter is bedfast from the injuries tries to steal his wife. The situation is saved by the arrival of the manager. This is close to the soil and well presented in every way.

THE HIGH FLIERS (Victor), Feb. 9.—A two-reel number, featuring Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby. This follows the style of George Ade's fables and is amusing throughout. The two leading characters, Miss High Life and Mr. Dude, are well portrayed, also those of Miss Plain and Mr. Honest. The first couple marries and comes to grief because they try to live in a $200 flat on $20 a week; the second couple fares better. The subtitles are full of modern slang and make entertaining reading. The close is not as strong as might have been expected, but the offering as a whole is pleasing.

THE LIVING LIE (Laemmle), Feb. 10.—A three-reel number, by F. McGrew Willis, featuring Mina Cunard, Malcolm Blevins and Jock Livingston. This deals with the life of a poor girl, born in bad surroundings. She becomes an artist's model, but longs for a better life. She eventually marries a doctor and then turns back to the old life in a moment of weakness. The influence of their sick child later reunites her with her husband. This lacks certain convincing qualities and goes over familiar situations. The settings are very ordinary. It is on the whole hardly up to the average.

THE TRAIL OF THE WILD WOLF (Imp), Feb. 11.—A fine two-reel offering of the outdoor type, featuring Sydell Dowling, Rollis Clarke, Edith Roberts, Frank Smith and Paul Panzer. The snow scenes are well pictured and good suspense is maintained in the last reel when the Wolf abducts Doris and is brought to his death by the hero after a hard hand-to-hand combat. A well presented subject of a familiar, but enjoyable, type.

V-L-S-E, Inc., Specials

THE GODS OF FATE (Lubin), Jan. 24.—In addition to presenting an entertaining dramatic story, this five-part picture, from a scenario by Daniel Carson Goodman, offers a number of spectacular scenes in showing a factory fire and a train wreck. Both are extremely well handled. Numbered in a well balanced cast are Richard Buhler, Rosetta Brice, Francis Joyner and William H. Turner.

A NIGHT OUT (Vitagraph), Jan. 31.—A five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon farce on the melodrama plan. Mae Robeson is featured; but the cast is the best this studio has to offer, and couldn't be beaten very easily. Flora Finch, Hughie Mack, Kate Price, William Shea and a goodly bunch of juveniles are seen. The ending is especially amusing. It is a bit too long, but makes a good offering, and the laughs, not infrequent at worst, grow better toward the close.

SOULS IN BONDAGE (Lubin), Jan. 31.—This picture is very well acted by Nance O'Neil and those in her support and should draw, despite one obvious defect in the development of Daniel Carson Goodman's story and a few scenes in the concluding reel that might better be eliminated. The plot follows the lives of two sisters of contrasting character, and the production contains much interesting detail.

World Film Corporation.

THE BALLET GIRL (Brady), Jan. 24.—Alice Brady is the very pleasing star of this adaptation of Compton MacKenzie's novel, "Carnival." She gives a capital performance in a picture of varying merit, based on the tragedy of a dancer and the career of her daughter. Holbrook Blinn, co-star with Miss Brady, has a part of few possibilities. The character of a clown is sympathetically acted by Alec B. Francis.

LOVE'S CROSSED TRAIL (Triumph-Equitable), Jan. 31.—A mystery melodrama, directed by Joseph A. Golden and featuring Marie Empress in the role of the partner of the proprietor of a gambling house. The mystery centers around a murder and is not explained until the last reel. The story lacks plausibility in its development, but offers some exciting incidents. Miss Empress is only moderately effective on the screen.

Anna Held Photoplay Completed

Elaborate Film Presentation of International Stage Success "Madame la Presidente" to Be Next Morosco Release on Paramount Program.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the New York offices of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company that Anna Held's initial subject, "Madame La Presidente," has been completed at the Los Angeles studios of this company and will be released on the Paramount Program, February 7th.

In its endeavors to give the inimitable Held a suitable vehicle in which to make her first screen appearance, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company searched the market thoroughly for a subject with the idea in mind of obtaining a desirable play regardless of expense. As a result, through Sanger & Jordan, the exact story for Miss Held was purchased at a price which ranks foremost among the large expenditures made for the film rights to various stage successes during the past year. This then, represents an unusual expense already involved before the actual work of production had even been commenced. Staged with a lavish hand, Director Lloyd has succeeded in giving the production a distinct French atmosphere as displayed in the furniture used, in the replication of the immensely tall doors of the French chambers of Justice, the curious imported telephone and other items of detail all of which go to make up the desired realism. A large and accomplished cast is also presented in support of Miss Held, including such well-known artists as Forrest Stanley, Herbert Standing, Page Peters, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Helen Eddy, Howard Davies and Dick LaStrange.

"Madame La Presidente" is adapted from the play of the same name by Maurice Hennequin and Pierre Veber. In Europe the play enjoyed remarkable success and in this country it was adapted to the American stage by Jose G. Levy and staged by George Marion. It was first produced with Fannie Ward in the title role, here on Sept. 15, 1913, when it appeared on Broadway with great success.

MANY OFFERS FOR "NE'ER DO WELL."

According to reports from the San Francisco office of the All Star Features Distributors, the ten act production of Rex Beach's "Ne'er-Do-Well" is in big demand. The above concern who have recently bought the production from the Selig Co. are receiving many offers, a majority of which are from the legitimate houses who want to rent the production outright. "Of course the State right buyer is also in evidence," said Mr. Lesser, president of the company, "but I will not close for any territory until my arrival in New York."

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE CRIME OF CIRCUMSTANCE" (Knickerbocker).

The Knickerbocker Star Features Company will release a strong three-part feature, February 4, "The Crime of Circumstance," featuring Lewis J. Cody, a popular screen star. The story is based on a popular sentiment of today which condemns too much reliance on circumstantial evidence in cases where the death sentence is possible.

"The Crime of Circumstance" shows a young attorney successfully bringing about the death sentence of a man innocent of crime; the helpless victim goes to his death, while the unfolding of the drama shows that the crime was committed by the brother of the prosecuting attorney. There are many strong dramatic situations, much heart interest and a plot that will hold to the end. The release day is February 4th, on the General Film program.

KALEM'S HELEN MAKES "A PERILOUS SWING."

The combination of riding feats and railroad thrills which has been promised followers of the Kalem "Hazards of Helen" pictures should serve to make this popular series of even greater interest than in the past. It enables fresh material to be introduced into the stories and it also becomes possible to lift the stories into new channels.

"The Perilous Swing" is an excellent example of the combination of the popular railroad feats with the new element of interest. Helen Gibson contributes some daring riding in this episode of the series when she is pursuing a gang sought by the sheriff. There are a number of lesser thrills leading up to the smashing climax. The culprits reach the drawbridge before Helen, and after binding the gate-tender, raise the bridge. Helen has spurred her horse to breakneck speed and as she reaches the bridge and it rises there is a tense moment as she struggles to bring the horse to a stop, succeeding only on the very brink of the river bank.

Then the big punch comes. Unaware of its danger the Limited is seen rushing along towards the bridge. Helen faces a terrible problem, but her mind works quickly. Taking up the lariat at her saddle, she whirls it to the end of the bridge girder in mid-air. She then slips from the saddle and swings through space and succeeds in getting a hold on a bridge girder and crawling down to the gate-tender's shack she quickly lowers the bridge just as the train thunders across.

"THE RIGHT TO LIVE" (United).

A four reel production entitled "The Right to Live" will be released by the United Photo-Plays Co. of Chicago on February 1. The locale and basis of this picture are entirely Chicago. The wet and dry question is gone into, and special attention is given to the Sunday closing of saloons which was recently put in force for the first time in Chicago's history. A capable company have worked in this production under the direction of C. H. Ferrell, formerly connected with the Kalem company.

GYPSY O'BRIEN WITH METRO.

Gypsy O'Brien, who has a leading role in support of Mme. Petrova, in "The Soul Market," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay, makes her screen debut in this feature. It has been found from parts of the picture which have been run off at the Popular Plays and Players studio, that Miss O'Brien screens exceedingly well. She is a young woman noted for her singular beauty and Titian hair. Miss O'Brien began her stage career as one of the famous beauties of the London Gaiety Theater company in London. Within a season she was playing the ingenue leads.

PATHE'S "IRON CLAW" HAS SOME GREAT FLOOD SCENES.

In the forthcoming Pathe serial "The Iron Claw" director Edward Jose secured some very remarkable flood effects. He hired an island off the coast of South Carolina and with the aid of a gang of negro workmen built a dike which shut out the ocean from a little bay. Here he put up some buildings and then at the proper time broke the dike and let the water sweep over his houses. The result was that his flood scenes are remarkably realistic, and furnish some real thrills.

METRO ACTORS INVADE PRINCESS THEATER.

More than two hundred persons were used on the stage and in the auditorium of the Princess Theater, in Thirty-ninth street, New York City, to make the sensational theater scenes for "The Soul Market," the forthcoming Metro wonderplay in which Mme. Petrova is starred. Not only were scenes photographed of the audience, but interesting and pertinent scenes were staged in the boxes, dressing rooms, foyer and on the stage. A group of chorus girls from the Hippodrome were used in the stage scenes, and the audience was made up of supernumeraries in evening clothes. The scenes were directed by Francis J. Grandon and Virtus Scott, both of whom recently joined the Metro staff of directors producing with the Popular Plays and Players.

COLLIER IN "GETTING MARRIED."

William Collier, well-known stage comedian signed for the Triangle by the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has nearly completed his Mack Sennett comedy, "Getting Married," and is preparing to devote all his time to a new five-reel Kay-Bee feature which Walter Edwards is directing for Ince. Since his arrival on the Coast Collier has been dividing his time between the two studios. "Buster," Collier's step-son, has convinced Ince that he has ability far beyond his fourteen years, and is to have an important part in a forthcoming Kay-Bee production.

Scene from "Getting Married" (Triangle-Keystone).

"THE DRAGNET" (Selig).

"The Dragnet," a Selig mutiple reel drama, produced by Frank Beal from the story written by Willard Mack, is to be released in General Film Service on Monday, February 7th. A noteworthy cast of Selig stars will enact in this drama, including Harry Mestayer, Wheeler Oakman, Al W. Filson and Vivian Reed.

"The Dragnet" is a story of the underworld in which James Durkin, carrying the stigma of a prison term, resolves to do the right thing and finally comes into his own. There is a desperate hand to hand fight between a detective and the persecuted Durkin, and how the detective's hard heart is finally touched, contributes to the heart interest of a drama, which is replete with fine photography, talented acting and tense situations.

Harry Mestayer in the role of "James Durkin" does much the best work in his motion picture career, and Wheeler Oakman, Al W. Filson and Vivian Reed uphold the standards of talented motion picture acting.

"The Dragnet" carries a strong moral lesson and is worthy of presentation in any moving picture theater.

"THE PRIMITIVE STRAIN" (Essanay).

In "The Primitive Strain," a three-act drama of the north country, Essanay is continuing its policy of producing several stories of red-blooded, out-door life which afford an opportunity for romantic color and spectacular settings.

Edward Arnold and Nell Craig take the leads. The father of the young minister on his death bed confesses to his son that in the great north the boy has a half sister, daughter of a French-Canadian girl whom he wronged.

The young clergyman sets out to find her and make restitution, as was his father's last wish. He builds a mission near a dance hall and gambling den saloon. He meets the dance hall queen, Nell Craig, and is infatuated.

The saloon keeper is incensed when the inhabitants of the settlement prefer the mission to his saloon on Sunday and to keep the girl from attending services he locks her in her room and attacks her. She escapes to the cabin of the minister and tells the story of her life. She is his sister. The clergyman—now nothing more than a man willing to avenge his woman kind—kills the saloon keeper. When he returns to his cabin the girl is dead.

KLEINE FINISHES "THE FINAL CURTAIN" (Kleine-Edison).

"The Final Curtain," a story of business and the theater, formerly announced as "Our Lady of Laughter," has been set for release on the Kleine-Edison Program as the initial February production scheduled for February 2nd.

"The Final Curtain" features Arthur Hoops and Alma Hanlon, and aside from the splendid work of this pair, the subject is characterized by a story of unusual power destined to appeal universally to all classes of photoplay enthusiasts. The central theme is the inevitable clash that occurs when the "artistic temperament" meets so-called "solid respectability," through the marriage of a dainty Broadway star to a magnet of the wool trust. In the role of the star, Miss Hanlon does what is unquestionably the greatest work of her career, ably supported by Arthur Hoops, whose portrayal of the business man is a delightful bit of character delineation.

"BUNGLING BILL, BURGLAR" (Vogue).

Jack Dillon, resourceful Vogue director, has produced another screaming one-reel Vogue comedy, entitled "Bungling Bill, Burglar," to be released January 27th. The play shows one big thrilling day in the life of Bill, in which he bungles his job so artistically that at bedtime he swears off on "bungling" entirely. His efforts to increase his treasury and "pad his pockets" result in the complete disturbance of a hotel full of people and particularly the plans of a pair of Newlyweds. Bill's attempt to rob a pretty bad article of his ill-gotten gains results in a terrific chase, during which Director Dillon arranges a number of exciting accidents.

Arthur Moon plays the part of the Western bad man against whose bags of gold Bill's bungling operations are directed. Patty McQuire is the grotesque, laughable Bill—always comic, always in a predicament, always apparently very serious. Russ Powell and Pricilla Dean enliven the action with some very fast work as the Newlyweds. One of their first exciting affairs is to elope, steal a minster and compel him to marry them in a speeding Ford—an exceedingly dangerous effort as the minister seemed to fully appreciate because he collapsed as soon as the ceremony was over.

"THE TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE" (Lasky).

Produced by Cecil B. De Mille, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," with Charlotte Walker as the star, in the role in which she achieved her greatest success on the dramatic stage, will be released by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company on the Paramount Program on February 14th.

The photoplay written by Mr. De Mille, is based on the dramatic version by Eugene Walter from the novel by John Fox, Jr.

Scene from "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" (Lasky).

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" is a romance of the Cumberland mountains. Before Miss Walker appeared in the stage version under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger, she spent some time in the locale of the play.

In the cast of Lasky players who appear in support of Miss Walker are Theodore Roberts, Thomas Meighan and Earl Fox.

"BUNGLE'S RAINY DAY" (Vim).

"Bungles," the funniest of film fun-makers, makes his first appearance in the Vim comedies, on the General Film Program, February 10, in "Bungle's Rainy Day." "Bungles" is Fernandea Perez, recently from Italy, where he terminated a contract with an Italian Film Co., on account of the war. He was formerly known as "Tweedledum." In "Bungle's Rainy Day," we find Bungles studying the problem of carrying an umbrella for the protection of his new suit. His deliberations result in grave misfortunes, which grow in intensity until he is forced to forget his despair as he finds his sweetheart has jilted him. In his pursuit for his sweetheart, consternation reigns generally, piano movers are upset, enemies of Bungles rally their forces, and Bungles gets a beating out by a terrific drenching by the Fire Department.

Bungles learns that it never rains but it pours, and he learns how all might have been averted by a quick decision on the matter of an umbrella. Bungles is well supported by Elsie MacLeod. This film is but the forerunner of a series of funny Vim Comedies in which Bungles will have an important place.

LEWIS J. CODY, IN KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

Lewis J. Cody, who has had a long and very successful stage career, will be seen in a current release of the Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The House of Mystery." He is especially remembered for his masterly work in "Pierre of the Plains," "The Virginian" and "Jimmie Valentine." One of his most successful screen dramas was "The Mating," in which he starred with Bessie Barriscale. In "The House of Mystery," Mr. Cody plays the part of the young prosecuting attorney, whose "butterfly wife," easily lured into the way of the bright lights by a wayward brother of the attorney, finds themselves in a mesh of circumstances which result in crime. Mr. Cody acquits himself with honors in the drama, which promises to be one of the strongest releases on the General Film Program January 21, from the Knickerbocker Star Features.

GADEN PLAYS TWO ROLES IN LATEST GARRICK FEATURE.

Alexander Gaden, leading man with the Jacksonville Gaumon Company, under the direction of Richard Garrick, plays two roles in Gaumont's latest feature, "The Drifter," to be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, February 7. The story is swiftly moving and unique, telling of two men and a girl—men who, both having been trained for the ministry, and both almost exactly alike in feature, fall in love with the same woman. And the woman finds love in her heart for both men, before the story is told.

Mr. Gaden, in the early part of the picture, is shown as a college boy, later, as the other character of the story, a young minister, and after that in ministerial garb only in the personality of the first man. The role taxes the artistry of Mr. Gaden to the fullest, but those who are familiar with his finnished methods, and intelligent impersonations are assured of a thoughtful, gifted dual characterization.

Scenes taken at Tulane University, in New Orleans, show the actor in picturesque setting, surrounded by students in the school who found picture-making well suited to their inclinations. And when after being privileged to talk, for the camera, to lovely Miss Lucille Taft, who plays the heroine in the story, the boys were each paid for their share in the scene, they voted unanimously to desert "law" for good, and take up screen acting.

Mr. Gaden is also shown in many interesting scenes in "The Drifter" taken at the New Orleans racetrack, scenes that are at all times the real thing in races, horse-flesh and enthusiasm. Director Garrick was shown every consideration by members of the sporting fraternity in New Orleans, and incidents of track and race shown in the forthcoming picture should prove of exceptional value.

PATHE'S "THE HORRORS OF WAR" MAKING FINE RECORDS.

Pathe's "The Horrors of War" has proved to be one of the strongest bookers of the past twelve months. Exhibitors who booked it for one day have had to arrange for longer runs owing to the great interest it has aroused. Manager Holah of Pathe's Cincinnati office, for instance, writes that the Alhambra, a large theater in the downtown district of that city, has booked it for a two weeks' solid run after the management had personally inspected it. Mr. Weigel, the well-known Cincinnati exhibitor, booked it at once on review, and will advertise the picture heavily. Mr. Holah reports that the Cincinnati exhibitors are unanimous in saying that it is the greatest war picture ever shown in Cincinnati.

BOOKING "THE BATTLES OF A NATION."

The Buffalo Times Motion Picture Department announces that it has just released to exhibitors "The Battles of a Nation" which, heretofore, has only been seen in the first-class legitimate houses throughout the country. John F. Miller (Mr. Norman E. Mack's personal representative) has decided to book the exhibitors direct from this territory, which will cover greater New York, New Jersey, Delaware and the New England states.

The exhibitors will be permitted, even encouraged, to view "The Battle of a Nation" in their projection room before booking. The picture is playing this week at the Majestic theater in Brooklyn, having opened there last Sunday to overwhelming business.

"BEHIND CLOSED DOORS" NOW "LOVE'S CROSS ROADS."

"Behind Closed Doors," the Equitable production which was to have been released Monday, January 31st, and in which Marie Empress and Wright Huntington co-star, will make its screen bow under an entirely new title.

The picture is to be known as "Love's Cross Roads," and will go over the Equitable program as the regular release and with no change other than the title. The change in title was made necessary by reason of the releasing, two weeks ago, by another producing company, of a feature which parallels the story, in a way, and which bore a title rather similar.

"Behind Closed Doors" consequently will be known as "Love's Cross Roads."

"HOP, THE DEVIL'S BREW" (Bluebird).

Government officials co-operated with the Smalleys in producing "Hop, the Devil's Brew," for Bluebird Photoplays. The basis of the scenario, furnished by Lois Weber, is the fight customs officials are making against opium smuggling and the traffic in other habit-forming drugs, as related in the writing of Rufus Steele, in the Saturday Evening Post and other papers.

Because they believe the multiple reeler will serve an excellent purpose in exposing the smugglers and their illicit traffic, Revenue officials in San Francisco gave every aid they could in making the scenes authentic and truly representative of the exciting conditions surrounding the desperate occupation.

The fight against the opium smugglers affords opportunity for numerous scenes and situations of a highly sensational nature. Very faithfully and true to actual conditions and circumstances are they recorded. Lively encounters and sensational "chase" incidents are pictured along the water front and among the wharves of San Francisco. Scenes incident to the search of an ocean liner for contraband drugs are shown, and the method and manner in which the smugglers secrete and deliver to Chinatown their store of opium are vividly protrayed.

The raid upon Chinatown, during which the Revenue officer discovers his wife in an opium smoking parlor and learns for the first time that she is a drug addict; pictures of San Francisco's underworld, and the evil workings of the "opium gang" are recorded in authentic scenes of a most sensational nature.

The Smalleys directed the picture and Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber enact the principal characters. These favorites have roles excellently suited to their artistic abilities, always best exemplified when they have scenes together, as in the instance of "Hop, the Devil's Brew."

Lois Weber pictures the opium-stricken wife with a fine sense of the fitness of things; she makes the character a woman of noble purposes, stultified by the deady effects of opium, and still refrains from the temptation, always at hand, to overpicture the debasing results of narcotics. As the Revenue officer Phillips Smalley has a fine, manly part, robust and resolute, quite suited to both his physical and artistic qualifications.

"THE DEFECTIVE DETECTIVE."

The Cub Comedy release for February 4 entitled "The Defective Detective," presents as its featured comedian Billy Armstrong, who makes in this picture his initial appearance as a David Horsley player. Armstrong will be remembered as a former associate of Charles Chaplin, having played opposite that comedian in "By the Sea," "The Bank" and other Essanay productions.

The introduction of an Armstrong picture as a Cub release makes the first break in the long chain of productions of this brand made with George Ovey as the star. Ovey will, of course, continue to be featured in a company of his own, but his pictures will be alternated in the release chart for the time being with those made by the Armstrong company.

Scene from "The Defective Detective" (Cub).

In the nature of its productions "The Defective Detective" is different than past Cub releases with George Ovey. The methods of the two comedians are entirely dissimilar so that a different type of comedy vehicle is required for each.

In "The Defective Detective" Armstrong is supported by an excellent comedy cast, including Tommy Hayes, an English comedian of considerable reputation, and Grace Gibson, who plays the leading feminine part.

Using the first subject as a criterion, the Armstrong releases should prove as popular as those featuring George Ovey.

Want Better Censorship

Toronto Exchange Managers Call on Provincial Treasurer and Press Abolishment of Clause in Censorship Act Relating to Recall of Films Already Passed—General Grievances Also Taken Up—Who Participated.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—A concerted move against the censorship situation in Ontario was made on Friday, January 21st, when the managers of four Toronto exchanges, accompanied by M. H. Ludwig, who is the legal adviser for the moving picture interests in Toronto, appeared before Provincial Treasurer, Hon. T. W. McGarry, to press for the abolishment of the clause in The Theaters and Cinematographs Act, which permits the Ontario censors to recall a film for further consideration after it has been once approved by the board.

Complaints were registered regarding the attitude of the censors and general grievances were aired. In answer, the government official promised to make observations with a view to changes, if needed, either in the act or in the board of censors. Mr. McGarry assured the film men that the personnel of the censor board would be speedily changed if the necessity arose.

The delegation was made up of Mr. P. Kauffman of the Famous Players Film Service, Mr. Lennon of the Canadian Univeral's Toronto branch, Mr. Z. M. Harris, manager of the Toronto branch of the Mutual, and Mr. D. Cooper of the Cooper Film Exchange, representing Kleine features.

TWO EXHIBITORS GET WARNING SENTENCES.

Recorder Geoffrion Imposes Limit Fine for Evasion of New Tax Law.

The first convictions for failure on the part of Montreal moving picture exhibitors to observe the new civic by-law, providing for the payment of one-cent tax by everyone entering a place of amusement have been recorded and the offenders were givn the maximum penalty of a fine of $40 and costs or two months in prison. The two theaters against which convictions were secured were the Maple Leaf, 390 St. Lawrence street, and the Midway Photo-Play, 335 St. Lawrence street. Recorder Geoffrion imposed the sentences, which were intended to stand as a warning to all amusement managers in Montreal.

WILL REMODEL OLD THEATER

Articles of incorporation for Ontario have been taken out for the Regent Theater Company, Toronto, with a capitalization of $250,000, for the purpose of rebuilding of the Majestic theater, Adelaide street West, for moving picture purposes.

It is planned to spend at least $75,000 in remodeling the house, which will be known in the future as The Imperial. The present building will be purchased outright from its present owner, A. J. Small, by the new company, one member of which is E. L. Ruddy, head of E. L. Ruddy Co., Limited, the sign and bill posting firm.

The plans include the removal of the entire upper gallery and relaying of the orchestra floor at a different angle. Work will be started immediately.

BUILD TORONTO NEST.

With the arrival of Mr. Spitzer of New York, representing the Blue Bird Photo-Plays, Inc., in Toronto, formal announcement was made from the head office of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, Toronto, that Blue Bird features for Canada would be purchased and booked by the Universal, although a separate head office for the Blue Bird interests would be opened in the Toronto office of the Universal and distinct branches would be opened in Montreal and in the Canadian West.

Mr. Claire Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal, will supervise the new company, but there will also be a traveling manager who will look after the bookings and general interest of Blue Bird films in Canada. A comprehensive advertising and publicity campaign in Canada is contemplated and this will probably be handled by the publicity department of the Canadian Universal.

Additions to Mutual Staff.

Jack Droy, one of the oldest moving picture men in Toronto, has left the Famous Players Feature Film Service in order to become booking manager with the local branch of the Mutual.

Maurice Kaffman and J. Davidson, the latter having been with the Grand theater, North Bay, Ontario, have been engaged as traveling representatives for the Mutual in the Ontario territory.

Children Can Come With Guardians.

After summoning several local moving picture theater managers for permitting the admission of children with adults other than their parents into their theaters, Chief of Police Whatley of Hamilton, Ontario, found, upon communicating with the Provincial authorities at Toronto, that the law permitted any adult to take a child into a moving picture house for a performance.

Another House in Tiny Village.

H. Kinley, formerly associated with Manager Winn of the Strand of Newmarket, Ontario, has started in opposition to that house by opening the Patricia theater in the same town which has a population of about 1,200. Mr. Kinley, whose new theater seats 350, has decided to use Mutual releases.

Manager Spence in Charge of Globe

An interesting change in the downtown theater circles of Toronto, Ontario, is that Manager W. Spence, formerly in charge of His Majesty's theater, Yonge street, is now manager of the recently opened Globe on Queen street. Metro and Fox features are being show at the Globe, which has been securing a nice share of business.

WASHINGTON DRY LAW HELPS.

Spokane Exhibitors Pleased With Substantial Increase.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Most Spokane theater managers are reporting increases in attendance since the inception of the Washington dry law Jan. 1. In spite of the zero weather, which has interfered with a full realization of their anticipations in this regard, they report satisfactory increases.

"The weather has been a drawback," said Manager Will T. Reed of the Casino, "yet our business shows a marked increase. We look to see the dry law bring good business to the picture shows, as we have argued all along that the nickles and dimes that once went to the saloons will now go to the picture shows."

Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty is enthusiastic. He said: "Our business is just about all we can handle since the first of the year. There has been a very obvious increase in attendance. We are looking for business to improve still more."

The Clemmer, with a well established clientele, feels the effects of the dry law less than the other theaters, but business is reported good at the home of the Paramount features.

"Our business is good and is picking up right along," said H. J. Brown of the Hippodrome, a picture theater which runs two vaudeville acts.

E. Clarke Walker, manager of the Pantages, a vaudeville house which is running "The Girl and the Game," said: "Our business is fully 25 per cent. better than it was for the same weeks in 1915. Attendance at all our shows is better and we attribute it to the fact that people who formerly loitered in the saloons now come to the theater."

SPOKANE EXHIBITORS WANT NO FEDERAL BOARD.

Federal censorship of moving pictures has no friends among Spokane picture theater managers. The Amusement Managers' association of Spokane, comprising all the theater managers, but chiefly the picture show men, because there are more of them, has gone on record as opposed to the so-called Smith-Hughes bill now being threshed out before a house committee at Washington.

At a meeting of the managers a resolution of opposition was adopted and Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater, and president of the association, wired the committee and the eastern Washington delegation the expression of the local managers.

"PEACE" FILM DRAWS MANY.

Patriotic and enthusiastic audiences have been witnessing J. Stuart Blackton's preparedness film, "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Clemmer theater, which has now been running five days to date.

Capacity houses with standing room taken have witnessed the production daily. It is reported that the pictures are thrilling spectators as "The Birth of a Nation" never did.

On the opening night patriotic fever ran nigh and was stimulated by the presence of 100 members of the state guard.

Fight Film Appeal Lost

In Boston, the Court of Appeals Decides Against Kalisthenic Exhibition Company Which Sued to Compel the Customs Collector at Portland to Admit Films for Club Shows and Private Exhibitions—Opinion of the Court.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspon dent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS. — Under a decision handed down by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals here on Friday, January 28, the moving picture films of the Jess Willard-Jack Johnson heavyweight championship battle, fought at Havana, Cuba, are excluded from the United States. Judges Dodge and Bingham concurred with Judge Putnam, who wrote the opinion based upon the general federal law barring fight films from the county.

The case is the outgrowth of an attempt by the Kalisthenic Exhibition Company, Inc., to import the films at Portland, Me. The films were held by W. T. Emmons, the United States Customs Collector at Portland, who was acting under the statutes. A request for an injunction restraining Collector Willis from interfering with the films, was filed with Judge Hale of the United States District Court by the Kalisthenic corporation, but the judge refused the petition and the corporation appealed the case.

In its decision the Circuit Court of Appeals referred to the existing federal law and its accepted interpretation and added: "It is plain that the film in any form, whether positive or negative, is barred until there has been some positive action on the part of the Treasury Department to regulate its use in some manner which the public morals would justify and support."

STATESMAN ACTS IN FILM.

Leading Citizens Make Film to Advertise Savings Bank Life Insurance.

Former Governor David I. Walsh has been landed upon the screen as an aid to a venture to which he pledged his support while he was chief executive of Massachusetts.

The former governor is appearing in a film which was taken for the express purpose of advertising the benefits to be derived from savings bank life insurance. Savings bank life insurance, which is said to be of incalculable benefit to the working classes, was one of his pet projects and mainly through his efforts a resolve was passed by the Massachusetts legislature last year authorizing the expenditure of $2,500 for the purpose of giving publicity to this kind of insurance.

Miss Alice Grady, secretary to Louis D. Brandeis, President Wilson's latest appointee to the United States Supreme Bench, wrote the scenario. Besides former Governor Walsh, several state officials and other prominent people of Massachusetts are included in the cast.

The success of this experiment is likely to establish a precedent for several similar movements in the state of Massachusetts and is another instance of the tremendous educational value and powerful influence of the film upon the minds of the public.

BAD BILL DIES.

The old "Birth of a Nation" bill, which was introduced into the legislature this year as an added section to the anti-African dodger petition, died a natural death. The proponents of the measure drew such a drastic bill that the hearing before the joint legislative committee on judiciary at the State House was a joke, although there was a respectable representation of film men on hand to meet the issue if the occasion arose.

Senator Robert Washburn of Worcester assailed the censorship section of the bill. He said it was dangerous as it not only served to create a censorship of films, but the theater and the press as well. Senator Washburn, who is looked upon in the legislature as a "king of satire," made it appear that ridicule was almost as essential to existence as the atmosphere.

Senator Washburn's text was taken up by Grenville S. MacFarland, New England representative of the Hearst interests, who elaborated upon the remarks of the Senator from Worcester and pointed out the dangers which were contained in that section of the bill. James H. Devlin, Jr., assistant corporation counsel of the city of Boston; Howard H. Trask, of Revere, and Attorney J. Albert Brackett, counsel for several theatrical interests, also attacked the censorship feature of the petition.

Trade Notes for Exchanges.

"The Strange Case of Mary Page" has been booked by the Scollay Square, Olympia and Fenway theaters in Boston and Mr. Lawrence J. Hacking, New England manager of the General Film Company, believes it will be one of the most popular films ever shown in this territory.

Manager Victor Morris of the New Orpheum is booking World features, and so are Mr. J. Berthuiame of the Star at Brookfield, Mass., and William C. Hewitt of the Mahaive theater at Great Barrington, Mass. Manager Frank Vine of the Boston office of the World Film is very much pleased with the way his releases are going. Manager J. H. Wood of the Globe theater at Brockton, Mass.; Robert H. McNeill of Dover, N. H.; Joseph Donahue of the Park theater at Woonsocket, R. I., have signed up for Equitable features, which are also distributed through Mr. Vine's office.

Having a Good Time in the South.

Cards received by his Boston friends indicate that Louis B. Mayer, New England head of the American Feature Film Company, distributors of Metro features in this territory, is enjoying his trip to Florida. Mr. Mayer is on a tour of the sunny state with his wife and a party of the company's stockholders. He was badly in need of a rest and from all accounts the trip South has done him a world of good. He is expected back at his desk in a few days.

Samuel Gardner with Loew's South End.

Samuel Gardner, who formerly had charge of the poster department in the Boston office of the American Feature Film, is now assistant manager of Loew's South End theater.

Tremont Theater Burns.

The Tremont theater, one of Boston's most famous playhouses and the one in which the "Birth of a Nation" was shown in this city, was destroyed by fire last Sunday, Jan. 23. The cause of the fire has not been ascertained and the state police are investigating it. A hearing was held by Deputy Chief Neal and among those present were Frank V. Orvitt, asistant treasurer of the theater; John Tighe, the watchman; George Morgan, the electrician; Wire Commissioner Cole and Captain O'Brien of the Boston fire department, but nothing conclusive regarding the origin of the blaze was uncovered. The theater is expected to be reopened about the first of April.

Glover Ware Buys the Peabody Theater.

Glover Ware, who owns the Larcon theater at Beverly, Mass., has bought out the Peabody theater at Peabody, Mass., and will hereafter conduct both theaters. The Peabody theater was formerly owned and operated by Kenney & Eckler. Mr. Ware change the name of the theater to the Strand on Monday and as such it will continue to be known.

The Troubles of Blue Sky.

Doing a lot of circus advertising for a moving picture house with an enterprising manager may be a good job and it may not. It all depends on what you run up against. At least that is what Chief Blue Sky says and this is why. The chief, who is a full-blooded redskin, is employed by the proprietor of an East Boston moving picture house to trod the streets in his full regalia, feather headpiece and all to advertise the theater.

Ordinarily the chief is docile enough, but he started out on his trip one day last week and a crowd of children trailed in his wake, shouting and whooping in Indian fashion. The chief trudged along paving no attention to them until the bolder ones commenced to torment him. The chief stood it as long as he could and then suddenly hurled his tomahawk at the ground at the same time giving verbal expression to his feelings.

The steel blade of the tomahawk broke and a piece of it struck a youngster in the head inflicting two slight scalp wounds. The chief was carted off to the police station, but after telling his story he was allowed to go. He hasn't yet decided whether he likes the job or not, but the police have decided he will cut out carrying a tomahawk.

Fine Picture House by Summer Lake

Acme Amusement Company Holds Trumps With Its Two Houses in Winthrop—A Winter One in Business Town, a Summer One by Lake.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WINTHROP, MAINE. — Perhaps the largest string of moving picture houses in central Maine is that of the Acme Amusement Company, which has theaters at Kennebunk, Kennebunkport, Vinalhaven, Belgrade, Hallowell and Winthrop.

At Winthrop the company has two theaters, one for the summer on the shores of the lake, and the other in the business section of the town, which is used during the winter months. The lake theater is one of the finest places of the kind in the state. It is a handsomely designed structure, 75 by 90 feet, the interior of hardwood finish, attractively appointed, with plenty of exits and a stage 10 by 20. Five hundred people can be seated. For the convenience of the cottagers and others who come from the various parts of the lake, the town has erected a solid cement pier, 100 feet long, enabling boats to land directly at the dcors of the theaters. No, gentle reader, Venice has nothing on the Acme Amusement Company at its Winthrop, Maine, summer house.

OPERATORS' LICENSE.

Moving picture operators in Maine are now required to have a license in order to operate their machines. These licenses are granted on passing an examination, which, in Bangor, may be given, by the city electrician and chief of the fire department. The fee for operator's licenses varies throughout the state from $1.00 to $5.00.

TWO INTERESTING PROJECTS.

Among the new corporations recently organized in Maine are these two of especial interest to the moving picture fraternity in Maine:

Flynn & Co., organized at Portland, with capital stock authorized at $10,000, all common. The president and treasurer is Milton F. Flynn, of Haverhill, Mass.; the clerk is James R. Connellan, Portland; the directors are the above and Michael J. Garrity of Portland. This concern is organized to purchase, lease and operate theatrical and amusement enterprises and moving picture halls.

Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company organized at Portland. Its capital stock is $25,000, of which half is common and half preferred. Par value, $100. Nothing is paid in. T. L. Croteau, of Portland, in president; A. B. Farnum, of Portland, is treasurer; J. E. Manter, of South Portland, is clerk. The directors are A. B. Croteau, A. B. Farnum, of Portland; George I. Soule, of South Portland; C. G. Trapp and C. W. Hamilton, of Portland. This company will manufacture films, lenses and cameras and conduct a moving picture business.

Bangor.

Manager Murray, of the Morse Winter Garden of Bangor, has introduced the Movie Ball to Bangor, motion pictures while dancing. The floor is fine and the pictures excellent, making a combination that appeals to all.

Buy Old Ship for Iceberg Wreck.

One of Maine's most famous ships, the old coast guard cutter Woodbury, which was condemned and sold by the government some time ago, has been bought by a moving picture concern, which will have her taken into the far north to be run against an iceberg, while cameras click out a record of the scene.

Would Make Good Sheriff.

Manager O. B. Fernandez, of the New Bijou theater at Old Town, has announced himself as a candidate for the Republican nomination for sheriff in Penobscot county. He has a lot of friends in the county and they are all out to help him win.

LEO LEVISON IN NEWARK.

Popular Pittsburgh Manager Assumes Charge of Newark World Office.

By Jacob K. Kalter (501 Century Bldg.), Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEWARK, N. J.—With the arrival here of Leo F. Levison, who takes charge of the New Jersey branch of the World Film, Newark has another expert film manager. Mr. Levison comes here from the Pittsburgh office of the World Film, where he had an excellent reputation as a defender of the rights of the exhibitors. At Pittsburgh it was largely through his efforts that the well-known Screen Club was formed. At the time of his appointment to the Newark office, Mr. Levison held the position of secretary.

Early last year Mr. Levison went to Dallas, Texas, to manage the Fox Film at that location. He afterward returned to Pittsburgh and on Dec. 8, 1915 opened up the new Pittsburgh office of the New Film Corporation, at 127 Fourth avenue, that city. After putting the enterprise on a firm basis, Mr. Levison came to Newark to take charge of this office.

Mr. Levison has already demonstrated his ability to make good. He reported to the Newark correspondent of the Moving Picture World that he has already booked many new contracts for World and Equitable programs.

LEE GAINSBORG, UNIVERSAL.

Lee Gainsborg, the popular manager of the Newark branch of the Universal, probably holds the record here for continuous service with one concern. He has been with the Universal since it opened its New York exchange, nearly five years ago, and has managed the Newark office for the past seventeen months.

Lee Gainsborg

Mr. Gainsborg started out as a solicitor from the old exchange on East Fourteenth street, New York, until by hard and consistent work, he became the right-hand man of Mr. M. H. Hoffman, who at that time was in charge of the exchange.

When the Newark office was left vacant by the promotion of Mr. Goldstein to the management of one of the New York exchanges, it was with a feeling of confidence in his ability to make good, that Mr. Hoffman selected Mr. Gainsborg to fill that important post.

He attributes his success to the wonderful organization of the Universal, and especially to the ability of Mr. Hoffman, whose protege he has been since the earlier days of the industry. Mr. Gainsborg is well liked by all exhibitors, and is known to fill every promise he makes.

FOX'S NEW MANAGER.

Another new exchange manager in Newark is David Rosengarten, who has assumed the management of the local office of the Fox Corporation. Previous to his advent here Mr. Rosengarten was connected with the Cosmos Feature Film Company. His last conection prior to coming here was with the Fox Brooklyn office. The Newark office of the Fox is at 43 Strand theater building.

MERBACH WITH ROYAL.

Otto Merbach joined the staff of the Royal Feature Film Company at 288 Market street on Jan. 21 as chief booker. Merbach was with the original Royal company when it first organized about four years ago, and later was connected with the Mutual's Newark office. Besides booking, Merbach will act as outside representative.

GREATER N. Y. DISSOLVED.

The amalgamation of the Greater New York Film Rental Company and the General Film has left the Greater New York concern's Newark office vacant. The Newark office was the scene of much hustling on Jan. 21, the date that the consolidation of the two firms went into effect. The belongings of the film rental company were all removed to the office of the General, at 16-18 Beaver street. When asked by the Newark correspondent of the World about their future plans, both John Blum and Charles Sanders, former managers of the Greater New York, stated that as yet they were undecided about their future course. The consolidation of these two important film exchanges is the talk of the town.

Film Stars at Park Place.

Several film stars from the Thanhouser studios of New Rochelle, N. Y., appeared personally Wednesday evening, Jan. 19, at Proctor's Park Place theater. Florence La Badie, Kathryn Adams, Edwin Stanley and Claude Cooper were present. They all made interesting little speeches which recived the marked approval of the audience. Manager Raymond S. Sayre of the Park Place also announced that he had several other novelties for his patrons, which will soon be published. The personal presence of film stars is always an attraction here and is eagerly awaited for by film fans.

Passaic Theater Destroyed.

Passaic, N. J.—The Passaic Opera house, owned by John J. Hobin, at 217 Washington place, Passaic, was destroyed in the big conflagration that visited Passaic Jan. 19. The loss to the theater was $65,000, and the insurance of $21,000 just covers the mortgage on the place. Mr. Hobin stated that he had no plans for building on the property. The fire was the biggest in the history of Passaic, the total damage exceeding $365,000.

Moody Plans New House.

The Orient Amusement Company, of which John E. Moody is president, has filed plans in the office of the clerk of Jersey City for the erection of a new motion picture house at 650 Ocean avenue, in the Greenville section of Jersey City. The approximate cost of the show house is placed at $27,000, and work upon it will commence shortly.

No Permit in Lancaster

Mayor Trout Recalls Permission to Show "The Birth of a Nation"—Thinks Lancaster's Most Distinguished Son Criminally Libeled by Picture—Exhibitor Had Gone to Much Expense in Preparation.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

LANCASTER, PA.—Much comment has been aroused in Lancaster, Pa., due to Mayor Trout's eleventh-hour revocation of a license permitting the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Yecker, manager of Lancaster's leading theater, was informed by the mayor that he would not only lose his amusement license by showing the film, but that he would render himself open to prosecution for "criminal libel on the memory of Thaddeus Stevens," the great commoner of Civil War and reconstruction times. This is the most remarkable of all objections to the Griffith production.

Mr. Yecker declares that before booking the attraction at his playhouse, he obtained the consent of the mayor, whereupon he advertised the film extensively, spending a large sum of money, and engaging numerous additional employes at the theater.

Mayor Trout says that he was moved to withdraw his permission after an interview with City Solicitor Bernard J. Meyers. He seeks to justify his change in mind by asserting that he had been deluged with protests by leading citizens when it became known that the picture was going to show, with its scarcely veiled implications against a "distinguished citizen of Lancaster," who died shortly after the war. Mayor Trout's critics reply that the only persons to protest the film were some colored gentlemen and Congressman W. W. Griest.

J. Selzer Buys Bell Theater.

The Bell theater, Fifth and Cambria streets, Philadelphia, was recently sold by Messrs. Levick and Waldo to J. Selzer, former manager of the Great Southern theater, 2929 S. Third street, for a consideration said to have been in the neighborhood of $28,000.

Harry Burman Controls the Great Southern.

Harry Burman, vice-president of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League, wishes to announce that he is now in full control of the Great Southern theater, in conjunction with the Penn theater.

Another Film Company Incorporates.

The People's Profit Film Corporation has recently been granted a charter under the laws of the State of Delaware for the purpose of engaging in the manufacture of moving picture films. The new concern has been capitalized at $150,000, George H. Jones, David C. Herndon and George F. Baright, all of New York City, being the principal incorporators.

SHAKE-UP AMONG MANAGERS.

D. J. Lynch, formerly with the New Film and Electric Theater Supply company, has accepted a position as manager of the Fairmount Feature Film exchange, and Mr. Greenberg has succeeded him in his former position. Mr. Lynch succeeds George W. Bennethum, who has decided to devote his entire energies to the Kleine Poster and Vaudeville Agency, in which concern he is part owner. It may be said at this point that many extensive improvements are being made to the home of the Fairmount exchange, 1304 Vine street. He is succeeded in his former position by Mr. Kinsler. Mr. Intineranti has given up his late position to become a canvasser for the General Film company.

DeSandro Buys the Hoffman.

The Hoffman house, a well known Philadelphia moving picture theater, located at 3911 North Fifth street, has recently been sold by Mrs. Hoffman to M. Charles de Sandro. Mr. de Sandro is a well known musician and for many years has directed orchestras in every section of the country. People patronizing his house will be assured of hearing some mighty fine music, as he intends to install an orchestra second to none in the city, and will personally conduct the musical program.

Charles Hildinger in Town.

Charles Hildinger, well known moving picture exhibitor of Trenton, N. J., was a recent visitor to Philadelphia and while here paid his respects to the local trade. He purchased some new equipment at the Swaab Film Service, including a new 6B motor-driven projecting machine.

A New House in Easton, Md.

J. E. Cahill, well known exhibitor of this section, has recently opened a new theater in Easton, Md., and announces that he has experienced considerable success with his latest undertaking. He purchased much of his equipment from local supply houses.

Business Notes of Interest.

The National Circuit of Theaters, Inc., was recently granted a charter under the laws of the state of Delaware for the purpose of conducting places of amusement, such as moving picture and vaudeville theaters. Joseph F. Curtin, Samuel B. Howard and S. A. Anderson, all of New York City, are the principal incorporators.

H. Schwalbe has experienced considerable success since he purchased the booking privileges for Triangle films in this city. At the time of the purchase Triangle pictures were being exhibited in only four local moving picture theaters and these were located in the center of the city within a radius of several squares of each other. The number of theaters showing these films has been increased to fourteen, including some of the leading theaters in the city.

More Censorship Fines in Pennsylvania

In Pittsburgh Thirteen Managers of Theaters and Exchanges Have to Pay Fines —Some of the Most Prominent Concerns Involved.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The censors again ran amuck in Pittsburg during the past week, securing the conviction of thirteen managers of local theaters and film exchanges for alleged violations of the state censorship laws. The fines totaled over $1,000, ranging from $5 to $325 each.

There were twenty-two informations made before Magistrate Louis Alpern by Inspectors Mrs. E. C. Niver and Miss Florence E. Wrenshall, charging that films unapproved and forbidden were being shown. The state inspectors were represented by Ellis P. Oberholtzer, secretary of the State Board of Censors, and Deputy Attorney General Horace W. Davis.

In the case of the exchanges, it was testified that certain pictures were exhibited without regard for the proper number of eliminations made by the board. This latest raid only serves to bring out that censorship, through excessive and unreasonable eliminations and long delays in passing upon films, has resulted in a deplorable state of affairs in Pennsylvania.

The convictions, which included a number of the most prominent theaters and exchanges, were as follows: Joseph Shirlboll, Metro Film Service, $50; M. F. Gibbons, George Kleine, $100 (two charges); Jacob Glowcki, Palonia theater, 1209 Carson street, South Side, $20 (two charges); C. C. McKibbon, Triangle Film Corporation, $50 (two charges); A. W. McClelland, New Film Company, $325 (three charges); B. F. Lyon, Pathe exchange, $25; J. Caspar, Regent theater, Penn avenue, $10 (two charges); C. W. Eckhard, Fox Film Corporation, $50; W. T. Kinson, Mutual Film Corporation, $30 (two charges); L. Snitzer, Greater New York Film Rental Company, $75 (two charges); J. S. Behan, J. Frank Hatch Film Company, $25; Charles Schwerin, World Film Corporation, $250 (three charges); F. Flynn, Eureka Film Exchange, $10 (two charges).

Cameraphone to Be Better.

The Cameraphone theater, East End, Pittsburgh, Pa., which was damaged by fire on January 20, is being rapidly repaired and handsomely remodeled by its owner, H. B. Kester. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is supposed to have been caused by defective wiring. The destruction of the house was averted by the early arrival of the firemen, who deluged the building with water, thereby confining the blaze to small proportions, but badly damaging the organ and also the wall decorations, carpets and some of the seats. The total loss was about $6,500. The work of refinishing is being pushed with all possible speed, as the house enjoys a large and exclusive patronage that must be taken care of. No expense is being spared in making the interior even more attractive than before the fire.

Famous Players Shake Up.

The general offices of the Famous Players service, now located in Pittsburgh, with P. S. Nordlie in charge, this week report a number of important changes recently in the executive departments of its various branches. The following appointments have been made:

J. B. Jameson, formerly of Seattle, Wash., has been named as manager of the Pittsburgh exchange, and has already assumed his new duties. A. W. Davis, who was temporarily in charge of the local office during the past two weeks, has been made manager of the Chicago office. W. Laws, formerly manager of the Cincinnati office, has been transferred to Indianapolis. It is understood that Russell Schmidt, assistant manager of the Pittsburgh exchange, is to occupy a like position at Indianapolis. W. C. Bachmeyer, who was in charge of the local office from the time it was opened until about six weeks ago, will be manager of the Cincinnati branch. Mr. Bachmeyer came here from Cincinnati. D. L. Dennison, who opened the Detroit office three months ago, but who was transferred to Chicago temporarily, is back in Detroit.

Buy Brushton Photoplay.

The Brushton Photoplay, Brushton avenue, Pittsburgh, has been purchased from I. W. Shearer by Horner Bros., who took possession of the house immediately and are remodeling it. New Simplex machines are being installed by Hollis & Smith, brass railings are being put in and the interior otherwise improved. Redecorating throughout is enhancing the appearance of the house, inside and out. The new owners purchased the lot, measuring 100x130 feet, on which the theater is located, and contemplate erecting a larger house soon.

Drinking Cup and Towel

Washington, D. C., Exhibitors May Not Have Common Drinking Cups or Towels for Patrons—Cups Must Be Sterilized Each Time Used—Roller Towels Also Must Go—Rule Went Into Force on February 1.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent to Moving Picture World.

THE Washington correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has received a large number of inquiries concerning the new sterile towel and drinking cup regulations which went into effect on February 1, and has asked to have the provisions explained in these columns. The regulation regarding the common use of a drinking glass provides that "No person shall provide or expose any cup, mug, drinking glass or similar article for use by the public generally in any place under his control, or allow any cup, mug, drinking glass, or similar article to be provided or exposed or used there, unless such cup, mug, drinking glass or other article has been thoroughly sterilized since last used."

The regulation prohibiting the common use of towels provides that "No person shall provide or expose any towel or similar article for use by the public generally in any place under his control, or allow any towel or similar article to be provided, exposed or used there, unless such towel or similar article has been thoroughly cleansed since last used."

It has been noticed that in practically all theaters in the District of Columbia there is provided for the convenience of the general public the usual ice water tank which has an exceptionally large number of patrons especially in the summer time. Accompanying each is the so-called "common drinking glass." It is incumbent upon the theater managers to dispense with the latter for failure to do so (unless he sees to it that the glass is thoroughly sterilized after each time it is used) will make him subject to section 2 of the regulation which provides that "Any person who violates any of the provisions of this regulation shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $25."

This same punishment goes with violations of the clause prohibiting the common use of towels—this means goodby to the old, familiar roller towel which has been in use for many years.

It is suggested that in order to avoid possible complications, all of those who have not already done so, put in the standard cabinets of sanitary drinking cups from which cups can be had by the insertion of a penny in the slot, and, if it is desired to continue the usual toilet facilities, to install a paper towel cabinet.

PAYS TEN PER CENT DIVIDEND.

It is interesting to note that despite the hue and cry of bad business in the District of Columbia, the Crandall Amusement Company has announced the payment of a ten per cent. divided on February 1. Conditions have begun to brighten up a bit in Washington. The weather is exceptionally fine and motion picture theater patrons do not hesitate to stand outside the doors for awhile waiting to get in. Thus it was that each day last week there was a line to the curb in front of a majority of the Ninth street theaters. At the Strand a more than capacity business was done for two weeks during the showing of "The Battle Cry of Peace;" at the Garden theater, Triangle films are big drawing cards and a fourth day showing of one of these features brought a full house; while at Crandall's theater, where an all-feature program is used, business was equally good. The houses in the residential sections also did well during the week.

New Company Remodeling Theater.

Articles of incorporation were recently filed with the Recorder of Deeds by Lawrence Gasenheimer, John A. The company is to engage in the exhibition and production of motion pictures and has a capital of $3,000 divided into shares of a par value of $100 each.

The International Amusement Company is causing the remodeling of a building on Sycamore street, in Petersburg, Va., at this time and they expect to be able to open this as a first-class motion picture theater during the coming week. The new house is being modeled after one of the Ninth street theaters and will have a seating capacity of about 450. The alterations to the building are being made at an expenditure of $7,000.

He met with similar success with the "Eternal City" and his work stood out to the extent that he was brought into the local office. Mr. Walraven was born in Minneapolis, Minn., in 1885. He is a young man full of ginger and will no doubt meet with equal success on his new "job."

VIRGINIA NOTES.

New Petersburg House.

Plans for a new theater are being drawn for Lavenstein Bros., who conduct a large dry goods business on North Sycamore street, near Washington avenue, Petersburg. It is the intention of this firm to erect the new house on a portion of their property at the rear of the store, and the entrance to the theater will be in the form of an arcade running through the center of the dry goods establishment. It is said that it is their intention to build the house of a size that will accommodate about twelve hundred people.

Bank Buys Petersburg Lyric.

The property occupied by the Lyric theater, at 58 North Sycamore street, Petersburg, it is reported, has recently been sold to the National Bank of that city which occupies adjoining land. It is said that the bank officials desire this additional space in order to enlarge their institution to handle their large and growing business. It is indicated that the theater will be merged with the bank property upon the expiration of the lease in the early part of next year. The Lyric is operated by W. F. Crall, one of the best known exhibitors in this section of the country. It was the first vaudeville and motion picture house in Petersburg, having been built in 1908.

"Peace" Film at Lower Rates.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City National Security League has arranged for the rendition of "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Willis Wood theater for another week. A feature of the arrangement is that the prices will be reduced from a top of 75 cents to 10, 25 and 35 cents. Instead of two shows daily there will be four shows every day, starting at 1 o'clock. The picture was seen by 60,000 persons during its first three weeks at the Willis Wood.

Contribute for School Projector.

St. Joseph, Mo.—The Southeast Improvement Club combined with the Parent Teachers' Association of the Hall school at St. Joseph, Mo., in the purchase of a moving picture machine for the school. Reduces Admission to 5 Cents.

Starting Sunday, Jan. 17, the Gem theater, of Lexington, Ky., reduced prices prom 10 cents to 5 cents, and has arranged a very attractive diversified program which will be shown hereafter.

"Family Programs"

Cleveland Club Women's Organizations Are Co-operating With Exhibitors' League in Campaign for Better Pictures—Women Want Films Worth Remembering, Lively Enough to Interest and Comical Enough to Be Amusing.

By Hubert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Members of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs are continuing their campaign for what they term "better films," while the Cleveland exhibitors are planning an educational campaign for the club women in particular and the public in general.

The Federation, representing more than fifty women's organizations, unanimously agreed this week to cooperate with the exhibitors in the presentation of "family programs" once a week in downtown theaters and every night at photoplay houses in the residence sections. This action was taken on a resolution introduced by Miss Bertelle Lyttle, chairman of the civics committee of the Federation, who is in charge of the "better film" movement.

Miss Lyttle describes the programs the women want as "entertaining, worth remembering and talking about in the family circle, educational, something amusing, lively enough to be interesting and comic enough to be amusing." She added that they are not "to overemphasize bad manners and bad morals."

In line with their efforts to "uplift" the motion picture business, the club women invited Professor Phillip D. Sherman, of Oberlin College, to address their meeting January 26.

"Motion pictures which have neither education nor artistic value are silly, stupid, futile, deadening and a stimulation of false emotions," Professor Sherman declared.

"The motion picture theaters which present low-toned photoplays are worse than the morgue, but you do nothing to protect young minds from these contaminating influences," he asserted. His reference to the morgue was occasioned by the action of the Federation a few minutes before in passing a resolution asking an ordinance to prohibit school children from viewing bodies at the county morgue.

"I would rather have my eight-year-old child see the wrecked human beings lying on marble slabs in your morgue than have her see motion pictures which will break her mind before it is formed," Professor Sherman continued. He is associate professor of English at Oberlin.

The first meeting of the civics committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs with the executive committee of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, resulted in the club women agreeing to submit a new proposal to the exhibitors. They at first asked the theater owners to give them the use of a theater in a different section of the city one night a week for eight weeks to show "a model" program.

Censors Make Thoughts Come.

Friday, Jan. 21, C. A. Megown, proprietor of the Camerphone theater and special representative of the League, took the club women to the screening room of the General Film Company, where they were shown two Essanay films, "The City Grafter" and "The Unprotected Route," both of which have been barred by the Ohio Board of Censors. Miss Lyttle and her fellow committee members declared they heartily approved of both films and could see no reason why they should have been rejected by the censors.

"We are going back to our membership with a new thought on the motion picture problem," Miss Lyttle told the exhibitors.

Miss Lyttle's committee was taken to the same screening room for a second visit January 28, when they saw more films, some approved by the censors, but rejected by the exhibitors, and others the exhibtors want to show, but which the censors have barred.

"We want to show the club women that no given number of people are capable of making a fair criticism or saying what constitutes a moral or immoral picture," Mr. Megown said.

HOMESTEAD THEATER OPENS.

The Homestead theater, a photoplay house with a seating capacity of nearly 1,000, is the latest to be opened on the West Side. It is located at Detroit and Hird avenues, Lakewood, and will be operated by the Henn Brothers.

The interior is finished in canestone white plaster, with indirect lighting. Features are the most modern ventilating system obtainable and five exits leading to courts and the main entrance.

The house opened Sunday, Jan. 23, with Alice Brady in "The Rack," as the leading attraction. Monday "The Alster Case," an Essanay production, was the feature.

FILMS AT NEW MUSEUM.

Cleveland is soon to open a $1,250,000 municipal museum with a motion picture theater. It is to be the new Art Museum in Wade Park. Director F. A. Whiting of the museum, addressing the Cleveland Real Estate Board, declared that motion pictures of an educational nature would be a feature of the museum equipment. "The pictures will be educational but not 'high-brow,'" Director Whiting assured his hearers.

The purchase of a lot at the southeast corner of St. Clair avenue and Alhambra road by J. H. Greenberg this week is expected to result in the erection of a new motion picture theater.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

Children's Film Movement Spreading Through South.

ATLANTA, GA.—Atlanta has maintained special exhibitions of pictures for children from October, 1914, to June, 1915. A list of seventy-nine films was selected by the local board of censorship.

This movement for better moving picture plays, especially for children, is being agitated thoroughly in Columbus, Ga., and a good beginning has been made. The women began by asking the questions: "What kind of pictures are we going to see?" and "What kind are our children seeing?" So far one day has been given the committee in charge of this work to censor the pictures appearing, with the privilege of making a special program for the children. "Sleeping Beauty" was the first picture selected in connection with the better films movement. The story was told in the schools, chaperones were provided, and despite the inclement weather 1,500 children witnessed the production.

Nola People at Noccalula Falls.

Nine motion picture actors and an operator for the Nola Film Company of New Orleans went to Gadsden, Ala., this week to take a scene at Noccalulu Falls. Notwithstanding the fact that the temperature was near freezing point, some of the actors posed in the water.

Nest Making.

The Blue Bird Film Company have opened their Atlanta branch in the Rhodes Building.

"Little Colonel" Strong in Dixie.

Ever since the "Birth of a Nation" was shown in Atlanta, Henry Walthall has had a firm hold on the hearts of Atlantians. Previous to that, he was looked upon as a necessary actor just to fill in the scenario. Wednesday he played "The Raven" at the Strand theater to crowded houses.

Sam Bullock Offers a Resolution

Cleveland Exhibitor Recently Bullied by State Censors Presents to Northeastern Ohio League the Following Resolution.

POLITICAL censorship laws were criticised, and clean and wholesome pictures declared for in a resolution offered at a meeting of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, January 25. The resolution, introduced by Samuel Bullock, who has several times locked horns with the state censors, was seconded by Ernest Schwartz. The resolution was as follows:

WHEREAS, The motion picture theaters of Cleveland are now providing wholesome recreation; an unlimited fund of knowledge not obtainable through any other agency and clean amusement which now earns the approbation of over seven hundred thousand patrons weekly; and

WHEREAS, The motion picture business of Cleveland has attained its phenomenal popularity upon its merits as an ideal form of entertainment, endorsed by the patronage of its best citizens, rich and poor; and

WHEREAS, The success of the business as a whole has been built upon the idea that the best that is in mankind must be appealed to, or our business will crumble away; and

WHEREAS, There has been manifest recently a tendency by a few makers to produce photoplays which provoke unfavorable criticism and unwarranted abuse of our business as a whole by "those who are so blind that they will not see," therefore be it

RESOLVED, That the Cleveland Local No. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, District of Northeastern Ohio, heartily favor a continuance of clean and wholesome pictures such as we had before political censorship laws were enacted.

The resolution was referred to the executive committee and may be reported out next week. Some opposition to part of the resolution developed from exhibitors who contend that any photoplay exhibited in Ohio which causes unfavorable criticism places an additional burden on the censor board and not the manufacturers or exhibitors.

NEW ORLEANS' TRIANGLE.

Second Largest Picture House Begins on New Record With Much Promise.

By Geo. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Triangle, New Orleans' second picture theater of metropolitan size and appointments, opened January 16. "Between Men" was the feature, "The Submarine Pirate" the comedy offering. Both met with popular approval and the prospect for a permanent success in this new venture seems good.

One novelty for New Orleanians is the employment of young women ushers. Their well trained and pleasant manner is thought to add considerable to the attractiveness of the place. They are attired in uniform gray silk frocks with triangular caps and aprons.

Manager Ernst Boehringer's initial success is bringing him many congratulations, especially since the bad name of the house in its previous uses was thought to be a big handicap.

There is an air of smartness about the place as it is now operated and at the same time it is altogether comfortable. The screen itself is of the latest design, being set in a deep recess, the edges of which are dead black. There is little or no glare.

Ferns and other potted plants are set about the house in profusion.

Helen Ware in "Cross Currents" was the second feature offering at the Triangle.

BENEFIT AT THE TRIANGLE.

The Triangle theater has announced a special benefit performance for January 25 for the New Orleans Federation of Women's Clubs. This general organization includes a membership of more than 6,000 women and is rated one of the strongest women's organizations in the South. Tickets will be sold on the streets.

The pictures offered are Griffith's "Missing Link" and Sennet's "Because He Loved Her." Special musical selections will be rendered.

NEW LOCAL FOX MANAGER.

R. E. Barron, of New York, has been announced to succeed S. T. Stephens, resigned, as manager of the Fox Film Corporation at New Orleans. Stephens has been made manager of the New Orleans Mutual office. The Fox managership had been held by a temporary appointee pending action by the New York office. This action was taken after a lapse of three weeks on the arrival in New York of Sam Dembow, Jr., southern division manager.

SAENGER INCREASES CAPITAL.

Big Shreveport Amusement Company Makes Changes.

Following a meeting of the directors of the Saenger Amusement Co., at Shreveport, last week, it was announced that the capital stock of the company has been increased to $250,000. The charter provides that this stock be issued in shares of one dollar each, either for cash or for purchases to be made by the company. It is understood that the Saenger interests will be considerably extended following this move.

Transfers of Saenger house managers have been announced as follows:

Jack Manning has been brought back from Texarkana, Tex., to Monroe, La., from which point he was transferred to Texarkana last year. Mr. Depinet, in charge of the Monroe house, has been sent to Shreveport. Miss Vernon, who was in charge of the Monroe house, has been sent to Texarkana.

The Saenger interests are issuing a weekly publication in the interest of their own and the Hippodrome interests at Shreveport, Alexandria, Monroe, where the company has obtained control of all the picture and legitimate business, and Texarkana. It is called "The Picture News." E. V. Richards, Jr., is editor, Howard Swain business manager. This paper was issued first in 1913, but was discontinued in May of 1914. Complete programs of the Saenger and Hippodrome interests will be published in the paper weekly.

Owning one theater already in Monroe, the company, immediately following the increase of its capitalization, secured a four-year lease on Sugar's theater and followed this up with the purchase outright of the Lyceum from Mrs. M. W. Hoyt of Chicago.

Monroe has a population of something over twelve thousand and next to Shreveport, where the Saenger company has its headquarters, is the most important center of north Louisiana. All three houses are reported to be doing well.

Gulf State Notes.

The Triangle pictures, it is announced, will be shown at the Tivoli theater in Beaumont, Tex.

"The Birth of a Nation" is having a record-breaking run at the Grand theater in Shreveport.

Armand Reims, son of D. Reims, of Lake Charles, and well known in that section, has been appointed a director for Edison. Mr. George went on the stage fourteen years ago and has seen considerable service and is credited with knowing a bit about acting in general and the pictures in particular.

Can Run "Country Store"

Cincinnati Juvenile Court Decides That "Country Store" Stunt Is Not a Lottery—Holds That Persons Drawing Tickets Risk Nothing—Test Case Made When Exhibitor Was Arrested.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—A test case, involving the right of moving picture and other theaters to conduct "country stores" as a means of drawing patronage, was decided in the Cincinnati juvenile court last week, resulting in a victory for the exhibitors. George F. Hornung, proprietor of the Americus theater, at 4026 Hamilton avenue, was the defendant in the case, having been arrested by juvenile court officers on the charge of contributing to juvenile delinquency by operating a gambling device. A thirteen-year-old boy was selected as the prosecuting witness. He had drown a ticket at the theater in competition for a prize valued at $1.

The court held, however, that this competition, or drawing, was in no sense a gambling device, inasmuch as persons drawing tickets were risking nothing, receiving the "chance" in return for their admission, and the exhibitor himself risked nothing but the single prize offered. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League fought the case on behalf of Mr. Hornung, Attorneys Miller & Foster, representatives of the League, having charge of the case.

Boreas Didn't Blow.

The management of the Orpheum was foiled in its intention to add an attraction which would have placed that big house right up with the best in New York, as far as novelty is concerned. The Orpheum roof, which is utilized in summer as "the coolest airdome in the city," on account of its great height about the street level, was to have been flooded and used as a skating rink, being amply large for that purpose, while the proximity of the winter garden, with its cabaret and excellent cuisine, and the Orpheum auditorium below, with its nightly change of program, offered a combination of unusual attractions. The zero weather at the time promised every aid in carrying out this program, but unfortunately it did not last, being succeeded by temperatures around sixty; so the rink project, for the time being, at least, had to be postponed.

Films Boosting Dayton.

Moving pictures formed a highly interesting part of the big Dayton Industrial Exposition, held at Dayton, O., last week, the Pyramid Film Co., of that city, staging a continuous series of displays fully in accord with the spirit of the affair. The object of the exposition was to illustrate the commercial and industrial importance of the city, and the film company carried out this object by showing a wide variety of industrial moving pictures, showing operations at the Westinghouse and General Electric plants, at the Federal mints, the National Cash Register Co., and other well known industrial enterprises. The Pyramid company conducted these exhibitions simultaneously on three different floors of the building where the exposition was held, in specially prepared auditoriums seating 100 people each.

Clifford's Balcony Seats at 5 Cents.

The Clifford, at Urbana, O., has inaugurated the policy of charging only five cents for admission to its balcony, Manager Clifford appreciating the fact that a higher price keeps away many desirable patrons. Regardless of the figure charged for the lower part of the house, therefore, he announces that five cents will be the regular price hereafter for balcony admission; and as the Clifford balcony is roomy and comfortable, the announcement met with wide approval. To introduce the new offer, Manager Clifford had a coupon printed in his advertisement, good for admission at the following Saturday matinees.

The management of the Dome theater, of Youngstown, O., has closed a contract with the Fox company for the exhibition of its features. Under the new arrangement the Dome will show Paramount pictures the first half of each week and Fox features the latter half.

Publicity Campaign Against Federal Censorship

Cincinnati Exhibitors Connected With City's Chamber of Commerce Urge the Defeat of the Bill Now Before Congress.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The exhibitors in Cincinnati who are members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League branch of the Chamber of Commerce, which means about ninety of those in the city, operating about 100 houses, are planning an organized compaign of publicity against the enactment of the proposed Federal law creating a national commission for the censoring of moving pictures, and they propose to utilize to the fullest the large advantage given by their affiliation with the Chamber of Commerce, the powerful organization which includes all of the big business interests of the city within its ranks.

The League sent telegrams to the entire Ohio delegation in Congress urging the defeat of the bill, which is known as House Resolution No. 456, informing them that a local campaign against it, which is part of a national campaign for the same purpose, is already begun. The screens of all local houses are to be used at every performance to secure the support of patrons in the fight on the movement, and resolutions will shortly be placed before the Chamber of Commerce, supported by the entire League, for adoption. As a recognized and organized business branch of the Chamber, the exhibitors feel that they have a right to ask this, and there is not likely to be any opposition to their wishes, so that the 3,000 members of the Chamber will thus be placed behind the League.

Detroit License Fees

New Ordinance Now Pending May Require Houses Seating More Than 600 Persons to Pay a License Tax of $100 a Year—Gilligham Talks on Censorship—Other Detroit Items of Present Interest.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—An ordinance was introduced into the Detroit common council and is now pending before the ordinance committee that, if passed, would require all moving picture theaters over 600 to pay an annual license fee of $100. Those under 600 would continue to pay only $25 as at present. Owners of larger theaters will strongly oppose the passage of this ordinance.

GILLIGHAM ON CENSORSHIP.

A. J. Gilligham, manager of the Detroit branch of the General Film Company, owners of the Empire theater, Detroit, and a chain of theaters in Grand Rapids, wants to go on record as absolutely opposing censorship in any form. "If exhibitors, the public and even public officials, will go into this subject with study and thought they cannot fail to realize that censorship in any form outside of the National Board would be unjust, unfair and unAmericanlike.

ARE THERE TOO MANY HOUSES?

Three Smaller Houses Close.

There have been an unusual number of small photoplay houses closing up in Detroit during the past few months. The latest to close are the Arbor, at Woodward and Harper avenues, and the William Penn and the Pallister theaters, out North Woodward. All three were comparatively new houses and were very beautiful. The sites will be used for business purposes other than theaters. This proves conclusively that the day is coming when there will be less theaters, especially of the smaller type, where competition is too keen.

An Opinion on the Weather's Effect.

During the past two weeks when Detroit had some extremely cold weather it is a fact some of the larger outskirt houses suffered a material falling off in business, while the downtown photoplay houses had as good, if not better business than usual. On this particular subject a man who operates a chain of theaters in this city, with theaters downtown and in the outskirts, said:

"This condition has convinced me that the outskirt houses are going to get less popular and that the day is coming when it will be pretty hard for such houses to compete with the big downtown theaters. The reason for this can be readily understood. When the weather is bad, rainy, cold or slushy, people who are at home are not going to venture out to the neighborhood theaters. But people downtown, changing cars, coming from restaurants, getting through work and just sightseeing, will naturally go to the theaters." This man said he would never build another outskirt theater, that he was through with them for all time to come.

New Houses to Open.

The new Stratford theater, at Dix and Ferdinand avenues, will open in February, while the new Drury Lane theater will open about March 1. Work is to be started at once on the construction of a large brick building containing a theater and stores on Gratiot avenue, near Iroquois, for John Owen. Feldman & Seeler are the architects.

A SUGGESTION ON POSTERS.

A downtown manager makes the following suggestion for manufacturers: "Why don't manufacturers play up on their 24 sheets and all their advertising matter the name of the star and the name of the picture instead of their name and the number of reels. The public is interested in only a small degree in who produced the picture and the number of reels, but they do want to know the star of the picture and its name.

All of the leading downtown theaters in Detroit are now omitting the captions "End of Part ——," or "Part ——," and are running their entire film through without stops.

LOCAL BLUEBIRD MANAGER.

Robert S. Bedell has been appointed manager in Detroit for Blue Bird productions. For the past few months he has been with the Majestic Features Corporation, and previously was associated with the Broadway Feature Film company, of Detroit. The first Blue Bird feature was shown the week of January 23 at the Grand Circus theater. It was "Undine."

Theater Changes and Business Notes.

The Grand Boulevard Theater company, who operate the Duplex theater, Grand Boulevard and Woodward avenues, has moved its general offices to 602 Farwell building.

Jack Miller has resigned as manager of the Family theater, Detroit, and returned to Cincinnati. Ed Kirchner has assumed the management temporarily.

"Everything will go along the same as before," remarked Henry Guthard, to the World representative, in discussing the future of the Caille & Guthard enterprises.

The Elden Small Corporation, formerly at 80-82 East Congress street, Detroit, has sold out to F. W. Williams and A. D. Mittinger, who have moved the business to Jefferson and Griswold streets and changed the name to the Detroit Feature Film company.

C. Howard Crane, architect, Dime Bank building, will ask for bids on a new theater for the Boulevard Theater company, at 1537 Gratiot avenue, to cost $50,000.

D. Leo Dennison is back in Detroit as manager of the Paramount branch. Welcome home.

Win Suit Over Poor Service

Quincy, Illinois, Managers, Sued by General Feature Film Service, Get Favorable Verdict from Jury on Poor Service Plea.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World

QUINCY, ILL.—A suit by the General Feature Film Company against Pinkelman & Morest, former proprietors of the Gem and Savoy theaters at Quincy, Ill., was won by the theater men.

It was stated at the trial the film company agreed to furnish a weekly film service each Saturday and Sunday, known as their $70 service. Instead, so claimed the defense, they furnished their $40 a week service.

During the four weeks in the life of the contract the defendants did not pay the full $70 each week, deducting some charges for printed matter that was not furnished on time. In the fourth week, they stated, they realized they were getting the cheaper service and so refused to pay the balance due.

Attorney Martindale, who represented the film company, claimed the contract was not for service specifically marketed as $70 a week service, "but for a film service which cost $70 a week and the comparative value of the service was not a question of the contract." The jury agreed with the contention of the defense, that the service rendered was not up to the standard promised and added $25 as an offset to the defendants.

BARKER-SWAN COLOR FILMS.

Get New Process and Will Begin in the Spring to Make Natural Color Pictures.

Colored films will be made by the Barker-Swan Film Service at Peoria, Ill., it is announced by President Barker. "We are going to produce some of our pictures in the natural tints and colors of nature," he said. "The process is entirely new, and we were able to get it because of my previous connection with the Kinemacolor company. Natural color photography has been the dream of the motion picture world. We have it."

The Barker-Swan company also will produce some pictures in which Eugene Laurant, the illusionist, will take part. This work will be done next spring when Mr. Laurant will take his company and carload of effects to the Peoria studio.

ILLINOIS CENSORS.

Consultation with managers will be one of the policies of the committee at Belleville, Ill., which has been named by the Federation of Catholic Societies to censor films. Programs will be secured in advance if possible. The censoring committee is composed of Julius Siefert, gas company superintendent; Joseph Herrmann, machinist, and John Nevener, mine manager.

The board of censors at Quincy, Ill., did not put an age limit on "Damaged Goods," considering that it would be morbid curiosity and only aid in advertising a picture as sensational.

Films in Civic Social Program.

A free moving picture show once a week as a sort of a social center and advertising medium is the plan in which merchants at McClure, Ill., and the farmers near that village will co-operate. The support is practically unanimous. The big night is aimed to improve the social life of the community and the church and give merchants a chance to exploit their wares. The first of these was held at the Methodist church on Saturday night.

Illinois Changes.

A moving picture theater will be opened at Johnsburg, Ill., it is reported.

Roefer & Wyeth sold Dreamland theater at Canton, Ill., to H. O. and C. L. Hughes, of Lewiston, Ill. They in turn sold it to A. E. Oswald. Oswald will operate it.

Chosen Illinois Items.

Picture shows, churches and all places where persons congregate were closed in Clinton, Ill., for ten days because of an epidemic of smallpox.

"Rain checks" were given out for a performance of "Rip Van Winkle," at the Strand theater in Evanston because hundreds of children could not be accommodated.

"The Bells" was used by Manager C. M. Fox of the Haish auditorium at De Kalb, Ill., for a free show for children. He also gave every child a bag of candy.

The Colonial theater in Urbana, Ill., has offered to put on pictures for children every other Saturday provided the women's clubs, teachers and parents help him. Programs will be selected by a committee from the various clubs.

A session of the Ford County Farmers' Institute was held at the Crystal theater at Paxton, Ill., and moving pictures on "Beautifying the Home," furnished by the University of Illinois were shown free.

Arrested for Open Sunday Show in Lafayette, Ind.

Misha Rubinoff, Manager, and J. M. Chamberlain, Operator, Taken Into Custody Three Times—Get Free on Habeas Corpus Proceedings.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Indiana Trade News Service.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—The Sunday law is to be given a thorough test in Lafayette, Indiana. The Orpheum theater owned by John M. Chamberlin was opened Sunday and Misha Rubinoff of Chicago, who had rented the theater for the day and Arthur Lyday, machine operator, Indianapolis, were arrested. The two men gave bond in the sum of $100 and returned to the theater and continued to run the pictures. There was a second arrest and they again gave bond and again continued the show. The police then went to the theater and without an affidavit against the two men took them before Judge Fred Prass of the City Court, and Judge Prass refused bail. They remained in jail for two hours.

Judge Vinton, of the Tippecanoe County Court, was then appealed to and issued a writ of habeas corpus on the sheriff for the release of the two show men. The picture men are confident of ultimate victory.

WILL BUILD THEATER.

Marion, Ind.—Incorporation papers have been filed in Indianapolis for the formation of the Washington Theater Company headed by B. F. Metcalf, of the Luna Lite theater, Marion, Indiana. Associated with Mr. Metcalf are a number of Marion capitalists. The stock in the company has been subscribed and negotiations have been closed for the site of the Mecca Club on West Fourth street where a $35,000 theater will be erected.

Mr. Metcalf has conducted the Luna-Lite theater in a most succesful way and had no trouble at all in financing the bigger theater.

HILKENE TALKS TO FILM MEN.

Jacob H. Kilkene, building inspector, told members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Indianapolis, that the Indianapolis houses as a whole were as safe from fire hazard as those of any city in the United States. Mr. Hilkene made a number of suggestions that would improve conditions, but said that he wished to be understood as offering them merely as a criticism.

Mr. Hilkene suggested that where changes might seem advisable in the present building code relating to the motion picture houses that the matter be placed before the advisory commission recently appointed by Mayor Bell.

Joseph H. Gavin, president of the exhibitors' association, will name a committee to submit changes to the commission.

The motion picture exhibitors' association will hold a state meeting the latter part of next month in Indianapolis. It is probable that several film stars will be brought to Indianapolis to take part in the meeting.

Kanas Bars "Nation" Film

Both State Board of Censors and Appeals Board Forbid Showing "The Birth of a Nation"—G. A. R. Veterans Protested—Kansas Peculiarly Sympathetic to Negroes—An Injunction Will Be Asked.

Special to Moving Picture World, from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Kansas State Board of Censors, and the Appeal Board, have rejected "Birth of A Nation." But the case will not rest there. The managers will seek an injunction in the courts, to prevent the interference with the showing of this picture in Kansas.

W. D. Ross, superintendent of public instruction, viewed the film Jan. 23, and put his ban upon it. The following day the appeal board, consisting of Governor Capper, Attorney General Brewster and Secretary of State Botkin, heard the argument of H. A. Sherman, manager of the film, sustained the head of the censor board. The governor and Mr. Ross had already received numerous objections from G. A. R. veterans, and C. A. Meek, commander in chief of the Kansas G. A. R., protested to the governor against what he alleged was a false impression given by the picture as to the union soldiers, and the Ku Klux Klan. Commander Meek filed the statement on the film published in the National Tribune, the official organ of the G. A. R. During the hearing, S. M. Brewster, attorney general, argued with Mr. Sherman against the historical accuracy of the picture.

The activity and sufferings of "Free State" Kansas before and during the Civil war in the union cause and in behalf of negroes, and the consideration that has been shown to negroes since in the state, Topeka having a large population of that color, have been mentioned as facts which contributed to the working up of sentiment against the "Birth of a Nation."

The injunction proceedings, Mr. Sherman said, would be brought later, before the film was brought to the state for showing.

Kansas Educator Now Wants to Censor Music

Thinks Exhibitors of Pictures Not Able to Choose Good Music—For Sake of the Young Minds of the State Would Censor Tunes.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—So successful has been the censorship of moving pictures in Kansas, that the supervision of public entertainment and delectation may now be extended to the music that goes with the pictures!

The success of the Kansas censorship, it need scarcely be explained, consists in the fact that the censors have actually been able to enforce the law in a large number of cases, and have censored the pictures shown in many Kansas houses. They have been able to exclude from the state many pictures, and parts of pictures, that did not meet the approval of the censors. While the converse has not been also true—they have not been able to put before the people of Kansas their ideals of moving pictures—the net result has supposedly been the presentation of pictures that measurably meet the censors' standards. Theoretically, therefore, the people of Kansas have been edified and improved mentally and morally by the pictures shown.

It was inevitable that the attractiveness of this exercise of power should appeal to those who have authority and taste and culture in other subjects, and that the idea of censorship should quickly spread to other phases of public entertainment and recreation. There were hundreds of activities to which the censorship could be extended, but those easiest touched next by the censorship would naturally be those in connection with moving picture shows, where censorship is already established.

So now it is the music of the picture shows that is to be criticized by the state.

The first step towards establishing a censorship of music in moving picture shows has been taken by Mrs. Cora G. Lewis, a member of the state board of administration of Kansas educational institutions. Mr. Lewis has announced that censorship of music is necessary, and is preparing to present the subject to the board, and to agitate it among educators. Mrs. Lewis takes the position that most of the music heard at picture shows is demoralizing to the musical sense of the children, and renders them unfit to absorb appreciation of the best music in the schools. The state board of administration is seeking to develop the musical taste of Kansas children through the grade school courses; and the interference of these plans by the low grade of music at film shows, she insists, is a proper subject of action. Mrs. Lewis contends that if the music was censored, it would improve in quality, much to the benefit and delight of the patrons; that the patronage of the moving picture shows would greatly increase, and the proprietors would profit largely. This additional profit would more than compensate, she believes, for the cost of the censorship.

There has been a growing appreciation, in Kansas as well as elsewhere, of the value of good music for building profitable patronage of moving picture shows. But there is an inclination to think that the proprietors can more economically and safely select performers and music, than to pay state censors to make such selection.

Another Independence Theater.

Independence, Mo., was only for one day, without a moving picture show—and now the city has two. On the same day that J. E. Lewis reopened his show in the Keystone theater, after the fire that destroyed his building, the announcement was made of the establishment of a new moving picture enterprise. Edgar C. Hinds and Kenneth V. Bostian are the proprietors of the show, which was opened January 13 in Battery C Hall. Shows will be given every night but Sunday and Monday. Independence is nine miles from Kansas City, Mo., connected by street railways, and in effect a suburb.

SUPPLY SHOWS FOR CHARITY.

Denver Exchange Men Run Weekly Show for Consumptives.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THROUGH an arrangement all their own, the managers of local film exchanges take turns in supplying films for the Jewish Hospital for Consumptives. They clubbed together several weeks ago and obtained the moving picture plant that was installed in the hospital auditorium. Then they arranged a schedule whereby they take turns in giving the sick men a moving picture show in their own home free of charge. The exchangemen even furnish the operator and the carbons.

Milton Cohn, manager of the Denver branch of the Notable Film Co. lends his support to the plan, not only by supplying Paramount pictures for the free show but by operating the machine himself. Other managers who either do not understand the operating end of the game or are too busy to give the time supply an operator from among their employes.

It is the only amusement that the tubercular patients have and hospital attendants say that more good cheer prevails within the walls of the institution on a day following a moving picture display than could result from the purchase of thousands of dollars worth of medicine.

Miniature Theater for Exchangemen.

Harry T. Nolan, head of the Swanson-Nolan Supply Co. and owner of a string of motion picture theaters throughout the West has introduced a new feature for the benefit of Denver exchangemen and exhibitors. It is a minature moving picture theater built inside the Iris one of Denver's downtown playhouses.

This theater within a theater is fully equipped. It has two of the latest model Simplex projection machines, an up-to-date screen and 50 of the newest and most comfortable opera chairs. It was built for the purpose of allowing exchange men to exhibit their wares before prospective purchasers and to make it possible for exhibitors to learn for themselves the good and bad features of a photoplay before signing up for it.

The Minature theater has filled a long felt want in Denver. Up to this time it has often been impossible for an exchange to show its features to interested exhibitors unless a trial run is arranged at midnight or very early in the morning. The inconvenience resulted in the film distributors losing many customers and caused the exhibitor to pass up numerous features. Now trial runs can be had at any hour of the day or night and in fact most of the time that the regular show is in progress in the Iris a special film is being run off in the minature playhouse without interfering with the other.

Many Exhibitors Visit.

Many exhibitors took advantage of low railroad rates during Stock Show week in Denver to visit the various exchanges and lay in supplies as well as book new pictures. Among the visitors were: L. C. Shepherd of Pueblo; W. C. Lemaster of Victor; Charles Gunn of Cripple Creek; F. R. Kelly of Salida; A. A. Kelly of Ouray; E. M. Owen of Fowler; Carl Ray of Cheyenne, Wyo.; A. B. Sharp of Steamboat Springs, and A. B. Segerberg of Telluride.

E. Libscom of Cincinnati, one of the new owners of the Tabor Grand Opera House was in the city arranging for a permanent service for his house. The Tabor which for 50 years has been the home of high class spoken drama recently became the home of the photoplay. It has just completed a two months' run of "The Birth of a Nation" and will now run high class features with a general admission of ten cents.

W. B. Glasser Visits Denver.

W. B. Glasser, former booking agent in Denver for the "Diamond from the Sky" and now connected with the Mutual exchange in Detroit is in Denver, having been called home on account of the serious illness of his mother. Mrs. Glasser is reported much improved and will recover.

O. S. Taylor, manager of the Rex theater at Raton, N. M., has resigned his position and will be succeeded by Orin Studley.

Earl Briggs has sold his Majestic theater at Cripple Creek to Harry Goldstein.

A. B. Martin, former Denver exchange manager for the Universal Film Co., has purchased the Temple theater at McCook, Nebr., and will try his hand in the exhibiting game.

Grand Avenue Houses

St. Louis Correspondent of World Visits Water Tower Section of City—He Gets Cold Feet When It Rains, But Good Weather Invited—Talks With Manager Sievers on Good of the Business.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS.—We picked out Grand Ave- as a war path on our hunt for news this week.

New Grand Central.

The first stop was made at the New Grand Central, William Sievers' big house at Lucas Avenue. The New Grand Central is one of the largest and most elegantly appointed of houses, and compares with the Strand and Knickerbocker of New York. It is the first feature house to be built in the city. Some of the big dramatic houses have been made into feature houses after they failed with other programs, but the New Grand Central was erected solely for a first-class picture house, and has never been anything else. The theater enjoys high-class patronage, and on big nights automobiles from the fashionable residences of the west end are lined up and down Grand avenue and overflow on Delmar and other side streets in both directions.

Manager Wm. Sievers.

Wm. Sievers is a man that takes a keen and active interest in all phases of the moving picture business. He keeps in intimate connection with all the big things that are going on, and from his close touch with the New York and Chicago producers, he is a reliable authority on most any phase of the industry. We asked him the old question, "What is the matter with the picture business?" although deep down in our heart we don't believe there is much of anything the matter with it, and from Mr. Sievers' reply, especially the last part of his statement, he is much of the same opinion, that there is nothing the matter with the business that will not adjust itself in time.

Many Mediocre Features.

"There is an over-production of mediocre features," said Mr. Sievers. "There has been a cry for features, and features have been made that were features in name only. The public have been given too much, they see so many productions that they are scarcely able to judge between the good and the bad.

"Great amounts of money are spent on the pictures where oftentimes only a little art is needed. Pictures that should be classics give way to productions that have nothing more than a row of dollar marks and a string of big names behind them. The public is being spoiled to a certain extent. They are bombarded with features—every night in the week a new and costly production, till they will become bewildered after a while and not be able to tell art when they see it."

"Is there any remedy?" we asked.

"More Seats Than People."

"Wait," said Mr. Sievers, "there is one more thing the matter with the business. The seating capacity of the country is out of all proportion to the population. In other words, there are more seats waiting to be filled than there are people to fill them. As to the suggestion for a remedy, I will not prophesy, but the two conditions will remedy themselves, there will be an automatic readjustment, the result of a natural law, in fact—the best will survive, and when the business readjusts itself, and reaches a sane level, it will be of the greatest benefit to every one.

Mr. Sievers said that St. Louis will derive a great benefit from the fact that the Selig Company will come here in March to make the picture of Churchill's "Crisis." St. Louis is rich in history and romance, and the wide attraction that will be directed to the city when the pictures are shown will be of incalculable value.

At the Lindell.

After leaving the New Grand Central we went on out to the Lindell, at Grand and Herbert. The Lindell is another big place, seating two thousand, and equipped with modern heating and ventilating plants. The Lindell is now under the management of Wm. Goldman and Harry Koplar, who comprise the Consolidated Theater Company, and control besides the Lindell, the Montgomery and Imperial, across the street from each other at 15th and St. Louis Ave., the Maffit, at Vandeventer and St. Louis Ave., the Rex airdome at 13th and Warren, the St. Louis at Prairie and St. Louis Ave., and the Novelty at Grand and Easton. Neither of the managers were at the Lindell, but there was a good house full looking at the pictures.

North Grand Theater.

We crossed the street to the Warner Brothers' North Grand theater, and found the same condition, manager not at home, but a crowded house of patrons enjoying the eight-reel program.

The Eureka Near the Water Tower.

From there we took the car and went to the water tower and called in at the Eureka, the theater formerly managed by Miss Isabel Spear. The Eureka has changed hands, and a Miss Fargo is now the manager. The lady was also not at home, but there was a young man in charge who seemed to have excellent control of the place.

Finding three houses, one after another with the managers not at home, looked rather queer. It reminded us of the story of the man who went to a restaurant and asked for the proprietor and was told he had gone out to lunch. We do not know, but we strongly suspect that these three absent managers had gone to a picture show. We stayed a while at the Eureka because they had one of those old-fashioned one-reel programs, and we like that kind of a show.

The Eureka is one of the early neighborhood houses of the city, and the seats are chairs, real straight-backed chairs with perforated bottoms like lots of folks have in the dining room. The theater has always been under the management of a woman, and there are many little feminine touches about the place. One that is very pleasing is the lighting arrangement. The indirect ceiling lights are in the shape of big baskets and bowls of flowers and plants, each with trailing ferns and vines drooping over the sides.

ARSENAL THEATER TO OPEN.

The Arsenal Theater at Grand and Arsenal streets has been leased by the Arsenal Theater Company, a syndicate of five men living in the vicinity of the theater, near Tower Grove park, for a high class motion picture house. The Arsenal has a frontage of fifty feet on Grand avenue, and extends a hundred feet on Arsenal street, and has a seating capacity of about seven hundred.

The Arsenal company comprises Herman W. Fay, President; John J. Kleekamp, Edward Kleekamp, E. P. Craig and G. L. Loeffler, and it is said that the theater will become the third on a circuit, of which the American and King's are the other two members. The location of the Arsenal is an ideal one, although the house has been closed for more than two years, as the corner of Grand and Arsenal is one of the busiest in South St. Louis, and three car lines pass the door. The Arsenal will open early in February.

Censor Inconsistencies

Exhibitors of Dallas, Texas, Get a Good Working Sample of Censorship When Film Is Turned Down for One Reason and Appeal Board Orders Cuts for Entirely Different Objection.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DALLAS, Tex.—This city has its first taste of the inconsistency so rampant in censorship disputes, showing the radically different angles from which different persons look at pictures.

On January 20, Mrs. Reed Finley, city censor, refused the Jefferson theater a permit to show "Life's Whirlpool," a World Film feature. Mrs. Finley said the picture was the most horrible and gruesome thing she had even seen. The theater, supported by the exchange, appealed from her decision to the appeals board.

The appeals board apparently did not say a word about the gruesomeness and horribleness that the censor discovered, but they wanted to support her, so ordered love scenes cut to five feet in some cases and in others eliminated entirely.

Mr. Graf of the World corporation will try to obtain a reconsideration of the turn-down given "The Lure" some weeks back, as the new board is not composed of the same members as the older one.

A special showing before the board will also be made of "The Miracle of Life," which was turned down when first released. The showing will be at the Old Mill theater, under the auspices of the Mutual corporation's Dallas branch. This picture was refused an exhibition on some minor ground; if the writer's memory is clear, because the wife in the story actually drank the poison in her dream. It was shown in other places in the state and won unstinted praise both for the beauty of the picture and the deep lesson carried.

FORT WORTH SUNDAY SHOWS.

Agitation for Special Election Is Receiving Generous Support.

The movement for a special election on permitting places of amusement to open on Sunday in Fort Worth is receiving generous support on all sides. Only the usual element seems to be against it. The labor unions are doing much for the work, the petitions having been presented to the city commission by C. W. Woodman, a prominent labor leader of that city, and, incidentally, Texas state labor commissioner. It was originally requested that the election be held on January 21, along with another election, and while the city commission does not seem opposed to the proposition in the whole, their desire is to have the election as an independent decision.

Andrew Zucarro, manager of the Queen at Fort Worth, was in Dallas this week, and says that although the exhibitors are very anxious to get quick action, they will do the best they can, in the meantime working for a favorable vote.

HIGH COURT TO DECIDE.

Court of Criminal Appeals Has Question of Free Exhibition.

The Court of Criminal Appeals has before it this week a case that will carry a strong precedent in the decision. The case of Spooner, from Tom Green County.

"Dad" Spooner operates the Crystal theater at San Angelo, and held an exhibition on Sunday. No admission fee was charged, but a collection was taken. After paying his operator and rent Mr. Spooner donated the balance to the State Tuberculosis Colony, near San Angelo. He was arrested and fined $20, but appealed on the contention that a benefit performance is not a violation of the Sunday closing law.

A la the Phoenix.

When the town of Wirt, Okla., was practically wiped out by fire early in January, D. W. Jennings' Colonial went with the rest, but Mr. Jennings at once started to rebuild and will be ready for opening about February 1. The whole town is rapidly being reconstructed.

New Cartoon Machine.

The Acorn Movie Cartoon Company has been chartered and will commence at once the manufacture of moving picture cartoons. The work will be done under a method invented by Charles L. Sudmann, an artist, of this city. By the Sudmann method the production of moving cartoons will, so it is reported, be greatly simplified.

Pay in Advance.

According to E. R. McDuffie, the Oklahoma City exchanges are doing away with all charge accounts and installing a strictly "pay in advance" system of delivering service. Results will be watched with considerable interest in Dallas.

Clegg to Address Rotarians.

C. A. Clegg, Dallas manager for the Mutual, will address the Rotary Club, of Fort Worth, at a special moving picture day, January 28. Mr. Clegg's subject will be "The Evolution of the Moving Picture Industry."

Would Enjoin Sunday Shows.

Considerable opposition has developed in Waco, Tex., to the proposed election designed to permit Sunday exhibitions, and an effort will be made to stop the election February 15 by injunction. It is believed that regardless of the outcome of the injunction suit, the matter will eventually reach the State Supreme Court.

Dallas Territory Notes.

The Empress, the only large house in Oklahoma City showing straight pictures, is doing a fine business. Jack Boland manages this house.

Charles D. Touchon, formerly in the office of the J. D. Wheelan Film Company, is now manager of the Newport, in Dallas, a fine second-run house under the control of Mr. Wheelan.

P. C. Crown, manager of the Crown at Houston, was in Dallas recently, and witnessed an advance showing of "A Wonderful Wager," at the Hippodrome, the guest of C. A. Meade, of the "Vaseline" office. Mr. Crown says Houston is a good place, but they have "some" censorship there.

J. Klein, of the World corporation, left January 17 for Atlanta, Ga.

W. M. Byrd, representative of the Fox interests in Dallas, made a flying trip to New Orleans, January 22, to be gone until the 25th.

Ben Halsell, manager of the Queen at Bonham, visited the Dallas Fox office, January 22.

Two Hulsey theaters, the Queen at Galveston and the Old Mill at Dallas, will show Gold Rooster pictures in future, along with their other service.

Jack Tars March to See Picture

"Submarine Pirate" Seen by 500 Apprentice Seamen—March Through Oakland Headed by Mayor and City Council and Band.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

OAKLAND, CAL.—The Triangle comedy feature, the "Submarine Pirate," has been the attraction during the past week at the Franklin theater, Oakland, Calif., and has been the motif for some excellent publicity work of a rather unusual character, which has been participated in by the Federal Government, City of Oakland officials and the Chamber of Commerce. Five hundred apprentice seamen from the United States naval training station on Goat Island, San Francisco, were given a holiday and were taken to the east bay city aboard two government tugs. The party was met at the Clay street wharf by Mayor John L. Davis and members of the City Council, and, headed by a band of forty pieces, marched up Broadway to the Franklin theater. More than one half of the house was reserved for the visitors and the program which had been arranged by Manager Rex W. Midgely was enthusiastically received. Besides the "Submarine Pirate," this consisted of pictures showing Swedish submarine manoeuvers, a Japanese torpedo boat destroyer in a storm and a Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, which showed scenes in San Francisco Bay.

The management of the Franklin theater worked hard to make the affair a success and was given the active co-operation of Manager Ben. F. Simpson, of the San Francisco office of the Triangle Film Corporation, and the local commercial bodies. Moving pictures of the march of the marines were taken by Ray A. Duhem, of San Francisco, and these were shown at the theater the following day.

BOARD OF TRADE ELECTION.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco was held on the evening of January 18 and was well attended. The work of the past year was reviewed and the members expressed general satisfaction with the results that have been accomplished. The officers chosen for the ensuing term are as follows:

President, Morris L. Markowitz, of the California Film Exchange; vice president, X. K. Stout, Mutual Film Corporation; treasurer, H. W. Oviatt, Pathe Film Exchange; secretary, Leon D. Netter, All Star Feature Distributors, Inc.; board of directors, Louis Reichert, Metro Feature Service; I. H. Lichtenstein, Globe Film Exchange; Morris L. Markowitz, California Film Exchange; H. W. Oviatt, Pathe Film Exchange; finance committee, John W. Allen, Progressive Motion Picture Company; I. H. Lichtenstein, Globe Film Exchange, and Louis Reichert, Metro Feature Service; membership committee, Robert E. Stebbins, Progressive Motion Picture Company; David Tompkins, United Film Exchange, and Fred W. Voight, manager of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco.

HENRY DERNHAM PASSES AWAY.

Henry Dernham, president of the Popular Amusement Company, which conducts the Portola theater at San Francisco, passed away at Coronoda, Calif., on January 20th, following a brief illness. Mr. Dernham was regarded as one of the big constructive business men of the city, and for many years was general manager of the Emporium, the largest department store on the Pacific coast. He was fifty-five years of age at the time of his death and is survived by a widow and a daughter.

POSTER AND SUPPLY BUILDING.

Davis Bros., who conduct a large poster exchange on Eddy street, San Francisco, are completing arrangements for taking over a large building in the Golden Gate avenue film exchange district and plan to move from their present quarters early in the spring. A large space will be reserved for their poster exchange business and in addition there will be a large supply department. Considerable space will also be set aside for desk room, where owners of films, and others desiring to keep in close touch with exhibitors, may establish headquarters. Many inquiries have already been received in regard to this innovation and most of the space will probably be reserved before the building is taken over. Arrangements are also being made to install a public demonstrating room, where concerns having no facilities of this character may display their film offerings.

Preparing for "Ne'er-Do-Well" Campaign.

Sol L. Lesser, who recently purchased the United States rights to the "Ne'er-Do-Well," left for New York this week to make a stay of at least six months and this great feature production will shortly be placed on the market. Just before his departure from this city the employes of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., and the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., presented him with a handsome leather bound note book as a token of their regard for him, a gift that was deeply apreciated. E. M. Asher has also departed for New York, by way of Chicago, to act as publicity man for Mr. Lesser at the office to be established in the Eastern city.

Serial Draws Big at Vaudeville House.

The use of serial moving pictures as a drawing card for vaudeville has been given a thorough test by the management of Pantage's theater and the experiment has been very gratifying. Several weeks ago the Pathe production, "The Red Circle," was started here and despite the rainy weather the attendance has shown a great increase. The local police and detective force has become interested in the serial and there are but few who do not see it regularly. The newsboys on the streets have become regular patrons of the theater and many of them are to be seen with red circles painted on the backs of their hands. Both general manager J. J. Cluxton and house manager Robert G. Drady are delighted with the results that have been secured by the use of this serial and express the opinion that this class of film attraction appeals more to vaudeville patrons than long productions.

San Francisco Briefs.

The Independent Film Exchange is now well settled in its new quarters at 122 Golden Gate avenue.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company has received two war subjects that have aroused considerable enthusiasm here.

W. E. Shaffer is traveling through the California territory, south of San Francisco, for the Union Film & Supply Company, handling the "Fall of Przemysl."

W. R. Hart was here recently fitting up a road show and has left for San Joaquin Valley points, where he will show the "Mysteries of New York."

G. A. Metcalfe, of the supply house bearing his name, made a business trip to Los Angeles recently to inspect the new branch opened there a few weeks ago.

S. N. Kanner, formerly with the Comedy Film Company, has been made manager of the Elite theater on Market street.

W. Casey, formerly with the Sullivan & Considine Circuit, has been made house manager of the Tivoli, conducted by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

Robert Quive, manager of the San Francisco branch of the V-L-S-E, is looking forward to an interesting release at an early date, his broken arm having healed to such an extent that it will be released from the plaster cast shortly.

Louis Marks and John Di Stassio, prominent exhibitors of Sacramento, Calif., were here recently to look over late releases.

The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has secured the Pacific Coast rights to "Concealed Truth."

Conferences No Avail

Portland, Oregon, City Fathers Meet Film Men But No Relief from Oppressive Censorship Yet—More Snakes Cut from Film—City Commissioner Has Another Plan to Curb Vicious Pictures—Screen Club Interviews Him.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, OREGON. — The Portland Screen Club has taken hold of the fight against oppresive censorship with a will. Meetings of the allied film interests are being held several times each week and more enthusiasm has been shown than in the past when the picture theater men were united with the managers of the legitimate theaters under the name of the Portland Protective Association. Several conferences were had with the city commissioners during the week of January 16 and the film men now have clearly laid their side of the situation before the city fathers. These conferences have not yet, however, resulted in any relief in the cnsorship situation in Portland.

"Personally," said F. M. Simonton, manager of the Standard Feature Film Company, "I believe the city officials are 'stalling' on the censorship question. They are putting us off from time to time and decline to commit themselves one way or the other with regard to the situation. I believe they intend to drag the matter along expecting that we will get tired and lie down. Their expectations will not be realized."

An interview with Will H. Daly, commissioner of public utilities, appeared in the Portland Journal wherein Mr. Daly expressed himself against the censorship situation system in Portland and said he believed many injustices were being done. He believed, he said, in handling the situation under a law similar to the former model liquor law, namely, that an ordinance should be drawn specifying the kind of pictures not to be shown and if any such were shown, arrest the exhibitor. Mr. Daly declined to discuss the interview appearing in the Journal with the Screen Club committee or to reiterate his views expressed in the interview. He said, however, that he was framing a censorship ordinance which he would submit to the council.

Snakes are again demanding the censor board's attention. Manager Myrick, of the Columbia, seems to be the target of their shots of late and he has on his desk a good-sized roll of film cut from the Triangle Keystone film, "The Hunt," wherein a snake appeared in a scene.

Another picture that met official disapproval recently was "Smashing the Vice Trust." The people having charge of this picture say that Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, gave as the reason for condemning it that no conditions as it depicted existed in Portland.

THE YEAR'S PROSPECT IN OREGON.

Nineteen fifteen, especially the latter part, was a lean year for Portland's exhibitors. The reasons were presumably the inactivity of the lumber industry and the fact that very little money was spent in the development of Oregon's resources. Portland's banks, in fact, have been mere safe deposit vaults. The indications are that Oregon's lumber industry will open up within the next 30 days. At Bend, Oregon, one mill will employ 1,500 men. An enterprising exhibitor was in Portland recently negotiating for equipment to open a house there.

E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia, has an optimistic view of the prospects in Portland. With some of the state's biggest sawmills located here, with Portland's banks full of money and with the general commercial activity rapidly moving westward, he sees no reason why 1916 should not be the biggest year Portland has ever had.

MERRICK LEAVES PORTLAND.

J. L. Merrick, for several years road man for the General Film out of Portland and Seattle, has been transferred to Los Angeles. The change was made for the benefit of his wife's health. Mr. Merrick was one of the most popular road men in the territory and his departure from Portland is regretted.

P. M. Kershaw has been selected to take Mr. Merrick's place in Portland. He is an able salesman and has been a road man in commercial lines for many years.

STAY WITH PICTURES, JOE.

Joe Lucas, the genial proprietor of the Grand, Centralia, Washington, is in his home town an adept in the manly art of self defense, and nothing pleases Joe more than when he can take an evening off to witness an affair in the squared circle.

Recently a bout was to be pulled off in Tenino, a town near Centralia, between two husky loggers working in the woods thereabouts. Joe's first show was well under way and he was debating whether or not he should take in the event when the telephone rang. It was a friend of his at Tenino, who said the crowd was all assembled to view the fight, but that one of the lumber-jacks had failed to appear.

Joe has been in the theater game a long time and he knows the pangs of dismay that tug at the heartstrings of a disappointed audience.

"Hold the crowd!" yelled Joe over the wire. "I'll take the piker's place!"

A road man, who, by the way, is responsible for this yarn, called on Joe several days later and found him able to sit up and able to take nourishment, but that was about all. To him Joe confided that hereafter his efforts to please the public would be limited to the exhibition of high-class pictures in his theater.

Maple Goes to Lewiston.

George Maple, formerly manager of the Palace theater, Roseburg, Oregon, was a visitor in Portland en route to Lewiston, Idaho, where he has taken charge of the Star theater. Mr. Maple was in Portland a few weeks ago and at that time threatened to stay away from the film game at least a year.

Council Acts as Censor.

The city council at Enterprise, Oregon, recently sat in judgment on a picture presented at one of the eastern Oregon town's theaters and an edict was issued that all films of a suggestive or sensuous nature should be barred in Enterprise. The showmen are disposed to abide by the ruling of the council and have requested Portland exchanges to omit this class of films from the programs sent to Enterprise.

New Universal Bookers.

John R. Meldrum, recently special representative of "The Girl and the Game," is booking at the Universal exchange in Portland, vice S. S. Schubach, resigned. Mr. Meldrum was formerly booker for Universal at Seattle. Emil Ericksen, who occupied the booker's chair at the Portland Universal until recently, has accepted a similar position in Butte, Mont.

Big Legit House Turns

Western Canada's Leading Legitimate Theater Becomes a Picture House—Manager C. P. Walker Has Redecorated and Beautified Winnipeg Theater for Films—Special Music—Many Seats Reserved.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.—The Walker theater in Winnipeg, the most important legitimate theater in western Canada, has gone over to moving pictures, and early in January began the presentation of feature programs. C. P. Walker, manager of the theater, recently returned from an extended eastern trip which included New York, Chicago, Detroit and Toronto, taken for the purpose of acquiring advanced ideas in conducting a moving picture theater. As a result of this study, Winnipeg theatergoers were treated to a surprise in the manner of presentation, which is on a scale never before attempted in Western Canada.

Charles L. Cadwalader, one of the leading scenic artists of the Lee Lash studios in New York, brought to Winnipeg by Mr. Walker, and painted a special stage setting for the house. This represents a beautiful scene on the Mediterranean, with special lighting and moving cloud effects. Mr. Caldwalader has also been commissioned to execute new settings for the Lougheed-Walker theaters in Calgary and Edmonton, and the Groves-Walker theaters in Regina and Saskatoon.

Particular attention is paid to the music at the Walker, and Henri Bourgeault, conductor of the Winnipeg Operatic Society, has been placed at the head of a symphony orchestra of sixteen musicians, who are partly concealed during the performance by a trellis of vines. Two high class vocalists have also been engaged, and add to the really fine music of the program.

Another departure is in the prices, which are higher than have ever before been attempted here for regular moving picture performances. All seats except those in the gallery are reserved, and may be secured one week in advance. In the evening orchestra seats are 50 and 25 cents; balcony circle, 25 cents; balcony, 15 cents; gallery 10 cents. Matinee prices are 25 cents for orchestra seats; balcony, 15 cents; with the gallery, as always, 10 cents.

At 11 o'clock on Saturday mornings a "Children's Hour" is given, with a specially arranged program of suitable pictures and music. Admission at this time is 15 cents.

Although the opening feature was Pathe's "The Beloved Vagabond," the Metro production, "My Madonna," was run the second half of the week, with two other Metros, "The Final Judgment," and "The Bridge," for the second week. These productions will hereafter be shown regularly, Mr. Walker having signed a contract for first run in western Canada for the Metro program. Two shows a day are given, and up to the present time the business done has been very good.

Legitimate attractions will play the house on the rare occasions when any are available, but as Mr. Walker said when announcing the change, "It happens for various reasons (which unfortunately I have not the time now to explain) that not so many are coming to Winnipeg as is usual about this time of the year."

Will Change Fire Escapes.

Vancouver, B. C.—After a long drawn out discussion, which for a time threatened the closing of the Avenue theater in Vancouver in the midst of the run of "The Birth of a Nation," the house was finally granted a renewal of its license for 1916 and will be further dealt with by the new city council, just elected.

The Avenue problem has been an annual one with city councils since 1913. It first arose when the Georgia street viaduct was projected, the aldermen realizing that the construction of the Main street end of the bridge would bring the fire escapes of the theater over city property. The Western Amusement Company, owners of the Avenue, were offered $15,000 to move the escapes and effect other changes "during the construction of the viaduct," and accepted the money. The difficulty arose over the interpretation of the word "during." J. E. Bird, council for the owners, contended that the word meant that this required them to make temporary alterations to remain during the time the bridge was being built, while the city held that the theater owners were bound to make permanent alterations, which should have been finished before the completion of the bridge. At the last meeting of the council a resolution was put through authorizing the building inspector to close the theater within twenty-four hours, if an agreement for new fire escapes were not signed. At a special meeting held the following day to consider the matter further it was announced that Mr. Bird had agreed to sign a personal bond for $2,000, guaranteeing that the required improvements would be completed by August 31, and the 1916 license was accordingly granted.

NEW METRO EXCHANGES.

Another program has invaded Western Canada, and it is expected that in the near future Metro pictures will be shown throughout the Western territory. A group of Montreal financial men are behind the venture, having formed the Metro Starfilms, Ltd., with the following officers: President, A. N. Brodeur; vice-president, Paul Galibert; secretary-treasurer, Hal MacBrown; managing director, Herbert Lubin.

Less Kauffman, western general manager for the company, has arrived in Winnipeg, and has secured quarters at 116 Phoenix Block, adjoining those of the Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd. It is Mr. Kauffman's intention to make his headquarters in Winnipeg, and establish branch offices in Calgary and Vancouver, although as yet no definite announcement has been made in regard to the latter cities.

VANCOUVER UNION ELECTS.

Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 348, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., last month held an election of officers in Vancouver for the year 1916 and the following were elected: President, W. E. McCartney; vice president, J. O. Thomas; secretary-treasurer, A. O. Hansen; recording secretary, Wm. Tenny; sergeant-at-arms, Wm. Woolridge; business agent, E. Huttlemayer; executive at large, Wm. Worby; examining board, W. E. McCartney, J. O. Thomas, Jos. La Chance; Trustees, P. Pitner, J. H. Leslie, E. S. Holdsworth; delegates to Trades and Labor Council, P. Pitner, J. O. Thomas; delegate to B. C. Federation of Labor, A. O. Hansen.

After the elections were over the members present, twenty-five in number, repaired to the home of P. Pitner, where the social committee had prepared a fine array of refreshments. An enjoyable evening was spent, with music, etc., and some extraordinary talent was uncovered.

The presence of E. Fortune, of Denver, Colo., Local No. 260, and Harry Lester, of Atlantic City, N. J., Local No. 310, operators traveling with "The Birth of a Nation," was greatly appreciated by those present.

TICKET SELLING CONTEST IN VANCOUVER, B. C.

The National Amusement Company has started a strenuous campaign to increase the business at four of its Vancouver theaters—the Globe, Maple Leaf, Columbia and Princess—and is conducting a contest similar to those often conducted by newspapers in subscription campaigns.

Contestants are required to sell books of admission tickets, ranging in price from $1.00 to $5.00, and containing tickets to a value of $1.10 to $5.50, or a 10 per cent. bonus of free tickets. A certain number of points is allowed contestants for each book of tickets sold with an additional number of credits awarded when the tickets are used for admission, provided the contestant's name is written on them by the user. The tickets are in denominations of 10 and 15 cents, with a different scale of points awarded on the different priced tickets as used.

The contest is short, closing March 11, and expensive prizes are to be awarded, totaling an amount stated to be $5,000. First prize is a touring car, or $1,000 in cash; second, a player piano or $500 in cash; and twelve other prizes of diminishing value. All persons taking part in the contest who do not win one of the principal prizes will be presented with a season ticket to the company's theaters, valued at about $15.

The standing of the various contestants is displayed from day to day on bulletin boards in the lobbies, and special credits for books sold within certain periods serve to keep up the interest.

The effect of this contest on the patronage of other houses will be watched with intense interest.

Basil S. Courtney.

Basil S. Courtney, general manager of the Basil Corporation, owners of the Canadian rights for "The Birth of a Nation," is a comparative newcomer into the moving picture field, but he has already established himself as an exhibitor who is thoroughly conversant with the proper method of presenting a picture in a high-class manner.

At a time when the "wise ones" deemed it a foolish venture, Mr. Courtney induced some friends to join him in the purchase of the Canadian exhibition rights at a high figure, and the business done from the first has completely vindicated his judgment.

Mr. Courtney was born in Glasgow, Scotland, but came to this country at an early age. He was educated at St. Paul's, Concord, N. H., and afterwards entered the insurance business.

"B. C. for the Empire" Films.

Cameraman A. D. Kean, of Vancouver, who has made pictures of all the local battalions which have gone to the front, has joined the forces with the Vancouver branch of the Red Cross Society, and has assembled four reels of military pictures dating from the beginning of the war up to the present time, under the title "B. C. for the Empire." A tour of the entire province is about to be undertaken in the interests of the National Red Cross, the opening date being played at the Avenue theater in Vancouver.

Will Remodel the Bijou in Victoria.

Arrangements have been completed between the owners of the Bijou in Victoria, B. C., and W. P. Nichols, general manager of the National Amusement Company, whereby the Bijou is to be entirely remodeled.

The new plans, which are now being prepared, will greatly increase the seating capacity of the house, and call for the installation of a modern heating and ventilating plant. Every arrangement will be made for the convenience of patrons, and a four-piece orchestra will be provided.

Admission will be five cents.

THE DRAGNET (Three Parts—Feb. 7).—The cast: James Durkin, alias Red Durkin (Harry Mestayer); Bill Avery (Wheeler Oakman); Detective Schulte (Al W. Filson); May Vernon (Vivian Reed). Written by Willard Mack. Directed by Frank Beal.

James Durkin, alias Red Durkin, leaves the prison bars behind him with the resolution to do the right thing. No sooner has he reached the city than he is recognized by Detective Schulte, who resolves, after the manner of many detectives, to keep an eye on James Durkin. Durkin meets Bill Avery, who was a fellow convict. Bill has no conscientious qualms and endeavors to coax Durkin to commit a crime, but his efforts prove unavailing.

Both are summoned to the detective bureau where Durkin tells Detective Schulte that he will live straight. His attitude angers the sleuth, who tells Durkin that he will sooner or later "get him." Durkin obtains a position in a cigar store, but his record comes up through the instrumentality of the detective, and he leaves the position. Durkin meets May Vernon, a homeless girl, who has been deserted by a racetrack attache, and who has enticed her from her uncle's home. She is about in desperation to take her own life when Durkin arrives opportunely and saves her, thus winning her gratitude.

Bill Avery again coaxes Durkin to engage with him in burglary, but Durkin refuses. As they consult together, a raid by the police occurs and both are jailed. Then both are released and Durkin again looks for the girl whom he saved, and to whom he is attracted. Durkin later gains a position as a deliverer of ice. In the meantime May Vernon secures a position as a servant in a wealthy home. Money belonging to the lady of the house is stolen by her son. Detective Schulte is summoned. His suspicions are directed toward May, and when Durkin appears his suspicions are confirmed. However, the lady through the confession of her son, frees the girl.

Bill Avery is arrested for a holdup, and to protect his pal, says that James Durkin was his confederate. The newspapers exploit Avery's alleged confession. Durkin sees it in the morning papers and, with May, whom he has married, escapes to South America. Durkin is making good in the South American country, but one day is recognized by a detective. The one redeeming trait in the hardened heart of Detective Schulte is the love of wife and family. He is assigned to go to South America and arrest James Durkin. He arrives there and enters Durkin's home. There is a desperate conflict between the detective and the persecuted Durkin, and then it is that the detective sees the happiness in the Durkin home. His heart is touched and he wires back to the detective bureau that the wrong man has been suspected.

A MIX-UP IN MOVIES (Feb. 12).—The cast: Tom (Tom Mix); Pat (Pat Chrisman); Sid (Sid Jordan); Banker (Joe Simkin); Leading Lady (Babe Chrisman). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Tom, Pat and Sid, three cowpunchers, arrive in a small Western town, and seeing a motion picture company at work taking scenes in front of the bank gives Tom an idea. That night Tom and his two companions steal the movie camera, and the next day they start a fake scene in front of the bank. While Tom grinds the camera, Pat and Sid enter the bank, get a bundle of money and the onlookers think it is a scene. The three cowpunchers then escape into the hills with the money.

The real movie company form a posse after the sheriff refuses to interfere, thinking the whole thing a joke. The company follow the boys into the hills, accompanied by the leading lady. She discovers the boys, tells them they are real good actors, and can make more money in the movie business, and so the boys follow the leading lady's advice and return the money to the bank.

KALEM.

Still seeking the code book which Marguerite has in her possession. The Wolf schemes so that his tool, Zarth, is installed in her home as butler. Discovering the true identity of Zarth, Fred, Marguerite's admirer, pretends to fall into the trap. Leaving the code book in the safe, he takes a duplicate with him and, as he expected, Zarth informs his master. Queenie, The Wolf's accomplice, inveigles Fred, who pretends to be deceived, to her home.

A struggle with The Wolf ensues after he discovers that he has been tricked. Leaving Fred bound, The Wolf hastens to Marguerite's home. Meanwhile the police, summoned through the fact that the telephone was shot to pieces in the struggle with The Wolf, have freed Fred. As The Wolf is terrorizing Marguerite to secure the code book the police and Fred rush into the house. The Wolf and Zarth make their escape by exploding a gas bomb in the room as the officers rush in.

Cutey is some little latherslinger. He shaves and hair-cuts in Gorgem's barbership for a pittance, and falls in love with Polly. Cutey cannot make love and shave at the same time, so he neglects the latter—with disastrous results to the customers. He finally gets fired, and not having money enough to elope with Polly, he is in sore straits until he lands a job as an agent for safety razors. He is a popular little fellow, and he makes such a hit selling razors that the men all stay away from the barbershop and shave at home. This puts Gorgem out of business, and rendered desperate, he advertises for a pretty lady barber to attract trade.

Cutey dolls up as a sweet thing and gets the job. Then he certainly does start things. All the men in town go wild over his beauty, and he becomes a regular heart-breaker. Gorgem doesn't care, for he is getting the money, but the wives of the men patrons do, and they hold an indignation meeting. It is decided to run Cutey out of town. A great rumpus follows and after an exciting chase, Cutey's makeup comes off and old Gorgem cannot say a word when Cutey walks off with Polly, past the still dazed men and women.

IN ARCADIA (Feb. 18).—The cast: Eric Younglove (William Dangman); Etta Younglove (Ethel Corcoran); Bridget Blaney (Kate Price); Walker, Agent (Edward Elkas); Charles Wray (James Dent); Clerk (William Dunn). Author, W. A. Tremayne. Produced by Courtlandt Van Deusen.

The Youngloves have a cozy little apartment, and a jewel of a cook, Bridget, and are very happy, until the landlord raises the rent. Then they are beguiled by a poetically-worded ad into taking a lease on a "beautiful bungalow," which they are shown on paper by the slick Agent; in Arcadia, "the modern Paradise." A long and wearisome train ride, which lands them in the midst of a wild and lonely section of the country, a two-hour wait for the next branch train, and an apparently endless walk across muddy fields and the Youngloves, with Bridget, arrive at "Eros Villa"—their new home. Some Villa! Tumbled-down old shack with a scrubby hedge running around it.

As the moving van has broken down, their furniture does not arrive, so they spend a veritable nightmare of a night trying to sleep on hard beds hastily made up and being nearly scared to death by huge rats scampering through the rooms. Next morning, Younglove rushes to the Agent's office, who suavely agrees to tear up the lease for two month's rent, and Younglove, his wife and Bridget, all sadder and wiser, go humbly back to a Harlem flat, in peaceful thankfulness.

Second Triangle Night Better Than First

Now comes the report from Florida that the receipts for the second night on which TRIANGLE PLAYS are shown are even better than the first. Probably it is because the first nighters are so impressed that enthusiastically they recommend TRIANGLE PLAYS to their friends.

Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 22nd, 1916.

Mr. A. C. Bromberg, Mgr.,
Triangle Film Corporation,
Atlanta, Ga.

It seems impossible that my second night of TRIANGLE PLAYS should do even greater business than the first night. My patrons have nothing but praise. After checking up my receipts it occurred to me how nice it would be with every night to show TRIANGLE PLAYS.

C. E. DAFFIN.

To the Exhibitor who is skeptical about the advisability of running TRIANGLE PLAYS more than one night this kind of evidence should make a decided impression. Many exhibitors have started with TRIANGLE one-night showings and found it necessary to keep the pictures two or three nights in order to meet the demands of their patrons.

Triangle Releases of February 6th

For real forceful pictures, photoplays that impress the public to the extent of producing the highest praise, the TRIANGLE PLAYS this week are supreme.

Orrin Johnson, the popular actor who already has so many successes to his credit, will star in "D'Artagnan"—a thrilling and exciting filmization of that well known story, "The Three Musketeers." For real adventure, quick action and tense moments there are few pictures that will equal this one. Exhibitors and public alike will appreciate and applaud.

"Acquitted" is the title of the play in which Wilfred Lucas has the principal role. The terrors of the terrible third degree which is imposed upon suspected criminals is one of the many absorbing scenes that make you hold your breath. Your warm sympathy is aroused for the kindly old man in his troubles and you boil with anger at the injustice of his plight.

For the Keystones, the two this week are great—"His Hereafter" and "His Pride and Shame." Both keep the audience doubled up with laughter and furnish more than their share of merriment. Real laughs—big laughs—predominate throughout.

He sees an advertisement in the paper, answers it, and gets a position as janitor in an apartment house belonging to Mr. Ongley. No sooner does Otto begin his labors, when something goes wrong in every flat in the building, and Otto is called upon to fix the trouble.

One of the tenants leaves her baby in charge of Otto while she goes shopping, and Zelda, calling later to see how Otto is getting along, discovers him with the child. She immediately becomes suspicious of Otto and thinks that the child is his. The belief is further strengthened when the mother of the child returns and demands her child. Otto has a hard time convincing Zelda that he was only the baby's guardian, but finally succeeds. After a series of amusing incidents, Otto is fixing the furnace in the cellar when the boiler explodes. He is taken to the hospital, where he is married to Zelda.

HER WAYWARD SISTER (Unit Program—Four Parts—Feb. 7). The cast: Little Joan (Blanche Burns); Little Mary (Elizabeth Bobbs); Little Basil (Mimi Yvonne); Rev. Joseph West (George Clarke); Mary (Helen Greene); Hugh Dean (Francis Joyner); Joan (June Daye); Basil Forde (Clarence Jay Elmer); Gay Boy (Arthur Forbes). Written and produced by Clay M. Greene.

Joan and Mary are the daughters of Joseph West, pastor of the village church. Mary is wild; Joan is the reverse. Among the school children is Basil Forde, a hunchback, timid and gentle, but subject to much abuse from the other children because of his deformity.

Pity has drawn Joan and Basil together, while Mary, whom Basil loves, loathes him. Mary is cruel to Basil and is commanded by the teacher to apologize to him. She refuses, and when the teacher attempts to chastise her Mary fights back and is expelled. When this is brought to her parents, Mary is punished, and develops a loathing for Basil that follows her through the coming years.

Time passes and we see Mary and Joan grown. Basil is deeply in love with Mary, who despises him. Joan has never changed toward Basil. In his devotion to Mary, Basil never sees the wistful look in Joan's eyes. Basil lays the little fortune he inherited at the feet of Mary, who only laughs and taunts him about his crooked back. Comes now a Tempter. This Hugh Dean, son of a classmate of the pastor's, is received into the family. Hugh pays court to Mary, who has been promised in marriage by her parents to Mr. Bolton, the young rector of a neighboring parish. Mary is easily fascinated by Dean and he is requested to keep away from the parsonage, and they meet in secret.

Mary and Dean are surprised on one of their secret meetings by Basil, Joan and Rev. Bolton, who decide that Mary's parents should be told. Joan makes the disclosure and Mary elopes to the city with Dean, and they are married. They quarrel and she finally leaves him and obtains a job on the stage. Basil follows Mary to New York. He meets Dean and learns from him that Mary and he (Dean) have separated. Basil determines to effect a reconciliation. Mary refuses to see Basil, and he follows her to a cafe, where he finds her. Mary will not listen to Basil's pleadings, so he sends for Joan to come to the city. When Joan comes to Mary's apartment with Basil she is not the Joan of old; instead she is the gayest of the crowd, and drinks and smokes like the rest. Basil sees that all this is only a sacrifice of her self-respect for her sister's sake. He also discovers that Joan has loved him all the time. Mary and Joan return to the parsonage and Basil tells Dean that Mary is repentant. A reunion is effected. Later Basil and Joan are married.

THE DIAMOND THIEVES (Feb. 7).—The cast: Dr. John Hawthorne (L. C. Shumway); Ruth, his daughter (Francelia Billington); Jim Clowes (George Routh); Nurse (Adelaide Bronti); Dr. Grover (Ronald Bradbury); Doris (Helen Wolcott). Written by Frank D. Genest. Produced by Wilbert Melville.

Dr. John Hawthorne, a brain specialist, is hard pressed financially. His assistant, Dr. Grover, is in love with Ruth, Hawthorne's daughter, but he is told that he must accomplish a worthy task before thinking of marriage.

Jim Clowes and Doris Weyland, London jewel thieves, arrive in the city, and immediately plan a haul. Doris goes to Dr. Hawthorne and tells him her brother is afflicted with paresis. The doctor advises her to bring the brother to his office the following day at 3 o'clock. Doris visits a jewelry store, and under the name of Dr. Hawthorne's daughter orders a costly selection of diamonds sent to Hawthorne's office the next day at three o'clock on approval.

The pair of thieves arrive at the office immediately after the doctor has received and signed for the diamonds. Jim exhibits one of the symptoms of paresis, and the doctor proceeds with the examination. When he turns his back Jim seizes the diamonds. The doctor catches him in the act. He demands their return; a struggle results, and the doctor is finally overcome by chloroform administered by Doris. The crooks rush out, but they are seen by Grover. When the doctor is brought to, he learns that Ruth did not order the diamonds. He calls up the jeweler, and learns that the stones are worth $9,000. Having signed for them, he is responsible. Grover would call the police, but the doctor prevents him.

A private detective is acquainted with the facts, and they trace the thieves to San Diego, but there the clue is lost. Grover, anxious to establish himself in the doctor's good graces, determines to do a bit of detective work. He leaves for San Diego, and by accident, sees Doris, follows her, and learns that the thieves are planning to rob another jeweler. Accordingly, he informs the jeweler, and takes up a place in the store as a clerk. Doris enters shortly afterward, looks at some diamonds, and cleverly conceals one under the counter with chewing gum. The loss discovered. She is searched, but nothing is found. Then Jim arrives for his part in the theft. He leans against the counter, and deftly removes the diamond. But Grover is watchful this time, and the two thieves are soon in the coils of the law. The other diamonds are found on Jim, and restored to Grover. At home, the jeweler is demanding the diamonds or his money when Grover comes in and saves the doctor's integrity. The doctor gladly consents to Grover marrying Ruth.

THE LAST SHOT (Two Parts—Feb. 8).—The cast: James Nering (Arthur Matthews); Lieutenant Thomas (Earl Metcalf); Italian (Wm. H. Turner); Enid Lang (Ormi Hawley); Rose LaMotle (Eleanor Barr). Written and directed by George W. Terwilliger.

James Nering, a young lawyer, and Lieutenant Thomas are suitors for the hand of Enid Lang. An unfortunate quarrel between the men results to the disadvantage of Thomas, and Nering seizes the opportunity to press his suit with Enid. He wins her consent to marry. The district attorney is bent on the closing of a certain disreputable road house run by Rose LaMotle, a client of Nering's.

Manning's automobile injures a little Italian girl and the father vows to get even. Thomas learns his ship is called to other waters and he goes to see Enid before leaving. She tells him of the engagement, but he succeeds in getting her to take a last ride with him that evening before sailing. The road they take passes the disreputable road house and when the car breaks down a short way beyond it. Enid sees Manning, who is in the vicinity to gain evidence, attacked and left for dead by the Italian.

It being time for Thomas to be aboard his ship they hurry away and it is only in the morning, after Thomas has sailed, that Enid learns that LaMotle is accused of the crime with complete circumstantial evidence against her. Knowing Nering to be her attorney, Enid tells him what she saw, admitting at the same time that she was with Thomas. Nering is infuriated, thinking his fiancee false to him. He accuses her of being at the disreputable road house late at night with Thomas. Enid returns his ring. Securing the sheriff, Nering goes to the Italian's house and accuses him of the crime. A mild third degree forces the truth from him without involving Enid as a witness. Thomas returns, learns of the insult and confronts Nering. Nering in preparation for some such event, has been practicing daily with his duelling pistols. He shows Thomas his accurate marksmanship and then repeats the insult. Thomas accepts the challenge and wins first shot. He wounds Nering, but the latter keeps the fact from him and gets Thomas to sign a paper enabling him to take his, Nering's shot, at any time and anywhere he pleases.

Years later Enid and Thomas are living happily with their two young sons when Nering reads an announcement of the promotion of his former rival. The time he has so long waited for is at hand and he goes to Newport to confront Thomas and take his second shot as agreed upon years ago. Thomas receives him and is about to submit when Nering looks off and sees Enid with her two boys. His heart changes and he fires in the air. Enid comes running on and Nering explains that he came to tell Thomas about a new fire arm.

SOLD TO SATAN (Three Parts—Feb. 10).—The cast: His Majesty (Edward Sloman); John Merrill (L. C. Shumway); Mr. Ashton, the banker (Ben Hopkins); his sister (Adelaide Bronti); his daughter (May Cruzo); his son, Archie (Alan Forrest). Written by Capt. R. P. Rifenborick, Jr. Produced by Edward Sloman.

John Merrill, an outcast, finds himself, on New Year's Eve, outside a gay cafe. He goes to his garret room and declares he would give his soul for youth and gold. Then appears His Majesty, the Prince of the Nether Regions, who agrees to grant his desires if, in return, Merrill delivers to him one soul each year. Merrill consents, and the bargain is on.

Merrill meets Ruth Ashton, daughter of a banker, and falls in love with her. Ruth's brother, Archie, is weak-willed, but good at heart. A year goes by. Merrill receives a communication from His Majesty, demanding Archie's life. He is in a quandary, but decides to obey. Through Merrill, Archie is found cheating at cards and feels disgraced before the club members. Merrill takes the boy into the next room, but there his manner changes and he advises suicide as the only way out. The boy takes the revolver and His Majesty claims his first victim.

Ruth, grieved at her brother's death, postpones the marriage, and Merrill begins to be troubled by visions of Archie. The end of the second year comes and His Majesty demands Ashton as the next victim. Ashton's bank is weathering a panic by the assistance of Merrill's promise not to withdraw his funds. But Merrill forgets his promise, and soon there is a run on the bank. Ashton tries in vain to reach Merrill, and finally chooses the same death as his son. His Majesty has claimed the second victim. The memory of the part he played in the death of the two men soon preys on Merrill's mind. He begins to drink. Ruth, although poor now, will not think of marriage.

As the end of the third year approaches, he is in a state of collapse. The dreaded letter again falls into his lap. He opens it. On it is the name of Ruth Ashton. Merrill looks up and sees the leering face of His Majesty. He defies him, but His Majesty merely mocks him. Finally Merrill sinks into a chair and now he changes to the old man again in the garret room, where he dies, while His Majesty laughingly claims the soul of his latest plaything.

the window. Hunter never misses the bill, and it is found by Wilkens. He goes to advertise that he found the bill, but has no money to pay for the advertisement. He offers the clerk the thousand dollar bill. The clerk almost falls dead and gives him credit for the ad. When he sees what an effect it has, Wilkens determines to use the big bill to raise his credit. Evelyn sees this, and tells her father Wilkens has lots of money.

Wilkens shows the bill at the club and his credit goes up. Scott and Parley see the bill and take him in on their deal. He never has to spend the bill—just show it—or offer it—and everything is all right. Wilkens dines at a restaurant where the proprietor has taken in a lot of small bills. He is glad to get the big bill and changes it so Wilkens can pay for his dinner.

Next morning Wilkens reads that counterfeit $1,000 bills are being passed and that the counterfeiters have dropped them on the street to be rid of them. The restaurant proprietor decides he has a counterfeit bill and has Wilkens arrested. Wilkens offers a check for the bill, but the policeman won't let the proprietor take it. Then Hunter says the bill is real. The land deal goes through and Wilkens' fourth interest makes a handsome profit.

ESSANAY.

A CORRECTION.

In the synopsis of the Essanay three-part picture entitled "Destiny," released on January 29, which was published on page 656 of the issue dated January 22, it was announced that Edmund F. Cobb played the part of Robert Gray. This is an error; Sydney Stone portrayed that character.

THE ROUGH NECK (Two Parts—Feb. 1).—The cast: Jimmy Dugan (Harry Beaumont); Elsie McGraw (Alton Goodrich); Dan McGraw (Ernest Maupain).

Jimmy Dugan and Elsie McGraw are boy and girl sweethearts, their families living on the same floor in a tenement. Dan McGraw, Elsie's father, wins to fame and fortune. They move into an aristocratic neighborhood. Jimmy sees Elsie no more, for his father is a confirmed drunkard and he is forced to knock about the streets earning his money by selling papers. He grows to be a sturdy and honest young man. In a saloon Jimmy overhears some conspirators plotting to send McGraw to jail on a trumped up murder charge. He goes to McGraw's home to tell him of the plot.

He meets Elsie in the hallway. Not recognizing him she calls him a "rough neck." Despite Jimmy's warning, McGraw is arrested. Because of his love for Elsie, Jimmy confesses the crime in order to save her father. He is convicted and sentenced. Before the sentence is executed, however, Jimmy's father is found dying and tells how he himself had committed the murder. Elsie goes to Jimmy, her heart overflowing with gratitude for what he has done. He tells her of his love. Smiling she puts her arms about his neck and as she draws his head down to her, whispers "rough neck."

DREAMY DUD LOST AT SEA (Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson—Feb. 2).—Dreamy Dud and his dog, Wag, go for a spin in the good motor boat, "Wow." When they are miles out at sea the engine stops. Dreamy Dud attempts to fix it, but has no success. Soon all sorts of sea monsters begin to appear around the boat. Finally the little vessel is sunk when a whole school of sawfish appear and saw great holes in it. Dreamy Dud, after swimming all day, sights what he thinks is an island. After finding refuge on it, he discovers he is on the back of a whale. He is finally rescued by an eagle, that swoops down and carries him away. The eagle drops him on an island, inhabited by cannibals. A big fat cannibal throws his boomerang at Dud. Dud ducks, the weapon circling around strikes the cannibal in the back of the head. When he falls, Dud jumps on top of him and is pounding him on the face when he awakens to find himself madly hammering his pillow.

The remaining five hundred feet contain scenes taken around Albuquerque, New Mexico.

THE PRIMITIVE STRAIN (Three Parts—Feb. 5).—The cast: John Harris, a minister (Edward Arnold); Marie, his half sister (Nell Craig); Dan McGraw, a saloonkeeper (Jack Meredith).

On his death bed, the father of John Harris, a minister, confesses the unpardonable sin of his life. Years before he had betrayed a French-Canadian girl called Annette. Before dying she had become the mother of a baby girl. The dying man requests his son to go up to the Great North, find his half sister and make restitution. The young minister goes to the barren North as his father requested. He builds a mission, much to the disapproval of Dan McGraw, owner of the dance hall.

While in McGraw's place he meets Marie, the dance hall queen. He is infatuated. On Sunday the people, including Marie, attend church instead of patronizing McGraw's gambling den. He is furious and when Marie returns locks her in a room and attacks her. She finally escapes to the cabin of John Harris where she falls in a faint at the door. Harris revives her long enough for her to tell the story of her life. She proves to be his sister. Seeking revenge he goes to the dance hall where a terrible fight occurs in which he kills McGraw. He then returns to Marie only to find her dead as a result of McGraw's attack.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 1—"The Tragedy"—Two Parts—Jan. 24).—The cast: Philip Langdon, attorney-at-law (Henry B. Walthall); Mary Page, as Nora (Edna Mayo); David Pollock, who backs the show (Sydney Ainsworth); E. H. Daniels, the manager (Harry Dunkinson).

Mary Page, actress, is playing the leading role in "The King's Daughter," in rehearsal at the opening of the story. The show is secretly backed by David Pollock, man about town, who is in love with the girl. Mary is in love with Philip Langdon, a young lawyer.

Pollock attends every rehearsal. He is really watching Mary. Philip Langdon, attorney-at-law, one day, keeps an appointment with Mary. He is talking to her on the stage when they are discovered by Pollock. Pollock is overcome with rage and orders the manager to show Langdon out. Langdon smilingly leaves the theater and waits outside. Mary goes to her dressing room. Pollock follows and attacks her. He is worsted in a fight by Langdon, who hears Mary's cries.

On its premier, the play is declared a huge success and Mary attends a banquet given for the company. She is accompanied by Langdon, who waits in the hotel lobby. Pollock also goes to the hotel and engages a room, drinking heavily. He sends a bellboy to Mary with the message that Langdon wants to see her and she comes to the room. There she discovers herself trapped. Langdon, meanwhile, sees Mary leave the dining room and follows her. While he is trying to find out where she went, he hears a scream and a shot. He leads the crowd to Pollock's room, where he finds him dead. Mary is arrested.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 2—Two Parts—"The Trial"—Jan. 31).—Mary Page is placed on trial for her life for the murder of David Pollock. She is defended by Philip Langdon. The first witness to go on the stand is the bellboy whom Pollock sent to summon Mary from the banquet table to his room. He tells the jury how Pollock had bribed him to tell Mary it was Mr. Langdon who wished to see her. The hotel detective is next to take the stand. He tells of the finding of Pollock's body with Mary in a dead faint beside it, and of the pistol which lay at her side. The theater carpenter's testimony is damaging to the State's evidence. Mary Page, the defendant, finally takes the stand. When asked why she took a pistol to the banquet, she explains that she intended to give it to Langdon. It was the pistol Langdon wrested from Pollock in their fight in her dressing room. After giving her testimony, Mary Page falls in a faint and court is adjourned.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 3—Two Parts—"The Web"—Feb. 7).—The leading man in Mary Page's theatrical company has just created a sensation in the courtroom, where Mary is on trial charged with the murder of Dave Pollock. "Langdon was either in the room or at the door when Dave Pollock was murdered!" is the accusation made by the witness. The courtroom is quickly quieted and the charge seemingly is forgotten.

Ruth Pollock, sister of the murdered man, takes the stand. Her startling testimony carries the spectators back to the time when Philip, Mary and Dave Pollock were young people together in a country town. Mary, it seems, had been engaged to Pollock. Her father, a heavy drinker, had forged Pollock's name to a check and to save her father from prosecution, although she loved Philip, she promised to marry Dave. The announcement was made at a dance.

Philip, not knowing of the forgery, believed Mary had jilted him and went into the bar and began drinking. Mary tried to get him out of the place and as she stood there, her arms around Philip, Pollock appeared. Mary announced that she could marry no one but Langdon and Pollock, enraged, produced the check bearing the signature forged by Dan Page, Mary's father. Langdon, for the first time, realized the power Pollock had over Mary, and seized the check and destroyed it.

The check proved to be only a copy and Pollock browbeats Mary into promising again to wed him. "But," Mary threatened Pollock, "you will regret this to the end of your life." Brandon, the reporter, who testified to the scene at the dance, swore that during the struggle he saw on Mary's shoulder finger prints that came and faded away in an uncanny manner.

The alternations of the current in an alternating-current arc cause the light to flicker. This flickering is made more noticeable on the screen if the shutter is not operating properly, causing fatigue to the patrons' eyes and making them dissatisfied. The current in a direct-current arc flows continuously in the same direction so that its light is steady and restful.

Brandon was another of the young people in Mary's home town who went to New York. He was in police headquarters the morning after the murder, discussing the mysterious affair when Mary Page, in evening gown, without hat or coat, was brought in by a policeman who had found her wandering in the street. As Brandon stood there and heard Mary murmuring incoherently again he saw on her shoulder those uncanny finger prints. As he approached Mary the door opened and Langdon entered.

"I give myself up," said Mary to the sergeant and turned and fell into Langdon's arms.

THE FABLE OF THE GRASS WIDOW AND THE MESMEREE AND THE SIX DOLLARS (Feb. 9).—The cast: The Grass Widow (Warda Howard); The Keen Business Man (Carroll C. James); His Wife (Marion Skinner).

One day a keen business man, who thought nobody could show him, was sitting at his desk when a classy grass widow floated in and stood smiling at him. Had it been a man book agent, the K. B. M. would have shouted "Sick 'em," and reached for a paper weight, but when the agent isn't so poor to look at, well, he only yammered when he tried to tell her he couldn't be interested. She kept to her little song and smiled and sat a little closer.

He got so dizzy he had to lock his legs under the chair to keep from turning turtle. She pushed her jewelled pen into his mitt and showed him where to sign. When the seven-pound copy of "Happy Hours With Poets" was delivered, and he paid out six silver pieces, he hated himself worse than ever. K. B. M. carried the book home to his wife. She flagged him and said all her women acquaintances had received these same books—that a crowd of married men must have been given a club rate. He refused to talk about it any more. Meanwhile the grass widow is living at the finest hotel on Michiban boulevard. Moral: Those who are entitled to it, get it sooner or later.

GOLDEN LIES (Three Parts—Feb. 12).—The cast: Edward Devlan (Bryant Washburn); Vera Walton (Elizabeth Burbridge); Tom Devlan (Patrick Calhoun).

Thomas Devlan, a good-for-nothing, becomes engaged to Vera Walton. Edward, his brother, is a postman, and an honest, hard-working chap. Vera pines for him and wonders why he does not write.

Finally her mother requests Edward to write letters daily to Vera and make believe they are from Tom. He does so, and Vera immediately begins to improve. Somehow she suspects the ruse and continually asks for Tom. Edward is again called upon to impersonate his brother, and marry her. He does so. For several years they live happily together, Vera, being blind, thinks she married Tom. Finally Tom returns to her, but she sends him away, telling him that she had known of the deception, but had really grown to love Edward.

A STICKY AFFAIR (Feb. 3). The home of Prof. Perkins, the inventor of a wonderfully adhesive glue, is under the supervision of Lena Brown, who has a penchant for brass buttons. Plump and Runt, the pride of the local police force, are rivals for Lena's hand, but Lena refuses to accept either one until they have proven themselves heroes. Each one strives to outdo the other in deeds of bravery in order to win the affections of Lena, but without success.

The city is visited by two famous crooks, who after looking over various suitable locations, finally decide to rob the house of the professor. While they are engaged in burglarizing the house, both Plump and Runt are enjoying the hospitality of Lena. The love-making is interrupted by the appearance of the professor, and Lena hides both Plump and Runt in the closet. They try to make their escape from there disguised in women's attire, but are discovered by the irate professor, who has also summoned the police to come to his assistance.

Plump and Runt followed by the professor and their fellow policemen are chased through the house to the roof-tops from which they try in vain to escape. In the meantime an explosion has occurred in the laboratory of the professor, causing the glue to run over the floor, firmly entrapping the two burglars at work on the safe. They find themselves stuck fast to the glue and unable to extricate themselves from their plight.

On the roof-tops Plump and Runt after having been chased by the other policemen and the professor, hide behind the skylight through which the professor in his rush to seize the two offenders, falls through, which mishap causes Plump and Runt to follow him headlong in his descent. They fall through the entire three floors of the house and finally land on the floor of the laboratory where they also find themselves stuck fast in the glue beside the two burglars. When they recover from the shock of the fall, Plump's first thoughts are to rescue Lena who has also been stuck fast in the glue. He succeeds in saving her thereby causing Lena to acknowledge him as her hero to the chagrin of Runt.

THE GETAWAY (Feb. 4).—When Mrs. Pokes, the ruler of the Pokes domicile, intercepts an invitation for her better half to sit in a friendly little card game, she marches the unfortunate bread winner of the family off to bed. Thinking that since Pokes is now safely enthroned in bed and his clothes safe in her possession, Mrs. Pokes ceases to worry. Pokes, however, escapes via the window route and, joining his pal Jabbs, they make their way to the card game. Here Pokes' hard luck again visits him, for just as he is about to scoop in the banner pot of the session, the house is raided and Pokes and Jabbs have a very eventful time making their escape.

In trying to reach the street in safety they become bewildered, and instead of locating the door to the street, succeed in only disturbing the other occupants of the house. Their retreat being cut off both from the street and the fire escape, they finally take refuge in the chimney of the house of the very police official who had raided the card game. After an eventful period of hiding in the chimney, during which time the two friends are subjected to the delightful sensation of being roasted from below and stunned from above, they are finally dislodged, and to crown their misfortunes find themselves in the presence of their respective wives.

BUNGLES RAINY DAY (Feb. 10). Not being anxious to have his new suit spoiled, Bungles was greatly worried over the important question of whether he should carry his umbrella or not. But because of his in bility to arive at any decision, he allows himself to be influenced by trivial circumstances, the result of which is that Bungle starts off the day disastrously to himself. Added to his misfortunes of the morning, he finds his sweetheart being beset by two tramps who are trying to rob her of her purse. After he puts the tramps to rout, he is amazed to discover that his sweetheart has deserted him, and he wanders through the city in a vain search of her. Finally, when he does find her, in his eagerness to be with her again, he succeeds in incurring the hostility of some piano movers, who swear to get revenge on poor Bungle.

The tramps also plan to avenge themselves on Bungle, and when they see the poor fellow being driven from his sweetheart's home by her irate mother, who has been insulted by Bungle, they join forces with the piano men. In the resultant melee that follows, Bungle is the recipient not alone of a beating, but of one of the most complete drenchings at the hands of the fire department.

Pokes thinks only of re-establishing himself firmly in his sweetheart's affections and to further his suit, gives to Ethel the very necklace that he has stolen from her mother.

When Jabbs and his wife meet Pokes, they quickly recognize him as the man who has caused them so much annoyance and Jabbs summons his trusty fellow members of the secret organization. They chase unfortunate Pokes up through the house to the roof-tops from where Pokes succeeds in escaping, but only to stumble into the meeting rooms of the society. Here Pokes succeeds in turning the tables on Jabbs and his fellow conpirators and completely routs the entire society.

PHANTOM ISLAND (Two Parts—Feb. 5).—The cast, John Harding (Francis Ford); Robert Law (Jay Belasco); Pearl Jeffries (Dorothy Davenport); Mr. Jeffries (Bert Wilson); The Phantom (Bobby Mack). Scenario by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford.

In order that his daughter, Pearl, may become better acquainted with her fiancee, Robert Law, Mr. Jeffries, a wealthy man, has sent them in his private yacht for a cruise in the South Sea. Robert takes his servant, John, along.

Jeffries has just received a letter from his daughter stating that they were leaving Cuba and that she thought his suggestion of taking the trip to become better acquainted with Robert was a good one. Hardly had he finished reading this letter before one of his clerks brought in a newspaper telling of the wreck of the Mary Anne, the boat in which the young people had sailed. The paper advances the theory that all were lost. Jeffries is stunned by the blow and does everything possible to find out if there were any survivors.

On an island in the South Sea a piece of wreckage is thrown upon the beach; clinging to it are three people, Robert, Pearl and John. As time goes on Robert neglects the girl more and more and she learns to rely upon John for everything. Several times John has discovered a strange creature watching them and the three begin to think that the island is haunted, as they can never get but a glimpse of the phantom.

One night the phantom slips into the primitive hut in which Pearl sleeps and tries to take the girl away. John hears her screams and rushes in and frightens the intruder away. He tracks the creature to a cave and they have a fight. John finds that the phantom is really an old man, half crazed from the solitude and in the fight which follows, John throws the old man over a cliff. John sees a cave nearby and wandering in he finds a chest full of gold and silver. John realizes that with the wealth he has, he has an equal chance to win the girl, but in the greed for wealth, which follows, he forgets everything but the sight of money. He is recalled to the present by the arrival of Robert and Pearl and he tries to hide the chest of wealth.

The old man, however, had not been killed, but only stunned, and he makes his way back to the cave. John tells Pearl that she belongs to him, now and attempts to carry her away. He and Robert have a fight, during which John is knocked out. Pearl then realizes that she has been deluded in John and has cared for Robert all the time. The old man then returns and lays claim to the chest, which John thought was his own. The story ends happily when a passing vessel sees their distress signal and takes them off the island.

A SEPTEMBER MOURNING (Two Parts—Feb. 6).—The cast: The Artist (Ray Griffith); The Girl (Gertrude Selby); Art Dealer (Pathe Lehrmann); Father (Gene Rogers).

The artists were trying to paint September mornings one September morning, but it soon developed into a September evening with a good night attached, when one of them tried to sell a bum painting to a shrewd dealer and the other tried to paint a model against her will. This unpleasantness was soon over, however, and the artists got into a Grecian garden where some dancing girls were running around with a smile and some jewelry on, and a gentleman was trying to take snap shots with a camera.

The gentleman and the artists tried to look at the ladies simultaneously and as there was only room for one spectator there arose a dispute as to who should gain the vantage point. This dispute was not polite and the three gentlemen start to chase one another about among the poison ivy and whortle berry vines. The dancers remained unembarrassed, but some conscientious policemen thought they were indecent and attempted to hold overcoats over them out of respect for the public morals.

The ladies thought different, however and ditched the policemen in the cold lake and went back to dance in the sunlight. Things were almost smooth and delightful again when the art dealer appeared and insisted with a Krupp gun the artist could hardly refuse. Also the other artist was confronted with some little past professional dirty work and he indulged in it at one time, and this little affair was unpleasant. The only ones who remained unruffled were the dancing girls who continued to sport in the sun.

WHEN AUNT MATILDA FELL (Jan. 31).—The cast: The Boy (Eddie Lyons); The Girl (Ethel Lynn); Aunt Matilda (Stella Adams); Weary William (Lee Moran); Tired Ted (Gus Alexander). Written and produced by Al. E. Christie.

William and Ted, two experienced knights of the road, are put off their "side door pullman" and set out for the residence district to seek a "hand out." Eddie is in love and the girl reciprocates his affection, but a man-hating aunt stands in the way of their ultimate happiness. Crossed in love many years before, Aunt Matilda is well known for her sentiments and for this reason it is a hard matter for anyone to see the girl.

Weary and Ted arrive at the Aunt's house and their pitiful tale is about to bring forth a pie from the cook, when Aunt Matilda sees them and angrily orders them begone. Eddie, seeing there is no chance to see his girl about the house, persuades her to slip off and go for a picnic with him the following day. Arrangements are made and Eddie drives up in his machine for the girl. The girl meanwhile has been preparing a big lunch and just as she starts to leave, Aunt Matilda comes in. Ethel "pulls off" a faint and while Aunty runs for the smelling salts, Ethel beats it for the auto.

Aunt Matilda sees Eddie and the auto and sets out in pursuit. She is successful and jumps in too. Eddie and the girl are unable to get rid of her and are then forced to take Aunty along. This, of course, spoils all chance for a quiet spoon, and about the only excitement left, is to eat lunch.

Weary and Ted, rambling around, come across the auto and investigate. Weary puts on the coat and goggles, while Ted rummages in the tool box and finally toots the horn. Eddie runs up to them. Eddie sees a way to get rid of Aunt and through the medium of a ten dollar bill, persuades Weary to make love to Aunt Matilda (disguised in the auto coat and goggles).

Ted gets jealous and starts a fight; in the melee which follows Weary is shown up in his true colors. Eddie and the girl come up in time to accuse Aunty of making love on the sly, and she cannot offer any legitimate reason to prevent them from following her example. Weary and Ted, seeing it is no place for them, make good their escape and Aunt Matilda is forced to consent to the engagement of Eddie and the girl.

is coming to play for her. Her piano is in a frightful condition, and, hearing a piano tuner next door, rushes over and demands Spyer, the supposed piano tuner, to come and tune her piano.

Now Spyer, although he had never before seen the inside of a piano, makes a bold attempt to tune it. He gets it all apart and then cannot get it back together again. Fearful of Mrs. Largo, he makes his escape, going back to Spots' home. Spots, returning home, has hidden himself behind the piano; whereupon Spyer entering, Spots puts things in a general confusion, setting Mrs. Spots at her wit's ends. Spyer now reveals his identity to Spots, and at the same time assures him that Mrs. Spots is all right.

Mrs. Largo, discovering the condition of her piano, rushes immediately over to Spots' home. Spyer, seeing her, ducks and hides in a clothes press. Bumtone, in trying to make his escape from behind the piano, runs into Spots, who, thinking him the detective, bids him sit down and have a smoke. Mrs. Largo, spying Bumtone, rushes upon him, grabs him by the ear, leads him over to her house and bids him to do his best. Bumtone knocks the piano over, causing it to crash through the floor to the basement.

Mrs. Largo, horrified, chases him down the street and again runs into Spyer. Thinking she is seeing things, she decides she had better consult a doctor. Professor Pounderalloutski and Viola Tremolo meantime call and finding the door open, go in to amuse themselves upon the piano till their hostess returns.

LAEMMLE.

THE WISE MAN AND THE FOOL (Two Parts—Feb. 3).—Myrtle Elliott (Myrtle Gonzalez); Fred Hunt (Fred Crurch); Ray Willis, Jr. (Val Paul); R. W. Willis, Sr. (Alfred Allen). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Myrtle Elliott, a young debutante, is very much interested in Fred Hunt, an enginner employed in a copper mine, owned by a firm of which R. W. Dillis is the head. Willis has long hoped that his son would become sufficiently interested in the business to become a partner; but Ray, the son, likes nothing but pleasure. Finally, Willis tells his son that if he will settle down and marry within six months he will be made a partner in the business. The father then remarks that he would like to see Myrtle Elliott become the wife of Ray.

Hunt is very backward in his suit for the hand of the girl, but finally summons up enough courage to propose. Myrtle tells him that she cannot give him a definite answer until he settles down as she can never marry a man who is liable to be sent off at a moment's notice. Ray calls upon Myrtle and sees the feeling she has toward Hunt and persuades his father to transfer Hunt to the mines, not telling the real reason for his request.

With his rival out of the way Ray improves his opportunities and soon has the girl so that she encourages his suit to a certain extent. He remonstrates with her for thinking of Hunt occasionally and resolves to so disappoint the girl in Hunt that she will entirely forget him. Ray goes to the mines and secures a picture of Hunt and his sister, which he carries back and shows to Myrtle, telling her that Hunt has a sweetheart at the mines. Shortly afterward Hunt receives the letters he has written to Myrtle back unopened and cannot understand the girl's treatment of him. Through pique Myrtle listens to Ray's proposal and finally a wedding day is set.

To take away the sting of the girl's treatment of him Hunt becomes very much interested in the little book of parables which Myrtle gave him when he left, especially so in the one concerning the "Wise Man and the Fool." This parable deals with the Fool in search of happiness who overlooked the important point and the Wise Man had secured the happiness of which the Fool is in quest. He takes the lesson to fit his own case and determines to take matters into his own hands. He returns to the town to seek out Myrtle and demand an explanation. Ray learns of his arrival and persuades Myrtle to marry him immediately.

Hunt goes to the mining company's office and thus learns that Ray and Myrtle are on their way to get married. He follows them to the little town and finally locates them in front of the chruch. He believes the marriage has already been performed, but rather than go away without learning why the girl has slighted him, asks her this question. She tells him of the picture incident and the stories that Ray had brought back concerning Hunt and his supposed sweetheart. Myrtle flies into a rage, declares that she has been deceived and refuses to have anything more to do with Ray. Hunt is still under the impression that the two have been married and starts to leave the scene, but Myrtle laughingly tells him that they had missed the minister and the marriage had not yet been performed. Ray receives his just deserts, while Hunt comes into the reward which he justly deserves.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

GRAFT (No. 9—"The Insurance Swindlers"—Two Parts—Feb. 7).—The cast: Tom Larnigan (Harry D. Carey); Bruce Larnigan (Hobart Henley); Mrs. Larnigan (Nanine Wright); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Roger Maxwell (Marc Fenton); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Kitty Rockford (Mina Cunard); Ben Travers (Jack Connelly).

The insurance companies, organized in one mighty trust, have been using the policy holders' money to speculate with. Tom Larnigan has announced that he will investigate and proceed against the trust. Stone has an article inserted in a trust newspaper denying the charge of irregularitiy in the use of insurance funds, and inviting an inspection of the books, business and vaults of the Providential Insurance Company.

Maxwell is the president of this concern, as well as being president of the trust, therefore, when he reads the article he is much disturbed, as he explains to Stone, the business at that time will not bear inspection. Stone assures him that everything will work out right. The pick of Dunn's gunmen have been stationed at different points where Tom will be obliged to pass. This is the most desperate plan that Stone has resorted to.

Tom has his suspicions aroused by seeing a couple of crooks outside the hotel where Ben Travers is staying. Tom changes places with a jitney bus driver and gets in the hotel, where he finds that Travers has purchased the Independent, to aid Tom in his fight. Tom leaves the hotel in the jumper and cap of one of the porters, jostles a policeman and is taken to the station where he reveals his identity and borrows a policeman's uniform. (His position as special examiner allows him to do this.) He proceeds to the Providential Insurance Company's office unrecognized. Once inside he demands to see the books. Barnett, the manager, allows him to proceed with the investigation, meanwhile phoning to Maxwell for instructions.

The latter, prompted by Stone, tells Barnett to have the vault door accidentally closed when Tom is inside—it is equipped with a time lock. The plan is carried out and Tom is locked in the vault. Experts are summoned and after several hours' work the vault is opened. Tom has been slowly suffocating; he falls heavily, striking the back of his head on a sharp projecting handle of a safe box. He is rendered unconscious and the injury at the base of the skull causes suspended animation. The doctor who is on hand when the vault is opened pronounces him dead. The body is turned over to the heartbroken mother.

Bruce, just able to be about, has called on Dorothy and is about to propose when the news of Tom's death is received. While Tom's body is stretched in the coffin his astral body appears to the members of his family and friends, urging them to bind his neck in a certain way that consciousness may return to him. All get the suggestion in a vague way, but none of them get it strong enough to act upon.

Maxwell is suffering from an accusing conscience, which is intensified when Tom's actual body appears to accuse him. He does not see Tom but feels his presence. To relieve his mental strain, he writes a full confession of the graft in the insurance game, puts it in an envelope and sends it by messenger to the Larnigan cottage, with instructions to deliver personally only to Tom Larnigan; failing to do this, to return it.

Kitty Rockwell has called at the cottage and gets Tom's suggestion strong enough to act on it. She twists his head and he recovers. The joy of family and friends can be imagined. About this time Maxwell's messenger arrives with the confession. Tom receives it and hurries at once to the directors' room of the insurance companies, where a meeting is in progress. He tells them of the reforms that must be made. Surprised at the knowledge of their affairs, they summon Maxwell. The latter enters the room and sees Tom with his confession. The combination is too much for his nerves and he collapses. He suffers a stroke of paralysis. The reforms are promised.

Bruce has called at the Maxwell home to urge Dorothy to marry him. Maxwell is brought in helpless. Dorothy sees that a union between her and Bruce would be impossible, and in sorrow she bids him goodbye. Tom adds the name of "Roger Maxwell—helpless" to his book.

SON O' THE STARS (Three Parts—Feb. 2).—The cast: Son o' the Stars (J. Warren Kerrigan); Robert Reynolds (Nobert A. Myles); Marie Lacouvrer (Ethel Phillips); Madeline Brent (Helen Leslie); John Brent (Buck Connor); Wapita (Will E. Lloyd). Scenario by Nell Shipman. Produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Ever since Son o' the Stars was an infant, Wapita has been his guardian. Now he is a young man twenty-five years old, and because of the color of his skin, which has been browned by his outdoor occupations, and the shape of his eyes, he is taken for a half-breed. Wapita, who is a dumb Indian, has taught the young man the Indian sign language, and the two have lived happily all these years. One day Son returns after a protracted visit at the trading post presided over by Brent, and he tells Wapita that while there he met Madeline, the daughter of the trader, and that in order to be in her presence he made a lot of purchases. He continued to make purchases until he saw Madeline bestow her affection upon Poleron Dore, when he made his departure.

Son is always at the post thereafter. This provoked Dore, and he asks Brent if he would permit the affectionate advances made by Son, whom he characterizes as a half-breed, towards Madeline to be continued. Brent voices his objections, and with Dore goes home to look for his daughter. She is not there, however, for Son had been there, proposed, was accepted and then took her to Wapita. Brent and Dore trace them to Wapita's cabin, where Brent tells Son that if he is ever caught with his daughter again that he will be killed. Heartbroken, and after heaping curses upon his race, Son falls asleep. Son's extreme sorrow and his denunciation of the Indian race brings memories of the past to Wapita.

In the visualization we are shown how Son came to be the charge of the Indian. Marie Lacouvrer is loved by two men. Jack Reid, an artist, and Robert Reynolds, a millionaire. Marie marries the rich man, an incident which breaks the heart of Jack. Time passes and Jack becomes a famous artist. He meets Marie while on a mountain trip and learns that she is greatly disappointed in her husband, who has become brutal. Then Marie receives news that her husband is drowned, and several months later Jack and she are married. Their union is blessed with a baby boy. Suddenly one night Reynolds returns and demands his wife. In the duel that is fought, Reynolds fires before the count, wounding Jack. He, his wife and baby manage to escape to the tent of Wapita. They are trailed by Reynolds, but before he can kill Jack, the latter fires and instantly kills the intruder. The next day the soldiers arrive and take the body away. Fearing that he will break down at the trial and reveal who committed the murder, thereby breaking his promise to Jack not to tell, as he could see the justice of the act, Wapita cuts out his tongue. He is thereby unable to make any statement and Jack is set free. Not long after this incident, Marie dies. Jack, leaving his baby son in the care of Wapita, goes to the hilltop where his wife is buried to give vent to his grief. There he is attacked by Weana, the sweetheart of Wapita, who blames him for the sacrifice her sweetheart made. She thrusts her knife into his breast and he dies.

The visualization fades out upon Wapita gazing at the sleeping young man who has been condemned because he is thought to be an Indian. Wapita knows that Waena can prove his parentage, and he goes to get her. While he is gone, Son decides to go out of the life of Madeline forever, but before leaving he determines to see her once more. Preparations at the post are in progress for the wedding of his beloved and Dore. He locates her in her room and claims her, and together they flee down the river. Meanwhile Wapita has found Waena. The lovers are pursued by Brent and Dore. They all meet at the cabin of Wapita, where Waena produces evidence that Son is a white man. Madeline and Son are later married.

THE SOUL MAN (Feb. 4).—The cast: John Rhoades (King Baggot); Hetty White (Marie Weisman); The Sheriff (Ned Reardon); William Wilton (William Bailey); The Child (Lois Alexander). Written by William Addrian Lathrop. Produced by Harry McRae Webster.

John Rhoades, a tramp, after a lapse of years, returns to his native village. There is an ordinance posted on the outskirts of the village giving warning that unless tramps leave within fifteen minutes they will be put to work for ten days on the rock piles. Rhoades comes to a gate and the dog barks at him, and as he leans against the gate his thoughts are of his happy youth. Then follows a visualization of Rhoades as a young man, bidding goodbye to his sweetheart, Hetty White.

Rhoades wanders down the road, comes to an open gate and walks in. Hetty, who is married now, comes out of the house but fails to recognize Rhoades. Hetty brings food for Rhoades and her child asks him what makes him so sad. As Rhoades is telling her that through a terrible mistake he lost the love of an angelic woman, the sheriff and a lot of people arrive and order the tramp to leave the village.

Next we see Rhoades sitting on the grass near a fire and thinking over his ill-past life. Presently there is a visualization of how it all came about. We see young Rhoades after his arrival in the city in partnership with William Wilton, both from the same village. His partner appropirates all the money in the safe and throws Rhoades into bankruptcy. Then Hetty, owing to Rhoades failure, breaks her engagement. This crushes him and he starts to lead the life of a tramp. The visualization fades out and Rhoades is seen still sitting near the fire.

Later we see Hetty bending over her child, who is in a delirious fever. Meanwhile Rhoades has tramped back to this vicinity and is sleeping in an open field. Hetty leaves the bedside of the sick child to go for the doctor and the little girl in her delirium, gets out of bed and wanders away, towards the field where Rhoades is sleeping. Rhoades awakens and rushes to the child and taking the child up in his arms he starts to take her back to her mother. The mother, meantime, returns and finding the bed empty, is frantic with anxiety. When she sees Rhoades she rushes towards him and cries with joy over the recovery of her child.

The child is put to bed, but keeps calling for the tramp. The doctor, who has arrived, warns Rhoades that the little girl has scarlet fever, but Rhoades disregards the warning. After days of constant devotion on his part the crisis is past, and the little girl is on the road to recovery. Wilton, Hetty's husband, who has been away on a business trip, returns. Hetty brings him into the room and tells Rhoades she wishes to introduce her husband. Rhoades sees that her husband is no other than Wilton, his ex-partner. He is about to denounce Wilton, then he sees the baby and bows his head. He cannot bring any more sorrow to the home of his old sweetheart by destroying her faith in the father of her child.

He lifts the baby in his arms and kisses her tenderly. Wilton is in terror, for fear of exposure of his villainy, but Rhoades simply gives him a look of scornful contempt and goes off. He bids Hetty goodbye without betraying his own identity.

GOLD SEAL.

LORD JOHN'S JOURNAL (NO. 3—Three Fingered Jenny Three Parts Feb 1). The cast: Lord John Haslemere (Wm. Garwood); Dr. Rameses (Albert MacQuarrie); Maida Odell (Stella Razeto); The Head Sister (Laura Oakley); Nickie (Master Holbrook); Paul Teano (Sampolo); Richard Wayne (Malcolm Blevins); Jenny (Carmen Phillips). Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Edward Le Saint.

In his room at the Monumental Hotel, Lord John recalls the stirring events of the night before and makes clear just what happened when he rescued Maida Odell from the Gray Sisterhood. Maida insists on rejoining the Gray Sisterhood. Lord John, convinced that a mystery is to be solved, delays his departure for Europe. He calls in Paul Teano, the Bertillon expert, and instructs him to make photographs of certain finger prints, he, Lord John, has discovered on a strange box found under his bed. Lord John also explains to Paul that two nights previous, two strange women, dressed in the garb of the Gray Sisterhood, occupied a room across the hall from him, and that someone invaded his room, stealing from him certain diagrams to the electrical wiring of Maida Odell's mummy.

Lord John leaves to visit Miss Odell and to urge her against rejoining the Gray Sisterhood. The Gray Sisterhood, supervised by a strange, unknown woman, is chartered as a charity organization, with certain secret orders. It is also known that this strange woman is the sister of one Rameses, an Egyptian seer and hypnotist. It is also suggested that Rameses is the person who is exercising the strange, untraceable influence over Maida Odell's mummy, which Rameses knows contains valuable jewels, and also to work the death of Maida Odell, without, however, endangering himself in the slightest degree to the police.

Lord John arrives at the Odell home, but is refused admittance to Maida. Simultaneous with Lord John's arrival, the Head Sister arrives and is admitted to Maida. Lord John tries to pass a note in to Maida, but the Head Sister steals this note, which informs Maida that he has reasons to suspect the integrity of the Gray Sisterhood. Meantime, Paul Teano has made a startling discovery. In the room across the hall he has found the print of a woman's hand with but three fingers. This he photographs along with the finger prints of a child's hand inside the strange box.

Lord John enters with the angry motorcycle policeman, his captive. Paul Teano studies the fake policeman for a second and then leaps for his throat. The fake cop is locked in the bathroom while Lord John demands an explanation from Paul. Paul proceeds to tell him his story.

In Italy, Paul's wife, Jenny, was taken away by an interpreter, one Tony. She took with her their child, Nickie. Paul came to America to search for the girl and to forgive her, and to be revenged against the man, Tony. Jenny had lost one of her fingers. It was the discovery of the strange hand in the adjoining room that first agitated Paul. The fake con is the man Paul has been searching for.

And so it is Jenny, as a member of the Gray Sisterhood has been used as a tool by the Head Sister to carry out her brother, Rameses', work. The false cop escapes. Disguised as Coast Guards and preparing with a speedy motorboat, Lord John and Paul invade the Gray Sisterhood that night. Lord John fails to rescue Maida, but between the two men they succeed in rescuing Three fingered Jenny. A short distance from the Gray Sisterhood Jenny is more than willing to return to Paul, but explains that they hold her son, Nickie, a captive, and that he will suffer unless she returns.

Lord John observes Rameses with Nick emerging from a secret underground passage leading to the Gray Sisterhood and attempting to escape with the boy. Lord John, with Paul and Jenny, gives chase. Rameses, forcing Nickie along with him, takes refuge in one of his own speedy motorboats in a bay a mile away. Lord John, with the others, follows in the boat he has prepared for such an emergency. Rameses' boat is finally overtaken. There is a struggle and in making good his escape. Rameses returns to his secret den, there to find the cringing Tony, who realizes his punishment to be severe for his failure to keep Lord John out of the fracas.

A CHILD OF CIRCUMSTANCES (Feb. 4).—The cast, the old bachelor (Marc Robbins); the little thief (Ella Hall).

Although surrounded by wealth and luxury the old bachelor is denied the pleasure of any one to care for him and share his wealth during his old age.

In another part of the city a gang of thieves are plotting to make a haul that night. Among them is a girl, almost a child, a victim of circumstances, who has fallen in with the crooks and is unable to escape their clutches. They tell her that she is selected to pull off the haul that night and that it will be the last "job" she will do.

That night, as the old man sits alone in his darkened library, he hears movements in the room and flashing on the lights, finds the intruder, who proves to be a girl. Her crook companions have accompanied her and are keeping watch outside. The old man is struck with the tragedy in the girl's eyes and in a fatherly manner remonstrates with her for being in such a nefarious business.

The child tells of her sad story and the old man asks her to share his wealth. She consents. The crooks outside are seen by policemen, who take them into custody, while the old man sees that the little girl is safely put to bed and he dreams of the many happy moments which are to follow.

ONE WHO PASSED BY (Feb. 6).—The cast, Willard Wright (Ben Wilson); Agnes, his wife (Lila Barclay); Jed Hawkins (Joseph W. Girard); Mary, his wife (Dorothy Phillips). Written by M. B. Havey. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Willard Wright is a rich broker who has a wife upon whom he lavishes much money and care. But one day she finds this life of idleness and luxury too slow and she runs away with a ne'er-do-well. This breaks Willard's heart. He pays no attention to business and travels the road to oblivion and disgrace.

He finally becomes a tramp, begging for his food from the farm houses and inns that he passes along the route. One day he stops at the home of Jed Hawkins, a rich but miserly farmer. Mary, Hawkins' wife, feeds Wright. Her husband come home and tells Wright he must work for his food and orders him out to the wood pile.

To please the woman and to make it easier for her, Willard agrees to do this. He hears Mary pleading with her husband to buy her a new dress at a sale they are having in town; he also hears Hawkins refuse, as he folds a heap of bills into his pocket. Seeing how miserable the woman is, Willard determines to get the dress for her. He follows Hawkins, holds him up, extracts twenty dollars from the roll, and going off to town, he buys the gown and sets back with it.

Hawkins has been found by the constable and a posse starts out after the tramp. He is spotted, a bullet strikes his arm, but he keeps on until he reaches Hawkins' home. He deposits the dress on the steps and steals off. The posse, tracing the drops of blood, come up to the house. Hawkins sees the parcel, and, as he picks it up angrily, the dress falls out. Mary comes from the house and sees her husband standing there with her much longed-for dress in his arms. She takes it from him and thanks him and calls him the best husband in the world.

Dismissing the posse, Hawkins, who now understands why the tramp took the money, accepts Mary's thanks and says nothing. And Willard, watching this from the other side of the house, shakes his head and goes his way.

LILLO OF THE SULU SEAS (Three Parts—Feb. 8).—The cast: Ralph Holt (Harold Lockwood); Lillo (May Allison); Jeb Foster (Wm. Stowell); Pahui (Perry Banks); Capt. Rand (Harry Von Meter).

Jeb Foster persuades Capt. Rand's wife to elope with him and they take with them the little baby daughter. For a number of years Capt. Rand endeavors to find some trace of the runaway couple in order to get back the child. His search is fruitless and he finally retires to an island, where he lives the life of a recluse, his only associate being his faithful native servant, Pahui. Rand had never seen Foster, the latter having inflicted the wound which caused the loss of Rand's arm at the time he ran away with Rand's wife. Rand, however, retains a vivid picture of a tattooed arm thrust through his window at the time he was shot, and it is by this tattooing he hopes to identify Foster.

Sixteen years elapse. Rand's daughter has grown to womanhood believing herself the daughter of Foster. She is known as Lillo, and as she has become an expert diver for pearls she is useful to Foster, who is the master of a pearl-fishing schooner. Her mother is dead.

Ralph Holt, junior member of the firm of Holt & Son, pearl merchants of New York, goes to the South Seas to study the fisheries end of their business and purchase new stock, and he falls in with Foster, who invites Ralph to make an expedition with them with evil intent. Ralph falls under the spell of Lillo.

Towards the end of the cruise, a typhoon overtakes the schooner and the party is wrecked. Foster makes his escape in a small boat with three of his crew, leaving Ralph and Lillo to their fate. They all land at Capt. Rand's island, Ralph and Lillo drifting in on some floating wreckage, and Rand takes care of the shipwrecked party. Foster immediately recognizes Capt. Rand as the man he had wronged, but seeing no sign of return recognition he feels secure.

A steamer is due at the island the next day and the party is informed that they can take passage and return to civilization. Under a pretext of borrowing money, Foster learns that Rand has accumulated a tidy sum, and that night he comes to the house to attach it. Pahui, however, discovers him and he is forced to fight his way out. Just at this moment Rand enters and recognizes the tattooing on Foster's bared arm. He offers Foster an even fight for life, who tries to take advantage of Rand's infirmity and is killed by Pahui.

The men of Foster's crew, in the meantime, have stolen rum and are almost insane from liquor. They threaten Lillo's safety. Ralph overpowers the men and takes Lillo to Rand's house for safety. Here they come upon the scene of Foster's death. Capt. Rand explains the situation and relates the incidents of his early life. In the telling he realizes that Lillo is his daughter.

Ralph permits one steamer to pass and finally decides that in duty he must return to his father. Returning to New York, he finds his heart back in the islands with Lillo. Events transpire that make it necessary for him to take up the work of permanent representative of the firm at the source of supply, and in great joy he returns to the girl whom he could not forget.

rival. He tells Jeff, the over-suspicious town constable, that Jeff must have perpetrated the crime, and together they sneak into Louie's room where Jeff sees the assortment of jewelry. Immediately he is convinced of Louie's guilt and places him under arrest. They start for New York and the town turns out en masse, to applaud their valiant protector.

When Louie is taken to headquarters, they discover that his jewelry is "fake stuff." His concern reads in the newspaper of his arrest on suspicion of being the perpetrator of the big robbery because the jewelry which he carried was so like the "real thing" that it fooled the police, and when Louie reports at the office he is given a big raise in salary because of all this free publicity.

Meanwhile back in Squedunk, Connie has been making violent love to Fanny, who, convinced that Louie is a thief, tries to forget him and promises to marry Connie. He insists on being married without any delay, and preparations are immediately under way. At the last moment, he recalls that he has forgotten his wedding present for Fanny and hastens back to his room in the village hotel, where he gets the long fake pearl necklace. As he passes through the lobby, the necklace breaks, all unknown to him. Jeff, ever on the job, finds pearl after pearl, and scenting mystery he follows the trail, arriving finally at Fanny's home where the ceremony is about to be performed. He bursts into the house just as Connie takes from his pocket the empty string, and places him under arrest.

Louie, returning, sees Connie, followed by Fanny and the procession of wedding guests, being taken to jail. He grasps the situation and prevails upon Fanny to marry him then and there. At Louie's suggestion, Connie is compelled to act as "best man" and then marched back into his cell.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN AND THE VAMPIRE (Feb. 13).—The cast: Billy Van Deusen (John Steppling); Johnny (John Sheehan); Carol (Carol Halloway). Directed by Archer McMackin.

Carol, on a shopping tour, togged out in all her splendor, drops her perfumed handkerchief. Walking along, the two pals, Billy and Johnny, spy it and both make a rush for it, each gaining an end, with the result that the little white square is torn in two. Carol pacifies the two young gentlemen and gives each one of her cards, but the friendship between the two is "off."

The eventful night of their call upon Carol finally draws round and Johnny, going to the florist's to purchase some flowers, comes upon Billy already in the florist shop. One will not be outdone by the other and when they have completed their purchases Johnny finds himself the possessor of an immense bower of roses, while Billy has secured a young palm tree. By opening both doors of the shop they manage to squeeze out. Then comes the problem of getting into their respective taxis, which is finally solved by opening the tops.

Arrived at Carol's home, each tries his best to gain her favor, and she informs them that when one proves untrue she will marry the other. Billy comes upon an advertisement lauding the claims of a certain vampire person, who guarantees to break any heart for the nominal sum of five dollars. Immediately he "looks her up" and the result of the mysterious interview is that Johnny receives a note to be at a certain apartment at a certain time. Carol also receives an anonymous message to be at the same place, where she will see the perfidy of her lover.

Johnny arrives on the minute, quickly followed by Carol. The vampire's charm "works like a charm" and Johnny falls under her spell to the great sorrow of Carol and the boundless joy of Billy, who rushes out to commend the vampire. She straightway works the charm on him. This is too much for Carol, who denounces the vampire and calls her a cat. But the vampire professes violent love for Carol, tears off a wig and before Carol stands a man. Billy and Johnny fall into a dead faint and the "vampire" embraces the surprise-loving Carol.

BOOMING THE BOXING BUSINESS (Feb. 8).—The cast: Professor Biff (Frank E. McNish); His Helper (Claude Cooper); Champion Pugilist (Billy Swan); His Sweetheart (Isolde Illian); Mrs. Henpeck (Carey Hastings); Mr. Henpeck (Jim Murray).

Biff's Fistic Academy was in trouble. Pupils had fallen off to an alarming extent, and Prof. Biff was unhappy. Hence it was with delight that he welcomed a suggestion from Jim, his faithful helper.

Jim's plan was this. He would go out in disguise, and insult respectable citizens who apparently had bank rolls. At the proper moment the Professor would stroll on, defend the victim, thrash Jim and drive him yelping away. He would then give the man one of his cards, talk about how necessary it was for every man to know how to defend himself, and, if lucky, land a pupil.

The scheme worked like a charm in some cases, although they did strike a snag when Jim tackled a meek looking man, and his wife, a determined suffragette, proved conclusively that she did not need any boxing lessons.

Disaster came, however, when the helper met a pleasant young man in the park, talking to a pretty girl. Jim flirted with the girl, threatened to punch her companion, and was driven away by Biff, who came bustling up just in time. Then things went along for a time as Biff liked to see them. The young man lamented his weakness, and simply yearned to take a boxing lesson. And at the appointed time he arrived at the Academy.

Without warning, conditions changed. The young man beat and battered Biff until he howled for mercy. Then, most untruthfully, he accused the helper of 'sneering" at his kind-hearted employer and polished him off also. After which he wrote a note, left it on a side table, and departed.

The two bruised gladiators got the note and read it. Here's what it said:

"You Poor Boobs:

"I spotted you rehearsing your plot before you tackled me, and I jollied you along. Thanks for the exercise." And it was signed by a well-known member of the fistic fraternity.

SNOW STORM AND SUNSHINE (Feb. 10).—The cast: Constable (Riley Chamberlin); Tramp (Walter Hiers).

To be arrested for fighting is not an unusual thing, but causes alter cases. Weary Willie in this case is standing in an orange grove in the sunny South, throwing oranges at a man in the arctic region, who in turn is pelting Willie with snow balls. The law of compensation works out, for the frigid man sucks the luscious oranges, while thirsty Willie in Florida fairly drinks the snow balls. But this only happens until the law gets Willie.

The law is said at times to be peculiar, but it was never as peculiar as its particular minion, for as constable he pinches Willie, as judge he tries him, and as jailer he jugs him, thus falling victim to these three graces. This looks bad for the knight of the road until his strange fate leads him again into adventure which helps him make good his escape.

He goes back to zero climate and just as his star threatens to ascend he finds himself right where he fell asleep at the beginning of our story, shivering alongside of a brother tramp.

MUSTANG.

ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN (Three Parts—Feb. 11).—The cast: Bessie (Anna Little); Ben Wolf (Jack Richardson); Dick, the Sheriff (Tom Chatterton); Bob, Bessie's Brother (Ward McAllister). Directed by Tom Chatterton.

Up in the hills Ben Wolf, hard drinker and general all around "bad man," spends most of his time. Bessie Gray, the daughter of the pastor of the one church, is engaged to Dick, the sheriff. Bob, her brother, is a source of great concern to his family as he has fallen in with the rough element of the little frontier town. Then a fake promoter comes to town and Dick is caught in the whirlpool of those who invest in the oil stock. He induces Bessie's father to invest his frugal savings also, believing it to be a "sure thing."

Bob gambles and loses everything and he appropriates the church funds which his father keeps in trust for the church. He loses all his money to Wolf. In the evening Pastor Gray has asked Wolf to come to church, but he refuses. As he rides away from the saloon, however, he decides to accept the pastor's invitation and mounted on his horse he rides through the open door of the church; but as he starts up the aisle he pauses, for Bessie starts singing the solo. He gazes at her a moment then slowly backs out and rides off.

Bob returns home early the following morning and replaces the money he took from his father. Shortly afterward the stage arrives, bringing the state treasurer, and Dick is informed that it has been held up and robbed by a masked bandit who took the treasurer's money and bags. They have a clue in a cuff button which the robber dropped. Dick's suspicions rest on Wolf, but he finds no evidence against him. Wolf, unobserved, sees Bob off in the hills the next day, caching a mail pouch, papers and money under a rock.

Bessie and Dick are riding along the trail when they learn that Wall-Eyed Bill and his gang are coming to shoot up the town. Dick sends Bessie hurrying home and he goes to intercept the raiders. As Bessie gallops madly on, she falls from her horse. Wolf comes upon her and assists her to remount. Wolf's nature changes and he fights against drink. He goes to town to catch glimpses of Bessie and lurks outside of the church to hear her sing. He finds her Testament, which she has dropped, and takes it home with him. Opening the book, Wolf is deeply impressed by the passage: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John 15: 13.

In town Wolf sees the placard announcing reward for the bandit, and is tempted to disclose his secret, but at thought of Bessie he changes his mind. Dick receives a staggering blow in the smash of the oil company, and at the same time is called to account by the governor for not apprehending the bandit. At this time he discovers the mate to the cuff button in Bob's possession and is torn between love and duty.

Ben Wolf, realizing that there is but one way in which to spare Bessie, goes to his cabin and writes an unsigned letter to Dick, telling him that Ben Wolf is the man he wants and that if he will come to his cabin he will find the money. Ben then goes to Bob's cache, takes the plunder, places it in a hollow log behind his shack and waits for the sheriff.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

THE WHITE ROSETTE (American—Five Parts—Feb 5).—The cast: Eric (E. Forrest Taylor); Joan Long (Helene Rosson); Frieda (Eugene Forde).

In the romantic days of the Eleventh Century, the prologue of this picture shows us, Sir Errol, a victorious knight, returns to the castle of his liege lord, the Baron Edward, where he renews his vows with Lady Maud, his betrothed mistress. During Sir Errol's absence from the realm, the Baron has married Lady Elfrieda, daughter of an impecunious nobleman. Edward loves Elfrieda, but for her the marriage was solely one of expediency. She loses her heart to the handsome young knight. Learning that Errol and Maud are affianced, Elfrieda banishes her lady-in-waiting by sending Maud home to her father, Sir Longson, a retainer of the Baron's. The lovers meet secretly on the eve of Maud's departure, and she pins over Errol's heart a small, white rosette. He pledges to remain always her true and loyal knight.

No sooner is Maud out of the way than the Baron's bride lays siege to Sir Errol. She plots with Lord Kerrigan and his followers to have the Baron murdered and Errol installed in the baronetcy. The conspiracy finds its way to Lady Maud's ears. On the eve of the night appointed for his death, she determines to warn Edward. Disguised as a maiden knight, she reaches the Baron's chamber—just too late. Maud is fatally wounded by the assassins. On recognizing his dead love, Sir Errol, renounces the Lady Elfrieda, and plucking the white rosette from his breast, swears on the hilt of his sword that he will atone for his dishonored life, be it now or a thousand years to come.

The picture then introduces us to Pierpont Carewe, a railroad magnate, whose wife, Frieda, has married him solely for his wealth. Thomas Eric, a young civil engineer in Carewe's employ, returns to New York after a successful survey for a new road, and Carewe rewards him with a block of stock in the company. Frieda falls in love with Eric. The young engineer already is engaged to be married to Joan Long, daughter of Carewe's head engineer. Frieda schemes to get the Longs exiled to Bermuda, and then plots with Van Kerr, an unprincipled grafter, to place Eric in a position involving both his financial and his personal honor, the only solution of which shall be that he yield to the implorations of his inamorata, the wife of his chief.

A few days later, Frieda traps the young man in her boudoir, declares her love, and begs him to run away with her. Finding his loyalty to his absent sweetheart still unshaken, she informs him that the stock which she recently borrowed of him, she tricked out of him, the better to have him in her control now.

Eric, left to choose his course, is visited by a vision of his mediaeval forbear, Sir Errol. The life of that blasted flower of ancient chivalry passes before his inner eye in a series of vivid pictures until, over the dead body of the Lady Maud, in the character of Errol, he swears to atone for his faithlessness. Coming to himself, the young man recognizes in the present situation the opportunity for expiation which the restless soul of his ancestor has been seeking for nine hundred years.

That night he attends the Carewe's fancy dress ball, costumed as the knight of old. Frieda is robed as the faithless Elfrieda. And Joan, mysteriously returned from the Southland, appears as Lady Maud. Eric is discovered by his temptress, renewing his vows to Joan. Frieda turns over the block of stock to Van Kerr, and Carewe, entering, demands an explanation. A quarrel ensues. Eric is just in time to save Carewe from being choked to death by his enemy. Frieda, check-mated, sobs out her bitter rebellion against Fate.

AROUND THE WORLD (Jan. 28).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Cannibal Chief (George George); First Cannibal (Louis FitzRoy); Second Cannibal (Jefferson Osborne); Third Cannibal (Arthur Mund); Fourth Cannibal (Harry Jackson); Fifth Cannibal (Gordon McGregor); Sixth Cannibal (Robert Kenyon); the Captive Princess (Belle Bennett); Her Slave (Janet Sully). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

While slumbering on a bench in the park Jerry is disturbed, first by a cop and a nurse girl wheeling a baby, and then by a colored cop with a negro woman, who also has a baby. The two couple sit down on the same bench with Jerry, who is shoved back and forth by the two cops and finally kicked out of the scene. Greatly incensed Jerry determines to have his revenge and while the two couple are too much engrossed with each other to notice, he changes the babies. After walking a short distance he comes upon a sergeant and conducts him back to the park bench where the two couple are spooning. Upon the appearance of the sergeant the two cops rush off and the negro woman exits with the white baby, while the white nurse leaves in much haste with the colored baby. Consternation reigns when the parents discover the substitution. They all rush to the park and there the parents receive back their own offspring.

The black cop and the white cop catch a glimpse of Jerry in the background, and realizing he is the cause of all the trouble, they start after him. They soon catch him and a fight ensues; two white cops rush up and in the general mix-up Jerry makes his getaway. Fortune favors him for he soon comes upon an aeroplane, which the aviator has deserted for a few minutes; he gets into the car, starts the machine and soars upward. The three white cops and the black cop run up to the aviator whom they find gazing after his fast disappearing machine, arrest him for allowing Jerry to escape, refuse to listen to his protests, and drag him away.

Meanwhile Jerry flies through the air at such a high rate of speed that he soon arrives over an island inhabited by cannibals, who have all the modern improvements. The cannibals discover Jerry, gazing at him through field glasses, notify their Chief by telephone. Acting under the instruction of the Chief, who arrives upon the scene in his racer, the cannibals fire at Jerry; the shot hits his machine and he falls to earth amid the wreck of his machine. Crawling out from under the debris and catching sight of the cannibals, he faints away. He is carried near a large kettle and forced to witness a cannibal dance. Jerry pleads with the Chief to let him go and when he will not do so Jerry knocks him into the kettle and dashes off. A chase takes place and in his mad dash for life Jerry comes to the Chief's tent. Darting inside he comes face to face with a beautiful princess, whom the Chief is holding captive. She takes pity on him and hides him in a suit of armor. The Chief and his followers soon arrive and, bidding all his men except two go in search of Jerry, the Chief enters the tent with his two retainers. While the Chief is questioning the princess, Jerry reaches out and prods him with his spear. The Chief angrily accuses one of his men, who denies it. Jerry then prods the other man and thus causes a general fight. Taking advantage of the confusion Jerry escapes with the princess. As luck would have it, the Chief's racer is standing not far from the tent. Knocking the chauffeur insensible, Jerry helps the princess into the car and drives away just as the Chief and his men run out of the tent. Thus we leave Jerry, with the princess beside him, racing away to safety.

THE DEFECTIVE DETECTIVE (Feb. 4).—The cast: Luke Sharpe, a detective (Billy Armstrong); Jiggers, his aide (Tommy Hayes); Wild Bill, who escapes detention (William Welch); John Littleford (Charles Atkins); Evelyn, his daughter (Grace Gibson).

Wild Bill, an inmate of Prof. Nutt's asylum, weary of confinement, escapes detention by climbing down the side of the building wall. His actions, once he has gained freedom, are unconventional and terrorize the peaceful citizens of the city in which the Nutt institution is located. Bill reaches the Littleford mansion and peers through one of the windows. The contortions of his face as it is pressed against the glass frightens pretty Evelyn almost into hysterics and she calls to her father for help.

Littleford, to protect his daughter against possible harm, phones to Luke Sharp, the human bloodhound, and enlists his services to catch Bill, offering him a reward of $5.000. Seeing a chance to make money easily and quickly, Sharpe returns to his rooms and has Jiggers, his aide, make-up as Bill. He orders Jiggers to meet him at the Littleford home, to which he precedes the impostor. After he has made his little speech about catching the terror, Sharpe goes to the door to bring in Jiggers. That worthy, however, is late. Bill, the real quarry, is seen climbing through the window of the house next door and Sharpe, believing him to be Jiggers, crosses the lawn and goes after him. Once face to face with Bill, Sharpe sees that he has a madman to deal with, and makes an ineffectual effort to escape.

Meantime Jiggers has arrived and enters the Littleford home via the window. Making himself perfectly at home, he jauntily stalks into the room where Evelyn is taking a nap. She awakens at his strokes over her hand, screams and brings upon the scene her father, who is armed with a revolver. Littleford chases Jiggers, who rushes from the room and hides behind a chair. Littleford sees Bill in the house on the other side of the areaway, and believing him to be the man who was in his home but a moment before, fires away. Sharpe, who is with Bill, gets most of the effect of the fire.

When the smoke of battle has cleared away Sharpe pounces upon Bill and succeeds in landing him. He carries the unconscious form to the door-step of the Littleford home and then steps in the house alone to tell his client that his quest is successful. Meanwhile Jiggers escapes the house and comes face to face with Bill. The two begin a fight which ends with Jiggers being vanquished and left behind in Bill's place. Sharpe, of course, turns over Jiggers as the real madman, collects his money and is about to depart when a policeman enters with Bill. The jig is up. Sharpe's little scheme is exposed, Littleford takes back his reward and turns it over to the policeman, while Jiggers, followed by Sharpe, exits in sorrow.

BUNGLING BILL, BURGLAR (Jan. 27).—"Bungling Bill" is discovered asleep in his dingy quarters. He arises, breakfasts on salted onions, washes and exercises with a couple of empty wine bottles. He then turns to his morning paper and notes the arrival at the local hotel of the Western "Bad Man" who is reputed to be carrying a large quantity of gold nuggets. At the same time the young couple elope from the girl's home, escaping in an automobile, hotly pursued by the girl's irate father and a policeman, both mounted on motorcycles. The couple stop long enough to kidnap a minister, who is forced to marry them. The ceremony concluded, the couple release the minister and proceed on their way to a local hotel.

Meanwhile the father and the policeman have had a bad spill: The motorcycle refuses to provide any more locomotion and in desperation they set out after the couple on a dead run. The next scene finds the young couple and the "Bad Man" registering at the same hotel. The view shifts to the room of the "Bad Man," who sits before a table assorting his nuggets with the barrel of his huge revolver. The call of a "mighty thirst" takes possession of him and with his revolver he fires at the bell, which registers a strong call for refreshments at the clerk's desk.

"Bungling Bill" has taken time by the forelock and climbed up the fire escape of the hotel, invading the room of the young married couple long enough to carry away some rather startling articles of the bride's trousseau. Then going to the window of the room of the "Bad Man" he reaches in for the drinks just deposited by the bellboy and replaces them with the delectable articles of apparel. Refreshing himself, he seeks further adventure. A general mixup follows the "Bad Man's" discovery of the loss of his drinks. During the excitement "Bungling Bill" enters the "Bad Man's" room and obtains a large bag of the nuggets. Returning via fire escape he enters the married couple's room and secretes himself in the closet. He disguises himself by putting on one of Mrs. Newlywed's outfits.

While he is doing so, a general chase and search is made for the unknown thief. An accident occurs in the closet and "Bill" catches fire. In trying to escape he encounters a policeman. They struggle and fall through two floors to the hotel lobby on the main floor. By clever dodging "Bill" gains the street, then turns into an alley closely followed by the whole company. He finally eludes his pursuers. Arriving at his "residence" he lunches on salted onions and by raising his left hand high over his head, registers the time-honored resolution, "Never again!"

SAMMY VERSUS CUPID (Feb. 3). Sammy can't make Sally, his sweetheart, love him because she is athletically inclined and Sammy is a little runt whose biceps are not up to her standard. He is in despair. But learning that the professor of the local gymnasium is hard up, he makes him a mysterious proposition, involving the exchange of a roll of bills. Sammy goes into training and in a few weeks has developed an astonishing amount of muscle. Sally, passing the gym., is surprised to see a large poster announcing the championship match between Sammy, "the wrestling wizard" and Nabisco, "the terrible Turk." Sammy happens to come out at this minute and he hands Sally complimentary tickets to the bout. The night of the great event, Sammy completely flattens out the Turk. Sally is convinced. She marries Sammy next day.

FICKLE MADGE (Feb. 6).—A paperhanger, much in love, arrives at the home of Madge, his sweetheart, to find another man defending her from a white rat. He immediately challenges the intruder to a battle. Art, the other man, is thrown out of the house and jarred up against his own lady love, Alice, who happens to be passing. Art schemes to get even by inducing Alice to pretend to flirt with the paperhanger. That evening the latter gentleman starts out to call on Alice. By mistake he enters the apartment of a Mr. Mack, a bibulous person, who happens to be out just then, but who on returning and finding a stranger in the company of his wife, draws his gun and shoots up the innocent manipulator of paste and paper.

Meanwhile, Madge has written the paperhanger that at last she has father's consent to marry him. The note falls into the hands of the vengeful Art who attempts to forestall the wedding. The paperhanger, escaping from Mr. Mack, is waylaid by his other enemy and divested of his trousers. He manages to reach safety, however, via a dumbwaiter. Despite his undignified appearance, Madge receives him with open arms, and they are married, the groom's person draped in a convenient table-cloth.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 20—Minneapolis and St. Paul—Jan. 30).—Minneapolis and St. Paul, the "Twin-Cities" and "The Gateway of the Northwest," with their wonderful background of lakes, hills and woody plains, form the subject of the twentieth half-reel scenic "See America First." LUKE, THE CANDY CUT-UP (Phunphilm Jan. 31).—Lonesome Luke, Jack of all Trades, master of none, is now practically the confectioner's art. As a maker of pastry, cream puffs, taffy and other dainties, Luke is without a peer. As the star employe, Luke goes to spend a part of his lunch hour on the shaded park walks and to prance on the lawn. He scrapes up a "swatting" acquaintance with a chap and steals his watch and fob. Just his luck, the fellow comes to the candy emporium at which he is employed and when Luke comes from his stand before the ovens to mix a cherry-flip for a fascinating Miss, the fellow "spots" the fob and goes to hail an officer. He and the officer get mixed up in the door and the angry bluecoat gives vent to his pent up wrath, occasioned by some other unfortunate incident, by swatting the victim. The happenings in the emporium are truly indescribable; they are fast and furious, Luke and his co-workers in sweetness successfully routing the enemy.

MOVEMENTS THE EYE MISSES (Photocolor, Jan. 31).—The eye of the average person fails to note many interesting events. What perhaps seems totally uninteresting to the average observer is in reality posessed of a marked degree of interest.

Taking for example the muscular action of the human. People walking, climbing, vaulting, running and engaged in other physical activities are not unusual sights, but the average eye is not trained to note the interesting movements in detail. Pathe's "Ultra-Rapid" camera has analyzed the movements of many animate objects and living things, a few of which are given in their colored educational subject called "Movements the Eye Misses."

GLIMPSES OF JAVA (Globe, On same Reel as Foregoing).—The area of Holland's colonial possessions is several times that of the mother country. Richest of these colonies is Java, an island in the Indian Ocean, famous for over three centuries for its coffee and spices. The natives are Malays, who live in bamboo huts and a majority live a most primitive life. Buitenzorg is a city in the mountain district. The world famous botanical gardens, located here, were laid out in 1818, and contain examples of all the wonderful vegetation of Java. All construction work requiring any skill is supervised by Dutch engineers. Many other scenes are shown in an excellent Pathe scenic called "Glimpses of Java."

NEW YORK(Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—Feb. 4).—The story concerns itself with Oliver King, a patrician who becomes interested in a chorus girl who "works" him. Learning her true character, he gives her up, but is thereafter blackmailed with a baby. Later the girl dies. King raises the child, a boy, but refuses to acknowledges his parenthood. He marries a girl who knows nothing of this incident. Wendell, the boy, now a young man, is expelled from college and takes up his residence at the former home of King's wife. He is visited by Mrs. King, and in a maudlin drunken state attacks her. In the struggle she kills him. The coroner finds a verdict of suicide. Next day, Mrs. King confesses to her husband. Thinking the murdered boy his, he turns from her. The chorus girl's mother comes to collect her "hush" money, and when King refuses, she tells him that the boy was not his own, and threatens to tell the world of his ridiculous position. Her story, however, has just the opposite effect. King is glad the boy was not his son. He goes to his wife, who has become a mother, and a touching reconciliation follows.

THE RED CIRCLE—NO. 8 (Peace at Any Price—Balboa—Two Parts—Feb. 5).—Stealing a monkey from a particularly abusive organ grinder, Jane Travis sends a telegram to Detective Lamar, who is in the city, telling him that a circle branded girl has perpetrated the crime. On the beach she meets newlywedded friends quarreling over a hat which the woman is wearing. When an opportunity presents itself, she steals and buries the hat in the sand, thereby quelling the argument. That evening Lamar calls to return a stolen necklace and almost betrays his love for her.

"Smiling" Sam, a fugitive from justice "blows" into town at the end of his freight car journey and is "spotted" by an officer. Lamar returning home sees the man with the officer in pursuit and joins in the chase. He overtakes Eagan at the summit of a towering cliff where they stand facing each other preparatory to a tremendous struggle.

The next chapter will be called "Dodging the Laws." Watch for it!

SOULS IN BONDAGE (Lubin—Five Parts—Jan. 31).—The cast: Rose Brenner (Nance O'Neil); Rita Brenner (Ida Stanhope); Julian Forbes (William Corbett); Mrs. Forbes (Mrs. Stuart); Mrs. Coombes (Mrs. Carr); Mr. Brenner (Bernard Seigel). Written by Daniel Carson Goodman. Directed by Edgar Lewis.

Rosa and Rita Brenner, the daughter of Mr. Brenner, are sisters of directly opposite temperaments. Rosa, the eldest, is quiet, homeloving and industrious; Rita is impulsive, headstrong, and prefers to be anywhere but at home. One day Rita leaves her family and goes to the city, saying that she prefers to work and support herself, but the real reason is that she prefers the gay life of the cafes and dansants to the quiet humdrum of the country.

Rita writes to her sister Rosa, and tells her that she is in a serious condition. Rosa answers at once and promises to be on hand when the important event takes place some time later. Rosa goes to her sister and Rita upon her recovery again plunges into the gaiety of the cafe life. Upon learning Rosa has written her father that she is bringing Rita home with her, Rita leaves the city, and forces Rosa to take care of the child. Rosa returns to her home, taking Rita's child with her, and leaves the child in the care of a neighbor saying that she has adopted it unbeknown to her parents, and asks that the facts be kept a secret.

Mrs. Coombes, Rosa's aunt, is housekeeper at the Brenner home, she becomes suspicious of Rosa's actions, and as Rosa goes to visit the child one day, Mrs. Coombes follows her and through the window of the neighbor's house, sees Rosa rocking the child. She at once accuses Rosa of being the child's mother, and Rosa does not deny the accusation. Mrs. Coombes then tells Rosa's father what she has seen. Brenner rages and asks Rosa if what he has heard is true. Rosa refuses to answer, and her father turns her out of the house. Taking the child with her, Rosa returns to the city to the house where the child was born, but finds that Rita has left for parts unknown.

Rosa gets a position as companion to a lady of wealth, whose son eventually falls in love with Rosa, and later marries her. Shortly after their marriage, Rosa's husband tires of her, and seeks amusement in the night life of the city. Rosa follows her husband on one of his night revels, and in a cafe, Rosa comes face to face with her sister Rita. The following day Rosa leaves the child at Rita's apartment, and thoroughly sick at heart of the world and everyone in it, goes out to devote her life to the cause of charity.

THE WRITING ON THE WALL (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Feb. 14).—The cast: Irving Lawrence (Joseph Kilgour); Schuyler Lawrence (Robert Gaillard); Barbara, his wife (Virginia Pearson); Muriel, Payne's wife (Naomi Childers); Payne (Charles Wellesley); Harry Lawrence (Bobby Connelly); Trainor (George Stev-

Co-operation is the Secret of Success. Success Means MIRROROID.

ACADEMY SCREEN PROVES THE BEST

Mirroroid Used in Presenting "Birth of a Nation"

FOR DISTANCE VIEWS

Boom for Local Industry—Better Production Than New Yorkers Have Seen.

That Newburghers who have seen "The Birth of a Nation" have really seen the great production under more favorable auspices than those who saw it in New York is indicated by the developments in the production here, incidentally a Newburgh industry has received an unsolicited and valuable boost.

"The Birth of a Nation" carries with it, all of its own apparatus. For the production, a special booth house was erected and the company's own screen was hung, an hour and a half being spent in the hanging. When the picture was first shown, Manager Taylor expressed the opinion that his own screen in the Academy would give better results.

Whatever skepticism there may have been over this, the managers of the show gave the Academy screen a trial, with the result that the Academy screen was used in all of the performances since. One of the big features of the photoplay has been the attention given to perspectives in the photography. Many persons have commented on the clearness with which troops in the far distance could be observed marching.

To bring out clearly, those things in the distance, and at the same time to preserve the idea of distance is one of the great merits of the Academy screen, which is of the Mirroroid type, manufactured by the J. H. Genter Co., of this city. Aside from this, the screen shows the nearer views more clearly. Recognized as the last word in motion photography, "The Birth of a Nation" in this substitution of a local product for its own especially selected screen is an endorsement which ought to prove of great value.

"The Birth of a Nation" will break all local records for receipts and attendance. It is anticipated that when the theatre closes to-night, 10,000 persons will have seen the show. Nothing in local theatrical records even approaches this. The average will exceed 1,500 persons for each of six performances given here.

THIS IS THE TRADE MARK THAT PROTECTS YOU AGAINST IMITATORS ens); Meta Delatour, adventuress (Josephine Earle). Produced by Tefft Johnson. Picturized by Marguerite Bertsch.

Irving Lawrence, prominent and wealthy, owns a large number of tenements in the poor section of the city which are among the city's most objectionable dwelling places. His wife, Barbara, and his brother, Schuyler, are interested in social uplift, but are unable to secure Irving's co-operation for the betterment of conditions. Irving's disregard for others and his blind selfishness are also displayed in his daily life and affairs with other women. When Payne, Barbara's brother, arrives with his bride, Muriel, it evolves, after a painful meeting, that Muriel is one of the victims of Irving's disregard for others, in the past.

Realizing Muriel will keep the past a secret from her adoring husband, at all costs, Irving torments the girl unmercifully. Barbara, meanwhile, has learned that her husband's mode of living is not all it should be, and, misunderstanding a situation between Irving and Muriel, openly accuses them. Then the truth comes out and Muriel proves her innocence in the past. Irving, enraged, trumps up a countercharge of scandal between Barbara and Schuyler.

An estrangement at once follows between all concerned. At this time a terrible fire breaks out in Irving's tenements, in which Barbara is holding a party for the slum children, which little Harry is attending. All rush to the scene, and in his mad attempt to rescue Harry Irving needlessly sacrifices his life, for the boy had already been carried out in safety. His death is a just atonement for the lives lost when his rusty old fireescapes crumpled up under the weight of the mad rush of tenants and crashed to the ground. Barbara effects a reunion between Payne and Muriel, and a brighter future seems in store for herself and Schuyler.

KLEINE-EDISON FEATURE

THE MARTYRDOM OF PHILLIP STRONG (Edison—Five Parts—Feb. 9).—The cast: Phillip Strong (Robert Conness); Sarah Strong, his wife (Mabel Trunnelle); Irma Strong, their child (Janet Dawley); Brother Man (Bigelow Cooper); Mrs. Alden, Sarah Strong's mother (Helen Strickland); William Winter, Sarah Strong's uncle (Frank Lyons); Dunn, a saloonkeeper (William Wadsworth); Hikes, a derelict (Herbert Prior); May Hikes, his daughter (Olive Wright); Loreen, a consumptive derelict (Edith Wright); Hooks, a saloon bouncer (Brad Sutton).

"Man, you are a living lie." Thus is Phillip Strong, the rising young pastor of a fashionable Calvary Church, addressed by Brother Man (symbolizing the Spirit of Christ on earth). Surrounded by luxury, lionized by a wealthy congregation, Phillip Strong suddenly realizes the force of these words. He has been preaching the doctrines of Christ, but his work has been the work of bare words only. To prove the truth of what he says, Brother Man leads Phillip to the slums, and shows him the misery and squalor of a world which he has never known. The starving women and children, the kitchens of Hell where whiskey ruins the lives of men, impresses Phillip deeply. He sees his real mission in life. He must help the downtrodden.

Sarah, Phillip's wife, wrapped in her social ambition, is horrified when Phillip announces his determination. She refuses to permit her little daughter, Irma, to play with an orphaned child of the slums, whom Phillip has brought home to shelter. She pleads with Phillip to give up his new work. It means ruin and social ostracism. She scolds and bursts into a rage of fury—but Phillip is firm. Goaded on by her mother, who pictures the disgrace of Phillip's close association with the slums, Sarah leaves the home, taking Irma with her.

Time finds Phillip living in the slums, immersed in his work. Fighting the battle of the downtrodden, he arouses the hate of powerful forces. The rich of his congregation, owning the properties which house saloons, and the owners of these saloons, combine to bring about his down fall. Undaunted by threats of personal harm, he wages his war. Cheered by Brother Man in the moments when things seem most hopeless, he fights his battle with new energy. His friends gone, his little daughter dead, the wife whom he loves opposing him, he fights on.

Scenting an opportunity to discredit him, the interests cause Sarah to believe that Loreen, a consumptive derelict, whom he has redeemed and sheltered in his home, is his mistress. The story is disproved and Sarah relents—but too late. The body bearing the spirit of Phillip, is not equal to the task. Wrecked by worry and ill-health, he gives up his life and his soul passes to the One Whose work he has been doing, and like Whom he has been crucified.

Montford (Paul Irving); Judge Montford (Thomas Tracy); Barry King (Regan Hughston). Directed by J. A. Golden.

Inez Valenti is the niece of Grant Thorne, who runs a gambling house. She acts as a lure for her uncle's den. Barry King becomes infatuated with her, and this gives her a violent aversion to the life she has been living "behind closed doors."

Elsa Montford, daughter of the Judge, is saddened by King's attentions to Inez. Thorne also becomes jealous of King. They fight in the gambling house; Thorne is shot, and King throwing the pistol away, runs, but is caught. Elsa has seen the affair and tells her father who takes her to the police station, where she identifies Barry among the other prisoners.

Inez is in despair when she learns that there was a witness to the affair whom the State has in charge, and refuses to leave the city while he is in danger. She sends for Elsa, and tries to bribe her to keep silent, but on refusal offers her a glass of wine which has been drugged, but Elsa breaks the glass and escapes.

Inez tries to get Barry to jump his bail, but Elsa pleads with him to stay and fight it out. He agrees and writes to Inez telling her he loves Elsa. Inez, in despair, writes out a full confession of her life, and declares that she and not Barry killed Thorne, Barry having kept silent as to having taken the pistol from her in order to avoid incriminating her. Elsa reads the confession. When she has finished she phones to the district attorney and together they go to Inez's room where they find her a suicide.

PARAMOUNT.

THE SPIDER (Famous Players—Five Parts—Jan. 27).—The cast: Valerie St. Cyr and Joan Marche (Pauline Frederick); Julian St. Saens (Thomas Holding); Count Du Poissy (Frank Losee).

Valerie St. Cyr is the beauty who ran away with Count Du Poissy, leaving her baby daughter and her impoverished husband to shift for themselves. When the little girl, Joan, matures, she becomes engaged to Julian St. Saens, a puritanical young artist who, never suspecting the relation of Valerie to his fiancee, refuses to paint the former's portrait because she does not come up to his moral standards. Piqued at the artist's snub, and equally ignorant of Joan's identity, Valerie contrives to become his model by pretending to be penniless. She falls in love with Julian but when he repulses her, she seeks vengeance for the insult.

The Count has taken a fancy to Joan and they plan to abduct the girl. The Count takes her to one of his private haunts but when she realizes her danger, Joan stabs him and escapes. Fatally wounded, the Count summons the police. Meanwhile Valerie has learned that Joan, the girl whom she has just been instrumental in handing over to the Count, is her own daughter. Rushing to the Count's rendezvous she finds him dying and as the gendarmes enter she decides to make final reparation to her daughter by declaring herself guilty of the crime.

Convicted by her own statements, Valerie goes to her death with an expression of almost heavenly contentment upon her face, happy in the belief that she has made atonement for her early desertion of the helpless infant.

PUDD'NHEAD WILSON (Lasky—Five Parts—Jan. 31).—The cast: Pudd'nhead Wilson (Theodore Roberts); Tom Driscoll (Alan Hale); Chambers, his Quadroon Slave (Thomas Meighan); Roxy, his Mulatto Nurse (Jane Wolff); Rowena Cooper, from "Up North" (Florence Dagmar); Judge Driscoll (Ernest Joy); Mrs. Driscoll (Gertrude Kellar).

Lawyer Wilson, a young man, comes to a small Missouri town to practice. On his first day in town, angered at a dog snapping at his heels, he remarks, "I wish I owned half of that dog. If I did, I would kill my half." The subtlety of this remark passed over the heads of the townspeople as they couldn't figure out what would become of the other half of the dog, if Wilson killed his half. This remark, his eccentric speech and his habit of securing thumb-prints from everyone with whom he came in contact, induced one of the town wits to call him "Pudd'nhead." This nickname blighted his career as a lawyer, but he managed to eke out a fairly good existence.

With his small glass slips, he secures, among others, the thumb-prints of Tim Driscoll, age six months, and at the same time, the prints of Chambers, the six and a half months old baby of Roxy, the mulatto slave owned by the Driscoll family. These babies have the same father and look much alike. Roxy, angered at the head of the Driscoll house, changes the babies and passes off her child as the heir to the Driscoll fortune and makes the rightful heir the son of the slave.

Twenty years later the false Tom Driscoll returns from college, accompanied by Chambers, his negro valet, who, in reality, is the real Tom. His father having left him bankrupt and being unable to obtain money from his uncle, Tom sells his real mother as a slave and later, when caught trying to rob the cash box, murders his uncle.

Tom falls in love with the beautiful Rowena Cooper, who has come down from "up North" for a visit with the Driscolls. "Pudd'nhead Wilson" also takes an interest in the fair Yankee girl, but she becomes interested in the slave, Chambers. After murdering his uncle and jealous of Rowena's attention to Chambers, Tom tries to fix the crime on him and Chambers is about to be lynched by the indignant whites when "Pudd'nhead" announces that he is the slave's attorney and insists upon a trial.

Until the night before the trial, Wilson is unable to find any clue as to the identity of the murderer. With but a few hours to spare, he suddenly discovers that there is a tangle in the finger-print records of the two men. In the courtroom all evidence points toward Chambers' guilt. Suddenly, in spite of the laughter, "Pudd'nhead" advances his queer finger-print theories and convinces the jury that they are undeniable. He forces Roxy to confess that she changed the children in their cradle and that Chambers is the real heir to the Driscoll fortune and white, while Tom is in reality the slave. While Chambers goes to tell Rowena of his love, Tom is led away to jail.

THE RULING PASSION (Five Parts—Jan. 30).—The story of this picture tells in brief of the adventures of Claire, born in the London slums, who upon the death of her mother, goes to India to live with her aunt. Here she meets Harvey Walcott, aide de camp to the governor or an Indian province, and they are attracted to each other. Their married life is a happy one until Claire's beauty attracts Prince Ram Singh, Rajah of Mawar. The prince is possessed of the power of hypnotism and when he finds that Claire will pay no heed to his advances, exerts his unusual powers to make her do his bidding. Under the influence of the prince, Claire seemingly encourages his advances until her husband casts her off.

She becomes an inmate of Ram Singh's harem, but because of his brutality puts into execution a plan of escape. She takes up her abode in the hut of a dancing girl, where her baby is born. Discovering there is a plan afoot to sell her child, she darkens her face to resemble a native and takes flight. With her baby she arrives at the home of Walcott's sister, where she is recognized, taken in and cared for. When she asks for her husband, she is told that he has been killed in an engagement with the followers of the prince who incited them to revolt against the British. Realization of the sin she has committed overcomes her and she falls back dead.

Chicago, Dec. 1, 1915.

J. P. Seeburg Piano Co.,
209 South State St., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: In compliance with your request for our opinion of our Seeburg Pipe Organ, we take pleasure in stating that it has given complete satisfaction.

All of the best known pipe organs were demonstrated to us, and the fact that the Seeburg was chosen after such a critical comparison speaks volumes for the Seeburg Pipe Organ. Our patrons believe, as we do, that the Marlowe Theatre Organ is the finest toned instrument in Chicago.

Personally, we have yet to hear an organ of any other make at any price which can compare with the Seeburg tone.

We are so well pleased with our purchase, that we would be very glad at any time to demonstrate our instrument for any of your prospective customers.

Yours very truly,
PLOUGH, CONNERS, KOFFMAN (Inc.).

MOUNTED POSTERS ON FEATURE PRODUCTIONS

can be had of the AMERICAN SLIDE & POSTER CO., First National Bank Bldg., Chicago. Exhibitors preferring mounted posters can secure a prompt and reliable poster service.

The only Fotoplayer is the Fotoplayer we manufacture

And anything else offered you as a Fotoplayer is an imitation and fraud. You should know that every genuine Fotoplayer bears the name Fotoplayer on the sliding door and on the bronze name plate.

The trade name Fotoplayer is registered in the U. S. Patent Office and is legally applied exclusively to the instrument made and sold by us. There is only one Fotoplayer and that is the AMERICAN Fotoplayer, the instrument we manufacture and sell—the only and original musical instrument for motion-picture houses.

The Fotoplayer with its orchestral and beautiful pipe organ tones is expressly manufactured for your needs. It is also equipped with all the necessary traps and effects and may be played by hand or by ordinary player piano rolls. Our wonderful patented shifting device allows an instant change of rolls to fit every change in the picture, giving appropriate music at all times.

We warn you to be careful and not to consider any instrument offered you as a Fotoplayer unless you are positive it is the AMERICAN Fotoplayer.

We would appreciate any information you may send us of any effort of an interested salesman or other person who has or is trying to misrepresent the facts to you.

The Only Fotoplayer is the American Fotoplayer.

CHEMISTS VS. WORKMEN

CHEMISTS work with their BRAINS—workmen with their hands.

Therein lies the "DIFFERENCE" between all other screens and the MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, which is "BUILT BY BRAINS". The "MINUSA" is built to order to fit YOUR theater and its peculiar requirements. That is why they are built by chemists—there are no two just alike. They are built with a "focus" so that the reflected image is as perfect as the film, with all its Natural Light and Beauty—nothing is lost.

If you would have a screen that will ADVERTISE YOUR HOUSE as nothing can; if you would have a screen that WON'T TIRE THE EYES, and if you would save FIFTY PER CENT. of your light bill, you MUST install a "MINUSA."

There are over 5,000 MINUSA Screens in use to-day. All are making and saving BIG MONEY for their owners. They will PAY FOR THEMSELVES in a few months by the lesser light consumed.

Are you ALERT? Are you open to CONVICTION? Then write us TO-DAY. Write or Wire for Samples and Prices.

Have You a Definite Plan and Policy then— Team Work Between You and the Paramount Pictures Corporation Means Your Permanent Success

The foundation on which the Paramount Pictures Corporation was built was a definite plan and policy.

Good pictures is our part, so that your time can be spent in the great task of building your theatre so strongly in the hearts of your people that they will come to your theatre and keep coming.

The pictures are good—you cannot get eight pictures of the same quality in the same month for the same money or five times the money, for that matter—they are not to be had.

You are given a voice in determining the subject, star and style of the pictures because statistics are compiled from your reports that tell us what you want and we must get it.

The Paramount Plan is a "long distance" plan, not a new broom that sweeps clean for a month or two; it means your permanent success.

If there is a Paramount Franchise open in your town Get It Now!

Preparedness

It is a big proposition to make your theatre make money.

You have no time to worry about selecting good pictures.
Save worry and build confidence through consistently good Paramount Pictures.
Isn't that preparedness?

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS

Paramount has made a careful study of the most successful magazines of this country and has analyzed the fundamentals of their success. The Pictographs will be a magazine on the screen.

Subjects of the most vital importance will be discussed by the leading minds of the country—like preparedness.

Subjects will be picturized in such a manner as to clearly edit the thought conveyed by the contributor.

In corroboration of this we offer:

Preparedness—Edited by Frederick Palmer and Henry Reuterdahl, and contributed to by Theodore Roosevelt, Major General Leonard Wood, John G. Hibbens, President of Princeton University; Robert E. Peary, John Hayes Hammond, Jr., and others of national repute.

Psychology—Edited by Dr. Hugo Munsterberg. Dr. Munsterberg discusses in a practical and humorous way, the great problem of the day, "Are You Fitted For Your Job?"

Better Babies—Edited in conjunction with the Woman's Home Companion. This publication has made a great feature of this series and is picturizing what they have printed and what has caused great interest amongst mothers. Inquiries have been received by the Woman's Home Companion in regard to where these pictures may be seen, and these will be referred to us.

Science and Invention—Edited by Waldemar Kaempffert, Editor of the Popular Science Monthly. One of the early contributions will be putting a gyroscope to work by Elmer G. Sperry, Inventor. Here you see an aeroplane held erect by a gyroscope, while a passenger walks out on one of the wings and the aviator holds up both hands.

Paramount Fashions—Created exclusively for Paramount by Zalud, and presented in an original manner.

It is a one reel picture which is going to make more talk throughout the country than any other ever produced. They are their own best advertising.

These are broad statements—but see for yourself at the nearest Paramount Exchange.

First Release date, February 7th.

THE MEASURE OF MERIT

IN his book, "With Lincoln at Gettysburg," Dr. Junius B. Reinensnyder declares that the immortal speech of the great emancipator was "not appreciated at anything like its true value at the time, evoking no applause and but brief press notices."

> "But age, which is the true standard," concludes the writer, "has assigned the address a place foremost among the utterances of men."

All worth-while things, like Lincoln's speech, are measured by the yard stick of time.

Therein lies, in part, the explanation for the substantial box office value of Big Four features. The public through long experience, has learned to associate their names with merit.

As evidence that this confidence is fully warranted, we have only to refer to the releases of these producers during the past few months through this organization, including as they do, such widely known successes as:

PRODUCTIONS	STARS	PRODUCTIONS	STARS
Battle Cry of Peace	Charles Richman	Blindness of Virtue	Edna Maye, Bryant Washburn
The Misleading Lady	Henry B. Walthall, Edna Mayo	The House of a Thousand Candles	Grace Darmond, Harry Mestayer
The Juggernaut	Anita Stewart, Earle Williams	The Great Divide	Ethel Clayton, House Peters
Graustark	Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne	The Nation's Peril	Ormi Hawley, Earl Metcalfe
The Island of Regeneration	Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno	No Greater Love	Regina Badet
The Rosary	Kathlyn Williams	Souls in Bondage	Nance O'Neil

That this confidence will be even further warranted in the future is indicated by the schedule of releases to come—some of which are described on the succeeding four pages, and others of which include

PRODUCTIONS	STARS	PRODUCTIONS	STARS
Vultures of Society (Essanay)	Marguerite Clayton, E. H. Calvert	Writing on the Wall (Vitagraph)	Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour
Unto Those Who Sin (Selig)	Fritzi Brunette	Dollars and Cents (Lubin)	Tom Moore, Ethel Clayton

The exhibitor seeking productions of consistent high general average and sustained strength which will increase his prestige and profits, would do well to consider carefully the worth in dollars and cents of such time-tried reputation.

My dear Mr. Irwin:

Wish to inform you that Dr. L. S. Oberholtzer, Secretary, and Mrs. E. C. Niver, Vice-Chairman of the State Board of Censors, informed the writer that they consider "The Misleading Lady," the best picture that has ever been screened before their board and stated while they have seen many thousands of subjects, do not consider "The Misleading Lady," second to any one of them—in fact, in their estimation, is far superior to any subject that has been screened in their inspection room.

My dear Mr. Abel:

Lubin's "The Great Divide," opened at the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, Sunday, Jan. 9th. Mr. Westbrook informed the writer last night that they came within $10.00 of breaking all the house records for the day.

I was in the theatre last night and the house, seating over 2,160, was packed to the doors at the first show with everybody highly pleased with the picture.

Mr. Westbrook told the writer they consider "The Great Divide" one of the very best pictures and the biggest success of any picture they have ever shown in the house. This for your information.

Very truly yours

Gentlemen:

When we ran the 'The Rosary' it was necessary to sell tickets at two windows on account of the enormous crowd. Even so, at seven o'clock in the evening, we had to call up the police station to get two officers to hold the crowds back. Until after ten o'clock they stormed the entrance.

We are certainly highly pleased with this picture. We have played a lot of big stuff in the past, but believe we have never played any picture which gave better satisfaction.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen:

'The Island of Regeneration,' was a great picture. Traveling men claim they never saw a better picture anywhere. You certainly are to be congratulated upon such efforts as these because they are works of art in every sense of the word.

The complimentary remarks of the patrons both to me and to each other, were very gratifying because they were sincere. There were perhaps twenty people who saw the picture on Thursday, who came again last night. One lady in particular, who made the remark that Edith Storey had no claim to being an artist, stayed through two complete shows and came out full of praise.

Keep up this kind of production and the V-L-S-E and in fact the 'Big Four Family' will be so far ahead of them all that they will be lonesome.

CALIFORNIA MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION

SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA

THIS IS WHAT THEY SAID ABOUT IT

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER IN THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS:—"This picturization of Edwin Milton Royle's stage play affords Beatriz Michelena opportunities for strenuous emotional acting which she realizes well, presenting an impersonation which is convincing in itself. In externals—that is, in photography, lighting, and sets—'The Unwritten Law' is thoroughly acceptable."

JACK EDWARDS IN THE BILLBOARD:—"Volumes might be written of the clever characterization of the well-known Broadway success, 'The Unwritten Law,' and still it would be inadequate to properly describe her wonderful portrayal of The Woman."

GEORGE BLAISDELL IN THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD:—"The subject is well acted and well staged. The picture will interest all the way. There are situations of real strength, and these are handled in a manner to bring out their power. The story is clearly told. 'The Unwritten Law' should be a popular picture."

T. O. ELTONHEAD IN THE NEW YORK DRAMATIC MIRROR:—"Beatriz Michelena scores another emotional triumph in Edwin Milton Royle's 'The Unwritten Law.' Miss Michelena is called upon to go through a wide divergence of emotions and it is needless to say that she does it in a thoroughly capable manner."

WID GUNNING IN WID'S:—"Miss Michelena makes this a 'worthwhile' production. The story gives her a chance to do some very good emotional work and she holds the interest nicely in all her scenes."

HARRY ENNIS IN THE CLIPPER:—"As an out-of-ordinary type of picture play 'The Unwritten Law' should draw distinctly on its merits. In addition to the asset it possesses in Beatriz Michelena as a stellar drawing card, there is also an excellent acting cast and a well played and produced dramatic entertainment incorporated in the five reels. Any of the better class of houses can safely advertise this feature to the limit. It is of the type that should draw as well on a return date as the initial engagement."

THOMAS C. KENNEDY IN MOTOGRAPHY:—"'The Unwritten Law' has a uniformly effective cast, supported by good directions. The direction is easily one of the picture's strongest points. The fire scenes are handled admirably."

F. R. BUCKLEY IN THE MOTION PICTURE MAIL:—"To sum up, this is a picture in which there are no flaws. It is wonderful. It goes into the exclusive class—in which we have placed only two other five reel features during the last six months—which we can recommend to any exhibitor, anywhere, as an absolutely certain success."

DICKSON WATTS IN THE MORNING TELEGRAPH:—"Too much cannot be said in praise of Beatriz Michelena's acting. It is at all times natural and in the strong scenes, of an emotional quality rarely seen. No glycerine tears are needed to heighten the effect of her art, for some of the close-ups, which show real tears coursing down her cheeks, are quite harrowing enough."

Hundreds Turned Away

Triangle Theatres Are Playing To Big Business

When the Triangle Theatre of Detroit, Michigan, was opened, the crowds were enormous.

Mr. P. P. Craft, of this theatre, reports on the business of January 26th last: "In spite of inclement weather, the crowds lasted all night, and hundreds were turned away on the final night's showing of 'Let Katy Do It.'"

Mr. Craft is interested in securing the class of pictures that insures appreciative audiences.

At the Liberty Theatre of Seattle, Wash., people waited in the rain to see a TRIANGLE performance

And this is nothing unusual. This house plays to large audiences night after night. Their business is successful because their audiences demand and appreciate the best in motion pictures.

There is a reason for the success of TRIANGLE Theatres.

The Reason is——

Because—

Bessie Barriscale, who has appeared in so many successful Thomas H. Ince productions, nas proved herself a wonderful drawing card.

Because—

Mabel Normand, the popular Keystone comedienne, draws the crowds into your theatre like a magnet.

Because—

It is actors like W. S. Hart that the public appreciates and will pay money to see.

And—

Because—

Douglas Fairbanks, who is starring in Triangle Fine Arts Productions, has that indefinable personality that gets over and has already made a big hit.

Because—

Lillian Gish has established a reputation in such famous photoplays as "The Birth of a Nation."

Because—

When the public knows that Roscoe Arbuckle, the man who makes the millions laugh, is to appear in a picture, you can't keep them away.

Also——

Because*—TRIANGLE Plays, like "The Corner," in which Willard Mack stars, compel instant approval.

Because*—

"Let Katy Do It," a typical TRIANGLE Production, in which Jane Grey and Tully Marshall appear, is the kind of a play the moving picture public love—and talk about.

And*—

Because — the favorite Keystone Comedies can only be secured as a part of TRIANGLE Releases. Such plays as "Fatty and Mabel Adrift" will surely pull crowds.

This is the class of stars and these are the kind of plays that make your audiences leave with the thought that they have received more than their money's worth. Unrequested they heartily endorse TRIANGLE Plays to their friends and increase the number of your regular patrons — the moving picture lovers that never miss a night.

This is the reason TRIANGLE Theatres are continually playing to capacity houses.

But, TRIANGLE Service goes further and offers more than just the best talent, and the best pictures —

It means —

Fatty and Mabel Adrift

Roscoe Arbuckle — Fatty of Keystone Fame — with his broad trousers, his broader smile and inimitable mannerisms, and the popular Mabel Normand, may be seen together tonight in what is without question their richest and funniest picture — a TRIANGLE PICTURE entitled "Fatty and Mabel Adrift."

A Rollicking Comedy

If you are looking for comedy of the rip-roaring, side-splitting, ten-laughs-a-minute variety, there's not a better combination than these two wonderful stars, and when tonight you see the pile of fun, the swift-moving action, and go away with the happy memory of the realms of laughter, you will agree with the critic who pronounced the picture "the best yet."

If you want oodles of joy and such an amount of merriment that your sides will ache for a week, come over tonight and be really and truly amused.

The Corner

—the gripping TRIANGLE Play, with Willard Mack and George Fawcett, touches the very heart strings as you watch the tense and exciting moments of this wonderful play.

So true to life is the story, so realistic is the acting, and so strong are the personalities flashed on the screen, that you almost feel yourself an integral part of the thrilling drama as you watch the powerful financier build up a wonderful money making machine only to crush himself beneath its weight.

The powerful theme, the gripping manner in which it is told, and the marvelous acting combine to make one of the strongest TRIANGLE Pictures. See it tonight without fail!

Let Katy Do It

You should see this marvelous TRIANGLE PICTURE to appreciate the way these seven little kiddies—bright, live red-blooded American youngsters—act when they leave their comfortable New England home for the dangers that surround existence in a Mexican Mining Camp.

You'll be thrilled as you watch their bravery when they are put to the test to defend their lives and home against the ravages of the savage Mexicans. You can feel your blood run cold as you watch the stealthy manner in which the raiders creep up upon the house. And when the enemy is finally put to route by the daring children, you'll not be able to refrain from breaking into spontaneous applause.

This wonderful picture, featuring Jane Grey and Tully Marshall, may be seen at this theatre NOW.

Facts and Comments

SPEAKING of a great feature film rejected by the Kansas State Censors a leading journal of the State says that "even the wives of the censors failed to see any immorality in the films" and that "others of the highly exclusive audience to which the showing was made concurred in the opinion of the wives." In trying to account for the supercensoriousness of the censors our esteemed contemporary is forced into the belief that the "morals squad" may have been flirting a little with "the God of Politics." Wait until the censorial engines are all oiled and geared by politicians and you will see some mighty new and startling things in American political life.

FOUR times now has the Grand Jury of Hudson County, N. J., refused to indict the motion picture exhibitors who had been arrested in Jersey City for keeping open their theatres on Sundays. On one occasion the Grand Jury submitted a presentment emphatically favoring the opening of motion picture houses on Sundays. In spite of this plain manifestation of an overwhelming local sentiment for open picture houses on Sunday the police authorities threaten arrest and prosecution for any exhibitor daring to respect such public sentiment. In all fairness it must be admitted that the police really have no option in the matter. They are sworn to enforce the State law while it remains on the statute books. There is but one way to change the situation. The law now on the statute books must be amended. We are glad to learn that steps looking toward that end are under way. A bill will be introduced at Trenton which will allow every municipality within the State to decide this question for itself. If such a measure can be passed it will solve the whole question. It stands to reason that public sentiment on this problem will vary in different localities. An old rustic settlement in the interior of the State and a modern manufacturing town on the banks of the Hudson in the shadow of the metropolis are two obviously different communities.

EATING sawdust or masticating chaff are just about as pleasant pastimes as looking at overcensored pictures would be. Somewhere in the Good Book a story is told of a confection made of fat and hair. The dainty morsel produced acute indigestion in the entrails of a dragon, causing that unlucky beast to go into a sudden decline. Censorial flavoring of pictures has about the same effect. If Crafts and his crowd are allowed to censor the motion pictures of the country motion picture houses will be visited by an epidemic of public disfavor which none will be able to survive.

EXHIBITORS who are opposed to censorship have an important and immediate and practical duty to perform. All along the borders and yes even a good ways beyond the borders of the censorship States films are displayed bearing the legend "Approved by the Pennsylvania censors" or "Ohio censors." The writer has seen these hideous tails on films displayed in non-censorship States. New Jersey and Delaware and Maryland are bad offenders in that respect. In Camden, in Atlantic City, in Trenton, in Wilmington, in Dover, in Baltimore, in Washington there are altogether too many motion picture houses advertising the censor boards of Pennsylvania and Ohio. West Virginia and Virginia are not much better. The stamp of censorial approval has been seen even in some theaters in the Bronx. Of course, the exchanges are to blame in the first place, but they plead lack of time. It's a poor excuse for such a serious offence as disseminating the dangerous microbes of censorship. There is no excuse for the exhibitor. Let him use his scissors freely. Cut the censorship "ad." out of your film and if you haven't a pair of scissors handy use your pocket knife or tear it out. They have no right to send it to you in the first instance. The writer personally knows of one case where this constant display of the censor board advertisement has resulted in local censorship. Exhibitors, in the name of common sense, stop advertising your own worst enemies. Use your screens for better purposes.

FROM the diary of a press agent having had experience: "Publicity is a coy maiden. When you try to force her she disappears. She may be won by waiting."

Sex Drama*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

EXACTLY what is meant by "Sex Drama" awaits the lexicographer. The term is subject to wide difference of interpretation, but the significance most generally understood in this country has probably grown out of our attitude toward French plays, particularly those of the "eternal triangle." If we were to judge France by the work of her dramatists, we could not help thinking that French people lay too much stress on sex. Much that their playwrights have to say on the subject in their outspoken way disturbs us as much by its frankness as it does by an ethical standpoint somewhat opposed to our own.

"Love is the one subject," says Donnay, "which every member of the audience understands, and a dramatist must, of course, appeal to the masses." He is reflecting French life as he finds it, and he is probably sincere in writing a play such as "Amants." That he is able to treat the subject of conjugal infidelity with grace and charm, beautifying it with delicate sentiment, dignifying it by subtle character analysis, is because he is a veritable artist, but that beauty and dignity would be lost in translation, what is gross remaining, an unpleasant residuum.

While an artist of rare ability may handle a perilous subject with such skill as to strip it of offence, the clumsy artisan, hammering out an adaptation, may only thrust into prominence whatever is repulsive. At best he would be a follower of Strindberg, who says, "Let us have a theater where we can be shocked, where we can have revealed to us what has hitherto lain veiled behind theological or esthetic preconceptions." Such a theater would necessarily be devoted to the presentation of what is unnatural in our social structure or to the emphasis of what is morbid in human nature.

To brutalize French drama in one or another process of transformation is not to reflect French life, nor can it be honestly claimed that any such gross transformation reflects American life and ideals. Sex impulse the world over furnishes the teller of stories with a rich field of varied material, providing the central line of interest in a very large proportion of novels and plays. Any author of intelligence is aware that "love is the one subject which every member of the audience understands," but that does not imply a limitation to the monotonous eternal triangle of husband, wife and lover.

"Sex Drama," in a broader and more varied sense, offers much that is tragic and even more that is comic in the clash between all that is masculine on one side and all that is feminine on the other, but it is not so easy to differentiate the sexes as is commonly imagined. It is extremely difficult—it is ordinarily impossible—for a scientist to determine whether a human skeleton is that of a male or of a female being, and authors soon find that a careful examination of masculine and feminine characteristics reveals a confusing similarity of structure. The difference is largely that of individuals.

Nearly all stories consider men and women as types of the race, not of one or the other sex, unconsciously recognizing the old empirical dual sexuality, the presence in man of a womanish strain, or in woman distinctly paternal characteristics. Such stories do not clear the way in the matter of sex discrimination, but lead us deeper into the jungle. Given exactly equal conditions of heredity and environment, it might be reasonably doubted that character differences exist.

They do exist. Possibly the secret of all of them is to be found in the maternal instinct. A splendid woman can become completely and contentedly occupied with children, identifying herself only with what her husband creates simply for the love she bears him, but not really interesting herself in those creations further than that they bear upon the welfare of her children. This is often true of her home, especially when she is childless. She becomes so absorbed in its regulation that his irregularity of arrival perpetually jars her sense of fitness.

She especially aims to beautify with cleanliness and taste the common dwelling-place. In her intense desire for affection and her love of beauty lie qualities not insistently masculine. The average small boy hates to have his face washed, and the average man, living where there are only men, will wear a shirt until it drops off. The fact that a man's sensibilities become more or less indurated by intense devotion to work seldom meets with woman's approval—for her, love is ever the well-spring of existence. She must love some animate thing, even if it is only an old cat, to the last days of her life.

Heart hunger with man is intermittent. It occurs to him at all kinds of unexpected moments. The flash of a bright eye beneath a half-lowered lash, the faintest dimple of a feminine smile, and he forgets the business engagement he intended to keep. There is a lot of comedy in his erratic heart-hunger and a lot of tragedy in the heartache it causes. Close analysis brings to light many sex differences, most of them suggesting stories of infinite variety, nearly all interesting to the average audience, hence it seems unnecessary to use the coarser elements of sex relation for any form of drama.

Of course there are plenty of weaklings and warped minds in any mixed crowd. Some of them revel in penny-ante and fairly glow with excitement over losing sixteen cents in one night's play. Others grow positively devilish when they first burn brandy on the sugar of a demi-tasse at a fifty-cent French table d'hote. Their idea of having a good time is often confused with an odor of stale beer and they will gloat over a lurid poster promising either a chamber-of-horrors performance or one reasonably sure to call for action by the authorities.

Screen presentations appealing to low taste, produced to brutalize rather than beautify love, are often called examples of "sex drama," whereas many of them are but examples of the limit of a decadent mind, one which measures all humanity by its own imperfect standard. In process of deterioration, such minds are intent only on the demoralization of human life in its flower. They have no effect on the normal and fully matured taste, no other effect than that of nausea.

Our baser impulses need refining rather than stimulus We have learned to idealize love, to sweeten and beautify it through all the arts of expression. This does not mean that our blood shall not run red with intense feeling, but that our very passions shall grow more beautiful with our unfolding of character. Love can be all that love ever was and a thousand times more. Human nature may be superb in breasting a torrent of desire—it is pitiful when wallowing in the mire. The dramatist who lowers and cheapens the supreme sentiment which brought him into the world must surely forget the world's dearest gift, the benediction of a mother's eternal love.

The Trend Is Upward

By W. Stephen Bush.

MANY thanks to Melvin G. Winstock, who has favored us with a most interesting and readable reply to the Cassandra-like wailing of our esteemed correspondent, Mr. Hoskins of Chicago. Mr. Winstock says:

"I make it my business every week personally to view every real feature on the market, selecting as I do the attractions for six big theatres. I must candidly confess that I would write down as most exceptional any human being who cannot find in most of the current releases an inexhaustible mine of intellectual and moral inspiration."

Now this is expert testimony and the testimony of an eye-witness besides. I think it is entitled to great consideration. Another telling point in Mr. Winstock's letter is his contention that the purveyors of public entertainment would quickly starve to death if they depended on the patronage of reformers and captious critics. He drives his argument home in this compelling fashion:

"A national photodrama cannot depend for its inspiration upon any small portion of the people. It must derive its inspiration from and make its appeal to the psychology of the multitude. That our art has become the fifth largest industry in the United States is a direct result of the fact that producers are striving earnestly and honestly for higher and better things. Of course, there are exceptions. I have seen a flock of buzzards in a field of lilies. They did not stay long. The company was not congenial."

Writing from Seattle, Wash., Mr. Winstock comments upon the all-pervading popular interest in motion pictures. Says he:

"With us there is no topic so upon the tongue of the multitude as the drama of the screen. You cannot go to club, hotel corridor, barbershop or church without finding many quite willing and even eager to discuss pictures. The subject has even been touched upon by our local board of censors."

Mr. Winstock fastens the epithet "Puritanical" on Chicago. We leave it to Mr. Hoskins to shake off this sharp-pointed and vibrant arrow shot at his good old home town.

We cannot help enjoying Mr. Winstock's optimistic conclusion which is to this effect:

"American photodramatic art is in process of evolution. Its trend is upward. If newspapers, magazines and the people will but help, the silent drama will do more toward shaping national destiny than any other one force in our national life."

No Surrender and No Compromise

By W. Stephen Bush.

ON this question of Federal Censorship there will be no surrender and no compromise. One of the companies which was claimed to be in favor of Federal Censorship has since emphatically disavowed any intention of favoring the Crafts Bill or any similar measure. The president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, William W. Hodkinson, says that he has never heard any solid substantial arguments against Federal Censorship. If this is so the fault does not lie with the opponents of censorship. They have made their faith known and they have given the reasons for their faith night and day, in season and out of season.

We are opposed to censorship as a matter of principle. Censorship muzzles free expression. That reason is enough for any American. There are special reasons, however, why the motion picture men oppose censorship. National President Herrington objects to it because it robs the motion picture of all of its entertainment value. I would only send my very worst enemies to a motion picture show which had been censored by Crafts and his tribe. The motion picture thus censored might be a soporific of the highest quality, but as an entertainment it wouldn't be worth two cents. Really, the exhibitor is in a position to judge. Business has not increased in the censorship States. On the other hand we have noticed no marked moral improvement in any of the censorship States. The people of New York and New Jersey, for instance, see, day after day, the very pictures which Breitinger will not allow his Pennsylvanians to gaze at. In spite of all, the average of morality is not a bit affected when the train crosses the Delaware, whether it's going east or west.

No use wasting many more words about the new Crafts bill, which we are told has the explicit approval of the president of the Paramount. We have pointed out that in some respects it is worse than the old one and that is saying the limit.

We don't have to tell our readers that we have nailed the Anti-Censorship Slogan to the mast of the good old ship "Moving Picture World." It's been flying there for some time in good weather and in bad. It will stay there. Thanks to the many friends and readers who have taken the trouble to write us commending our stand.

Directors, Please Take Notice

By W. Stephen Bush.

AN ESTEEMED friend and reader of The Moving Picture World, a Catholic clergyman in Montana, voices a very just complaint against the misrepresentation of the priests of his church on the motion picture screen. Here is one part of his vigorous protest:

"Why do some producers of moving pictures persist in slapping their Catholic patrons in the face, when intentionally or otherwise they make the curé, the padre or the parish priest perform acts on the screen entirely at variance with the teachings of the church or their every-day mode of living? Now you'll see a Franciscan monk dressed in the penitential gown of his order harboring a 'ward,' an attractive young lady on the screen and bestowing 'fatherly attentions' on her, caressing her, etc., which if known to his superiors would be sufficient reason for his being unfrocked and sent out into the world in disgrace. Don't these producers know that no monks or members of Catholic orders are allowed to have female wards or even permit their entrance into the sacred confines of their monastery beyond the parlor? Again we see the priest on the screen impersonated by a so-called actor who has not the least idea of how a priest looks or acts in every-day life. Either you see frivolity or abandon written on his face with an utter lack of clerical decorum in his behavior, thereby ridiculing the sacred calling of the Catholic clergy, or you'll find him fashioned after a type of pharisaical and affected 'gentleman' of the funny papers with eyes rolling in holy terror, hands folded downwards in a holier-than-thou attitude and trying to bless himself in such an awkward way that it is apparent his impersonator has only a long-distance acquaintance with the character he represents. Then again, we'll see him perform ceremonies and rites that are either absolutely impossible under the circumstances, or against all the teachings of even the little catechism taught the six-year-old tots in our Sunday schools. Take the figure of the curé in "Hélène of the North," the beautiful play with Marguerite Clark in the title role. Apart from the fact that the priest in the story is a 'Deus ex machina,' and might well have been left out of it only for the ridiculous part he was scheduled to play in the last act, we see him perform a marriage ceremony that is no contract whatever in a legal, moral or ecclesiastical sense. He is seen 'marrying' Hélène to a Canadian constable when the girl in question is under the impression that she is marrying Pierre, the Canadian half-breed. In order to do this he performs the ceremony in Latin, which, curiously enough, is understood by the constable. He alone is aware of the contract he is entering into. Since when is a contract valid when one of the participants or contractors is ignorant of the essentials of the contract? It is not necessary to be able to quote the theological impediment of error to see the absurdity of a marriage ceremony like the above; common sense should have told the author of the play and its producers that they were not only insulting Catholic intelligence, but styling themselves as incompetent to picture life in its more serious aspects.

Our esteemed correspondent calls attention to the friendly attitude of the Catholic church toward the motion picture and also to the fact that Catholics "constitute a considerable element of the theatre-going public." "We are not complaining," he says further, "about the motion pictures emptying our churches on Sunday evening. The church that cannot compete with the theatre in holding her people to the practice of their religion had better take stock of herself to determine what's wrong in her own vitals rather than try to eliminate competition by smothering the other fellow."

The remedy of our correspondent for these constant blunders and misrepresentations is very simple. It is described in such convincing and vigorous fashion that we reprint it in full:

"Let non-Catholic authors and actors, when dealing with topic or persons Catholic, study their subject as they would any other, by seeking advice there where it can best be had—the local clergy. In impersonating a Catholic clergyman let them remember that the priest is just an ordinary human being, and that any gentleman with common sense and decency, by simply turning his collar around and dressing and acting conservatively, is bound to make a good priest on the screen. Yes, let him smoke a cigar in his study or walk around his garden in his shirt sleeves, rather than go to the other extreme to which our Lord referred when He spoke of 'plastered graves, hypocrites and vipers.'"

The Historic Event

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE ARE still near enough to the Great Event of January 27 to make congratulations timely. The Great Event, of course, is the annual dinner of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and the now historic visit of the President of the United States. The President showed a statesmanlike shrewdness and vision in according so much attention to the motion picture. The motion picture was honored, but it was honored upon a basis of merit rather than upon an assumption of favor. We would much rather have it so.

One lesson stands out pre-eminently: The industry dare not for a moment forget its vast and growing responsibilities to the public. The recognition by the President of the importance and dignity of the New Art makes it more than ever our duty to keep the screen free from all that is objectionable on moral grounds.

In whatever achievements we have attained equal shares of credit go to every branch of the industry. Producer, distributor and exhibitor all have done their part. The credit for the arrangement of the dinner goes to J. W. Binder, the executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade.

ZOE BECH, CHILD ACTRESS, WITH UNIVERSAL.

There's another pretty blue-eyed blonde at Universal and she is attracting a lot of attention. Blondes with blue eyes and blessed with good looks are numerous at the Universal Company's big picture plant. But the one in question is a real beauty and an actress of proven ability, even though she is only five years old.

The pretty blue-eyed blonde about whom we are writing is little Zoe Bech, who hereafter will be known as the Universal baby. Zoe, who formerly lived in Chicago, has been appearing in motion pictures since she was a year old, making her debut with the Selig Polyscope Company. She has appeared in more than thirty-five pictures produced by the Biograph company, in each of which she played child leads.

A Week of Mutuals

Masterpictures De Luxe for the Week of February 14 Offer Some Good Numbers.

WITH the week of February 14 the Mutual Film Corporation's new six features a week policy—three Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition, and three three-reel features—will be in full swing, although a departure from the general rule will be made in the release of "Silas Marner," a seven-reel feature, instead of the usual five-reel length.

"Silas Marner" is one of the most pretentious feature pictures ever presented by the Mutual. In the leading role, as the classic weaver-miser, is Frederick Warde, the celebrated Shakesperean actor, who makes his bow to Mutual audiences. George Eliot's novel has been ably translated into picture form by a splendid cast of Thanhouser players, under the direction of Ernest Warde, the son of the star. "Silas Marner" will be released on February 19.

This same week will serve to introduce a second new Mutual star to the motion picture world. On February 17 Marguerite Courtot, the charming little Gaumont star, will appear in her first Masterpicture, de luxe edition, in "The Dead Alive," a story of quality, written especially for her.

The remaining Masterpicture, de luxe edition, of the week is "Life's Blind Alley," which really leads off the week, being released on Monday, February 14. This picture, which is one of the most human dramas ever put on the screen, was made by the American Film Company and features May Allison and Harold Lockwood.

The three three-reel dramas for Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday are "A Modern Sphinx," "Outwitted" and "When the Light Came." There is always something alluring about the colorful atmosphere of Egypt and the mystery of the Sphinx. Winifred Greenwood, the American star, is seen in one of her most fascinating impersonations as Asa, a maiden of the Nile, in this American drama.

"Outwitted," a drama in which Lady, a clever collie, outwits two villains in their plot to steal a goodly sum of money along with a young lady's affections, will be the Thanhouser three-reel offering of Wednesday, February 16. Aside from the valuable dog, there are in the cast Wayne Arcy and Hazel Kirk, popular Thanhouser players.

Thomas Chatterton is responsible for the excellently produced American drama of Friday, February 18, entitled "When the Light Came," and Anna Little is responsible for some charming acting in her role of Martha Merrill, the leading lady. Mr. Chatterton himself plays the hero role—that of Jim Morton, ranchman.

The Vogue comedies of Thursday, February 17, and Sunday, February 20, are funny pictures of that quality which the name Vogue alone stands for. "At the End of His Rope" features Rube Miller and Madge Kirby, who are supported by Alice Neice and Arthur Travares. The picture is directed by Rube Muller. "Heaven Will Protect a Working Goil"—and it might be added help her escape in a "flivver"—is a screaming farce comedy which features Russ Powell and Priscilla Dean. It was produced under the direction of Jack Dillon.

The Beauty comedies for the week of February 14 are "Ella Wanted to Elope" and "The Battle of Cupidovitch," both of them stirring picturizations of life when Cupid's arrows have struck home. Ella in the former picture is looking for romance with a capital R. She is dying to elope. Her mother knows it and tries to fix it up with her attorney so that the child may have her little elopement but be deserted before the minister has tied the knot. The affair is fixed up and results in a tangle such as Neva Gerber, the American star, only can untangle. Appearing with Miss Gerber are Lucille Ward, William Carroll and Richard Rosson. Dick Rosson, Carol Halloway, John Steppling, John Sheehan and Mary Talbot are in the cast of "The Battle of Cupidovitch."

Mutual Weekly No. 59, showing glimpses of world events, and "See America First" No. 20 and "Keeping Up With the Joneses" will complete the list of Mutual releases for the week of February 14.

ABANDONS EDITORIAL FOR SCREEN WORK.

John Sacker, former editor of the Photoplayers' Weekly, and who for several months past has been playing juvenile leads with the Malibu company at Santa Monica, has joined the Universal's forces at their western studios, where he has been cast for a character part in Francis Ford's production of "The Madcap Queen of Corona," in which Grace Cunard enacts the leading role.

Knickerbocker vs. Triangle

Effort to Oust Motion Pictures as Inferior Grade of Amusement Meets With Stout Resistance—Motion for Injunction Adjourned Until Thursday, Feb. 10.

ON TUESDAY, February 1, papers were served on the Triangle Film Corporation as lessees of the Knickerbocker theater, Broadway and 38th street, New York, in a suit brought by Robert W. Goelet, owner of the property and others, to enjoin them from conducting what was alleged to be third class performances in showing pictures continuously at popular prices and thus damaging the character of the theater which was alleged to be first class. A hearing was set for Friday, February 4.

The allegations of the plaintiffs that a motion picture exhibition at popular prices tended to degrade the theater has precipitated a contest between the motion picture and the theatrical interests and the former have flocked to the support of the Triangle without regard to affiliations. This was proved when the matter came up in Part II. of the Supreme Court on February 4. The answer of the defendants was submitted by W. N. Seligsburg as counsel. It was voluminous and included affidavits from a large number of motion picture men, all tending to show that there had been no violation of the terms of the lease as viewed by the motion picture fraternity and by theatrical managers and producers, who have entered the latter field while retaining their position in the realm of the spoken drama.

Among the signers of affidavits were Harry H. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film corporation; Lawrence Anholt, manager of the Park theater; Alexander Lambert, musician and principal of a musical school and studio at 792 Lexington avenue; Henry J. Brock, who conducts a chain of theaters in New York, Buffalo, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal; Henry I. McMahon, Boston manager for "The Birth of a Nation;" Leon Langsfeld, manager of the Broadway theater, Broadway at 41st street; Lyman O. Fiske, manager of the Dramatic Mirror; Frederick F. Schrader, playwright and dramatic critic; Harry R. Raver, manager of "Cabiria," and S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Knickerbocker theater and of the new Rialto theater, under construction and now nearing completion.

Affidavits by Messrs. Al. Hayman and Daniel Frohman in connection with previous litigation of a similar character were introduced through filing certified copies. Harry G. Sommers, author of the only affidavit filed by the plaintiff, was quoted in support of the defence through the filing of letters over his signature in which he advocated the reduction of prices, which he subsequently swore constituted a cause for declaring the terms of the lease violated.

Messrs. Cary and Carroll, 59 Wall street, counsel for Mr. Goelet, declared themselves unprepared to proceed after viewing the avalanche of evidence introduced by Attorney Seligsburg, and were given until Thursday, February 10, to file answering and opposing affidavits. Argument of the motion for an injunction was set for Thursday, February 10.

Mr. Aitken, in his affidavit, makes known some of the inner secrets of the motion picture business, for instance, that the standard of seat valuation is reversed when that form of amusement follows the spoken drama. "The front rows of the ground, or orchestra floor, are the best seats for spoken plays," he avers, while "at motion picture plays these seats are too near, and the best seats are those at the front of the balcony."

Mr. Aitken goes into the history of the lease of the Knickerbocker theater from Mr. Goelet to Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger, Al. Hayman and Charles Frohman, and from the latter to himself. Mr. Sommers was manager of the theater at the time he secured it, he swore, and continued in that capacity until on or about January 8, when his services were dispensed with and Samuel L. Rothapfel was installed as manager.

"Plaintiff made no objection to the presentation of motion pictures while Mr. Sommers was continued as manager in charge of the Knickerbocker theater," continued Mr. Aitken. The latter cited the fact that "Cabiria" played a long engagement at the theater with $1 as the highest price charged for admission; that Mr. Sommers advocated and endorsed in writing a reduction of the prices charged under the Triangle management, and that there was no complaint of any kind until Mr. Rothapfel readjusted the prices in accordance with moving picture standards, charging $2 and $1.50 for box, loge and the choice of balcony seats and 50 and 25 cents for the rest of the house.

He then delved into theatrical history to show that the Astor, Liberty, Criterion, New York, Strand and Broadway and other Manhattan theaters had enjoyed a fling of moving picture operation without having had their class altered or their renting value impaired. The upward trend to the north in affairs theatrical and not the presence of films, he averred is responsible for a diminished rental value for the Knickerbocker theater.

S. L. Rothapfel gave a detailed review of the performances he is presenting at the Knickerbocker, declaring them first class in every respect "and equal to any entertainment of their nature given anywhere in the United States or abroad, and patronized by the same class of patrons who patronize the other first class theaters of New York." The remainder of his affidavit is devoted to an analysis of the performance and of the prices charged.

Al. Hayman, as general manager for the late Charles Frohman, is then quoted as having deposed as follows: "The producing of photo drama in a 'first class theater' is not calculated to in any way diminish the value of such theater, or to injure its reputation as a 'first class theater.' The price of admission to a theater does not determine whether or no it be a 'first class house,' this is regulated solely by the manner that the same is conducted and managed, and not otherwise."

The evidence, as introduced, is believed to indicate the full position of the moving picture interests as a whole, although the defendants will have further opportunity to amplify their defense after the introduction of the plaintiff's evidence at Thursday's hearing.

New Jersey Threatened With Censorship

Bill Introduced in Trenton at the Instance of the Holy Name Societies.

AT the session of the New Jersey Legislature opening for the week of February 7, a bill has been introduced proposing to create a state board of censors whose approval will be necessary before films may be shown in the State, probably will be introduced in the Legislature Monday night. The bill was drafted by a committee of the Essex County division of the State Federation of Holy Name Societies and has received the indorsement of representatives from other divisions and of P. A. Dwyer, of Paterson, president of the State Federation, at a meeting in this city.

Those who attended the meeting were Hubert J. Rowe, Robert Powers and Rev. M. P. Corcoran, rector of St. John's Catholic Church, the three representing the Essex Division; Frank J. Reardon of Jersey City, representing the Hudson County Division; Charles McCarthy of the Passaic County Division and Mr. Dwyer. The bill was drafted by Mr. Rowe and Michael J. Tansey.

Regulation of the character of pictures shown, even though passed by the informal national board of censors, is considered necessary by representatives of the Holy Name societies.

The New Jersey exhibitors are thoroughly aware of the dangers which threaten them if this bill were enacted into a law. Following the plan of the New York exhibitors they propose to hold a state convention at Trenton, the State capital, in order to impress the Legislators with their numbers and their power. A committee has been appointed to make the necessary arrangements. It is believed that the sponsors of the bill and its supporters are animated by sincere motives and have the best of intentions. An effort will be made to get into touch with them and convince them of the earnest desire of all producers and exhibitors to have none but clean pictures.

JAMES YOUNG SUES SELZNICK.

James Young, husband of Clara Kimball Young, has commenced an action in the Supreme Court against Lewis J. Selznick for alienation of the affections of his wife. He claims damages to the amount of $100,000. Mr. Selznick, in his answer, denies all the allegations in Mr. Young's complaint and says that the trouble of the Youngs commenced long before he became interested in the artistic success of Mrs. Young.

JACK GRAY WITH NICHOLS-FINN COMPANY.

Jack Gray has resigned from the Vitagraph Company to accept a position with the Nichols-Finn Advertising Company, and will be in charge of the company's offices at 200 Fifth avenue, New York. George H. Sheldon, who was in temporary charge of the offices since the resignation of Mr. Kuhn, has turned the affairs of the company over to Mr. Gray and returned to Chicago.

Censorship Threatens New York

Assemblyman Ahearn, of Brooklyn, Introduces Vicious Measure in Albany—Unless State Meeting March 1st and 2d at Albany Acts, New York Will Have Censorship by July 1st.

By W. Stephen Bush.

NEW YORK is now actually threatened with the worst posible form of censorship. Assemblyman Ahearn, of Brooklyn, has introduced a State censorship bill at Albany, which has been referred to the Committee on Codes. The bill is much worse than the censorship laws in Kansas, Ohio or Pennsylvania. Appointment of the State censors is made by the Governor "with the advice and consent of the senate." This phrasing makes it sure that the appointments will be purely political. No appeal from the decisions of the censors is allowed. Their findings are absolute and the exhibitor or producer must abide by them, no matter how unreasonable they may seem.

The act is to take effect on the first of July of this year. This means that in a little more than four months we will have the worst censorship in the country, unless the organized and the unorganized exhibitors rally in one grand impressive protest against the measure.

Motion pictures in the censorship states have lost much of their popularity. The butchering and mutilating of films by the censors simply spoils the motion picture entertainment and results in direct losses to the exhibitors.

Exhibitors Must Act.

The exhibitors can beat this measure if they will get busy at once. A grand rally of motion picture exhibitors is proposed FOR MARCH 1ST and 2D at ALBANY. Albany is the place for a strong demonstration of motion picture men. At Albany the legislature is in session. It will be in session March 1st and 2d. These days have been chosen to make sure that the legislators will be in Albany when the grand rally of exhibitors takes place. Shake off your indifference and prepare for the great state meeting at once. Write either to State President Lee A. Ochs or to the Moving Picture World of your intention to be there.

The advocates of this measure will make a desperate fight for its passage. For them the defeat or the victory of this bill will mean nothing but notoriety, to you, exhibitors, the failure or passage of the measure is surely a question of life and death. With all the life and humor and sensation censored out of your films the public will stay away from your houses. Act without delay. Remember the time, March 1st and 2d, the place, Albany, Ten Eyck Hotel. Get busy.

Such bonds shall be conditioned upon the faithful performance of the duties of the censors executing the same. SECTION 3. This act shall take effect July first, nineteen hundred and sixteen, except as to the appointment of censors under section five of the state board and commissions law as added by this act, and as to such provisions, this act shall take effect immediately.

SOME BLUEBIRD BRANCH MANAGERS.

General Manager H. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird Photoplays, has began the announcement of managers lately appointed to represent Bluebird interests in various territories. Sol J. Berman is the New York manager, established in commodious offices on the seventh floor of the Mecca Building.

Boston offices have been opened at 205 Pleasant street, with Frank Jaques in charge. Mr. Jaques was formerly connected with the Boston Photo-Play Co., and later was manager of the Globe theater, Brockton. He will supervise operations in the New England territory around Boston.

C. G. Sidney, formerly manager of the United Film Service, in Albany, has been made representative for Bluebirds in Eastern territory, with headquarters in Albany.

In Detroit, Robert S. Bedell will represent Bluebird interests. He has lately been with the Majestic Feature Corporation and was formerly with Broadway Feature Films Co., in both instances located in Detroit.

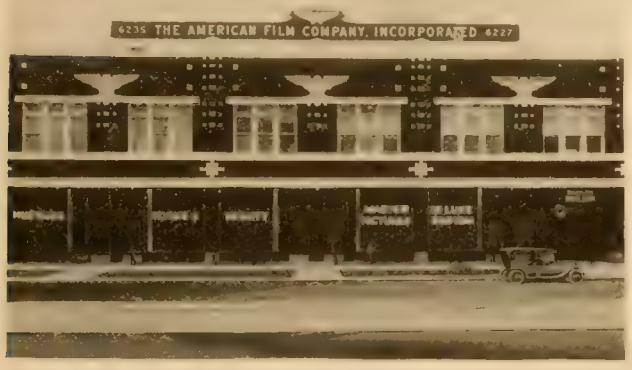
MISS NILSSON SEEKS LOCAL COLOR.

Anna Q. Nilsson, the motion picture actress, spent an entire week in a lower East Side settlement house in New York City to gain local color for the photoplay, "To Him That Hath," in which she is appearing opposite Robert Warwick for the Premo. Miss Nilsson is cast for the role of a young society girl who wearies of her artificial life and goes into settlement work. The young Swedish star had never been inside of a settlement house, so her director gained permission for her to live in one for seven days. She attended sewing, cooking and dancing classes, and even assisted the dramatic coach in putting on a play. Miss Nilsson was so fascinated by her glimpse into settlement life that she has consented to give one evening a week to the coaching of amateur dramatics.

American's New Chicago Home

"Flying A" Company Occupies $200,000 Establishment—Handsomely Appointed Offices and Work Rooms.

AMERICAN FILM COMPANY, Incorporated, now is "at home" in a spick and span and spacious new building at 6227-35 Broadway, Chicago. At a cost of approximately $200,000, an entire new plant has been erected in



New Home of American Film Company, Inc., Chicago.

Chicago to house the American and its ever-growing activities. The new structure is of brick and terra cotta, two and one-half stories in height, and each floor has an area of 9,000 square feet. Work of construction was begun April 1, 1915. President Hutchinson and his army of co-workers expected to occupy the new home some weeks before the holidays. An extensive strike, which tied up building operations in Chicago for a period of nearly two months, proved a severe blow to the hopes of moving in before Old Man Winter closed his fist on the Windy City.

The buildings formerly occupied by the American are moved back close to the "L" tracks and are being used as store rooms and for other activities in connection with the greatly increased output of the American.

The former projection room still is in use, but a new one also is in operation. It is in this new projection room, fitted with four Motioscope motor drive projectors, that representatives of the trade press sit weekly on Thursdays to review forthcoming American releases.

The new projection room is some 60 feet long by 20 wide. It is fitted with comfortable chairs and tables, over which are bent well shaded electric lights. A specially constructed screen is built in. The new projection room is modern in every respect.

The new building houses the general office, the assembling room, the dry room, the negative room and three spacious storage film vaults. The general offices are on the second floor facing Broadway. President Hutchinson's suite is finished in heavy, dark walnut, and a unique beamed ceiling effect has been worked out. Adjoining Mr. Hutchinson's offices is the room of Manager R. R. Nehls, and adjoining Mr. Nehls' room is Mr. Ziebarth's. These offices are finished in the same general material and design as those of Mr. Hutchinson.

The year of 1915 saw a tremendous increase in the output of American Film Company, Incorporated. Early in the year it was seen that new offices and factory rooms were absolutely necessary. Accordingly, Mr. Hutchinson laid plans for a structure modern in every way, which he ordered constructed along lines best suited to the motion picture industry.

Practically all of the mechanical work, in connection with American films, is now done in Chicago. The large studios in Santa Barbara and elsewhere in California supply the reels and reels of film. In all there are nineteen American companies at work producing screen entertainment for the millions of picture lovers in all parts of the world, and the film dramas, comedies and tragedies produced by these nineteen companies are more than sufficient to keep the big force in Chicago working at top speed day after day.

PREMO APPOINTS JERKOWSKY MANAGER.

Louis Jerkowsky, formerly of Harry Rapf's vaudeville offices has been appointed by the Premo Film Corporation, 11 East 14th street, as the manager of the office and studios in the old Biograph Building.

"BRONCHO BILLY" IN THE EAST.

Gilbert M. Anderson, of the Essanay Company, better known to some as "Broncho Billy," is visiting New York City.

Big Four's New Quarters

Home Offices in the Mecca Building, Broadway and Forty-Eighth Street, Model of Convenience.

ALTHOUGH the V-L-S-E moved its home office and the New York branch office from the seventh to the sixth floor of the Mecca Building several weeks ago, workmen have been constantly employed in the new quarters, putting the final touches on their appointments and it was only last week that the undertaking was declared completed.

One thing noticeable is the efficiency with which the new offices of the Big Four have been laid out, and the convenience and comfort which has been provided, not only for the executive force of the Big Four, but for those who call at that office as well. For instance, the poster display room and the projection room in which the exhibitors and the press are entertained by the showing of new Big Four releases offer unusual facilities for consideration of those factors which go to make for successful presentation of features.

Office of General Manager.

The projection room is the most commodious in the city, with a throw of fifty feet. It is tastefully and comfortably furnished, and a great deal of care has been exercised to insure perfect projection. The poster room is as large as the entire office space of many representative organizations.

The arrangement of the New York branch lends itself ideally to the convenience of visiting exhibitors. All the departments are adjacent so that after making his selections, an exhibitor can go right down the line to the cashier and stock department, and complete his whole transaction with a minimum amount of effort.

John McAlier and P. A. Mansfield, representing the Pittsburgh Screen Club, were in New York City the past week seeking to obtain the promise of players to attend the big ball of their organization on February 14.

Kleine Outlines Billie Burke Novel

Actress Will Appear in Twenty-Chapter Story and Will Be Supported by Henry Kolker.

"I DO not believe that I have ever seen a production so lavishly treated—so carefully handled as to cast and details—as the new Billie Burke novel." This is the statement made by George Kleine, of the Kleine Feature Service, in response to queries regarding the new Kleine Burke novel.

"Exhibitors have sought detailed information about this new play through our various offices, but until now we have been unable to give out any information," continued Mr. Kleine. "This new production is by Rupert Hughes. We will endeavor to establish the fact that the motion picture is a logical medium for original literary activity. We intend to demonstrate that a modern work of fiction can be presented quickly and clearly through the medium of the screen—that the novel in picture form is easily interpreted, entertaining and interesting.

"We have been fortunate in securing our cast. Billie Burke is a great favorite. Her charming manner makes her an ideal screen subject. Her method of interpreting the emotions is distinctive. I cannot recall any screen subject so admirably fitted to portray the heroine's role in the new novel. From the first scenes made I am convinced Miss Burke will prove extraordinarily appealing. Our leading man is Henry Kolker. His successes on the speaking stage, as well as on the screen, are numerous.

"Much attention has been paid to the minor parts in the new novel. In order to interpret the roles properly, we had to have certain types. We have given considerable time to our selection of these players. David Powell will be cast as Richard Freneau. William Roselle is to play the part of the heroine's brother. William T. Carleton will have the role of the heroine's father. Miss Jule Power will interpret Marcia, the sister of the heroine.

"As to the story, it will be a society drama, for which Rupert Hughes has become so well known. Miss Burke will be seen in the role of a youthful society girl whose father is a wealthy banker. Her engagement to a rich Wall Street broker and her subsequent love affair with a dashing young doctor form the basis of a mystery plot that is excitingly interesting. Throughout the play Miss Burke will wear gowns especially designed for this production. It is our intention to make the gowns a sort of 'fashion bazaar.'

"The action of the new novel will be logical. There will be numerous stirring adventures throughout to maintain strong interest. The play will have all the attention-holding elements that usually are found in the most successful magazine stories. The films are now being made at my studio in New York City, which is thoroughly equipped with every modern convenience and invention.

"To insure proper direction of the pictures, I have appointed my chief director, Walter Edwin, as director. Mr. Edwin has many novel photographic treatments in view for the new play and I am sure we will see great results from his effort."

The new novel will be presented in twenty chapters of two reels each. It will be released to exhibitors through the Kleine feature service exchanges. No release date has been set.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS HAVE PLAN.

Suggestions Made to Manufacturers Calling for Selected Pictures and Subjects Suited for Children.

MUCH of the activity of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for the past fortnight has been devoted to a discussion with Cleveland club women, of a plan which the women contend will improve the standard of pictures shown in local theaters and draw bigger and better audiences.

Club Women's "Better Films" Campaign.

A week ago the club women, in the person of members of the Civics and Legislation Committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs, conferred with the Executive Committee of the Exhibitors' League with the idea of securing permission to operate a picture theater in a different section of the city one night a week for two months, to present selected films. Following this conference the entire Federation, comprising half a hundred women's organizations, endorsed the civics committee plan for holding "family nights," at theaters in residence districts and defined the class of pictures they deem proper for family night programs.

The definition of what a good film is, was submitted to the exhibitors in a letter signed by Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, secretary of the committee and now the exhibitors have arranged to have the club women view films they believe fit the definition, at an open meeting in the screening room of the General Film Company. This meeting is scheduled for February 9, and the club women promise to have at least 125 members present.

Their letter addressed to C. A. Megown, special representative of the Exhibitors' League, is as follows:

On Jan. 6, the Federation of Women's Clubs, composed of fifty clubs, heartily endorsed the plan of the Civics Committee for co-operating with your league, in giving, on stated nights, special programs for families which will be, as we have already stated, "entertaining, worth remembering and talking about in the family circle, educational, something amusing and nothing to emphasize bad manners and bad morals." The Federation voted to aid and stand back of the plan, leaving the working out of details to this committee and your committee.

We accept your invitation to view pictures accepted and rejected by the censors, at an open meeting at the General Film Company's building, 2200 Superior ave., and at your suggestion, have chosen Wednesday, Feb. 9, at 2 P. M., as the most convenient time for this meeting. We will endeavor to have 125 women present. If we do not finish in one afternoon, we are willing to give more time to it later.

Trusting the composite committee will be able to arrive at something definite and practical in the near future, I remain Yours Truly,

MRS. ELMER G. DERR, Secretary.

According to Mr. Megown, many pictures which fit the definition given by the women have been run from time to time in Cleveland theaters without any particular recognition, and others have even been rejected by the Ohio Board of Censors for reasons not clearly explained.

Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the League and Special Representative Megown of the League, believe the series of meetings with the club women will go far toward eliminating much unfair criticism which has been made of the motion picture business.

League's Letter to Manufacturing Companies.

In line with the agreement of the members of the Exhibitors' League to co-operate with the club women in presenting "family programs," Special Representative Megown is seeking to enlist the aid of every film manufacturer in the country. To this end, the following letter has just been sent to film manufacturers by Mr. Megown, on behalf of the League:

The Question of Censorship.

The question of censorship has not proven satisfactory in Ohio, even to those who advocated it two years ago, and there has arisen, as a result, a strong demand among a certain element for local censorship, and this has been particularly true in Cleveland.

The policy of the Exhibitors' League of Northeastern Ohio is quite capable of handling the situation, and we have met all the different societies that have been talking of the same in open debate without losing any ground. But to my way of thinking, this is but one of the things that should be done in reference to the question, and to the other things that should be done, I am addressing myself, in behalf of the League, to all manufacturers of regular service, who must constitute the backbone of all advancement in the film business, for the reason that if we are to depend upon the fly-by-night, we can never reach anywhere.

First, remember that the mere stopping of agitation does not accomplish anything, if there is left any reason, good or bad, in the minds of agitators, for a propaganda. Again, we must recognize that the easiest way to convert an agitator of censorship is to make a fan of him.

It must be recognized by all observers of the film industry the one great fact, that to keep up an interest in the business, there must be something new and something different done all the time. We cannot show the same old stories in the same old way to the same people week in and week out, and expect the business to keep up.

Children Patrons Important.

Again, we must recognize that while the business does not depend upon the amount of money paid in by children, that the children are still the real advertisers and interest-creators in the general run of films. Certain films may create an interest among a certain class for a certain time, but take the child life and the child interest out of the business and it will soon die and go into decay.

The child must be fed wholesome and interesting pictures in order to interest the parent, and the agitator of censorship must be brought to a full realization of this fact and of the further fact that there are hundreds of wholesome films made and exhibited in order to get them interested and make them see the question more from our standpoint than from the standpoint of an idealist.

Now we recognize as exhibitors, the fact that there have been any number of films made that will accomplish the above results, but they have been lost in the lock system that made it impossible to call the attention of the general public to the fact and to interest those who do not attend shows.

Special Shows for Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

One other further fact in this connection I wish to call to your attention, and that is, that few children attend the shows from Monday until Friday night, that their attendance of Friday, Saturday and Sunday is being made, more and more, a reward for good work in school, and we must recognize this fact and we are so doing in this city.

Now it is our proposition, which meets the approval of a class of people who have not given great attention to picture shows, to try and arrange a week-end program that will create a general public demand by both young and old, to get a better understanding for the picture business.

This will be an impossible task if we were to ask you to do it in your regular releases, and realize it could not be done that way, but we believe that this could be done in another way and that the experiment would be well worth trying.

Would Get Up List of Good Pictures.

We would get up a list of certain pictures that have been run, that we know of, and if you would reprint them, we could get enough exhibitors to try the experiment in different sections of the city, behind which movement we have the promise of the support of the papers and different civic bodies, and if we find that it creates a proper sentiment and meets with popular approval, we could then formulate a plan whereby each manufacturer could make film for that purpose, that would only be released on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and do it in such a way as not to interfere with or change your regular program.

Whoever is in the film business that does not recognize the confidence of the public as one of the assets of the business, must fail in the end, and if the average exhibitor, in the house of five hundred or less, cannot run his show with a regular program, he must sooner or later go out of business.

Now we want your immediate reply as to your willingness to comply with our request, upon a cost basis to start with, then we will send you a list of subjects that you have made in the past and that we desire to have reprinted, assuring you that in this locality we, who have fought our way through every struggle with success, will succeed in turning all agitators of censorship against any form of the same.

HUDSON COUNTY (N. J.) EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

Will Start Campaign for Sunday Referendum.

A MEETING of the exhibitors of Hudson County, N. J., had been called for Thursday, February 3, in the offices of Frederick C. Henn, in the Spingarn Building, Five Corners, Jersey City. About fifteen exhibitors responded. Among them were Moody & Higgins, who control a chain of theaters; Louis Blumenthal, Peter Steup, M. S. Schlesinger and J. M. Brennan of the Orpheum theater, Jersey City; A. M. Robinson, Dr. Hespe, A. Calibrati, L. Lowenthal, Edward Dougherty of the Rex theater. A temporary organization was effected by the election of Dr. Hespe as chairman and Mr. Robinson as secretary.

It is proposed to have Senator Eagan and Assemblyman Henn introduce bills for either a total repeal or a substantial modification of the present Sunday laws. The modification aims at submitting the question of Sunday opening to the various cities or counties of the state. A committee was appointed to confer with Senator Eagan, Mr. Henn and W. S. Bush to draft the necessary bills. A resolution was passed pledging Senator Eagan the support of the motion picture men in his efforts to promote liberal Sunday legislation. A further resolution which was passed unanimously provided for a conference with the Newark exhibitors for co-operation in the anti-blue-law campaign. Steps were taken for the forming of a state organization and for the holding of a state convention at the state capital. Upon motion of Mr. Blumenthal it was decided to seek affiliation with the national league at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Robinson made an able address, in the course of which he said that now was the psychological moment for the exhibitors to organize. He said that exhibitors today had more at stake than ever before. Their investments were greater than ever before and the need of organization correspondingly greater. A vote of thanks was given to the Moving Picture World for its loyal and consistent support of the exhibitor. Another meeting will be held next Thursday, February 10, at the offices of Mr. Henn, Spingarn Building, Five Corners, Jersey City. The meeting will be called to order at four o'clock. It is very important for all the exhibitors of Hudson County to attend. While Sunday legislation will be one of the important topics of the meeting, there will be other matters of great and vital interest to the exhibitor. The spirit of organization among the exhibitors is in the air, and it is hoped that the gathering at Mr. Henn's offices in the Spingarn Building, Jersey City, at four o'clock Thursday, February 10, will be a very large one. Several important committee reports will be received, among others the result of the conference with the Newark organization.

It was decided to call the organization the Hudson County Exhibitors' Association.

Newark Exhibitors Meet

Special Session Held Wednesday—Difference of Opinion on Sunday Shows—Effected Permanent Organization.

AT a special session of the Essex County Motion Picture Owners' Association, held Wednesday morning, February 2, at Achtel-Stetter's, Newark, N. J., it was decided to map out a definite program on the Sunday picture question this next Sunday. The entire city will be canvassed for members, and permanent organization will be effected. The temporary organizations, as stated in last week's Moving Picture World, was formed last Sunday with about a dozen charter members.

The Wednesday morning meeting was called for the purpose of hearing the report of the committee, that visited Chief Long in regard to Sunday opening. Joseph Stern, owner of the National theater, Belmont avenue, Newark, gave the report for the committee. Mr. Stern said that Chief Long did not object to giving permits for Sunday shows, providing there was no complaint from the neighborhood, and that fifty per cent. of the net profit should be assigned to some charity designated by him. The gist of Mr. Stern's report was "let well enough alone."

There were many present at the discussion who were content with the present conditions. Mrs. Charles Webb, the only woman present, emphatically opposed opening on Sunday. Mrs. Webb is the mangeress of the Goodwin theater, Broad street, Newark.

The prevalent opinion, however, was that either all the houses should be opened, or all closed.

Newark Exhibitors Strongly Organized.

In response to urgent invitations and to the "ad" in the Moving Picture World, more than 60 per cent. of the exhibitors of Essex County, N. J., attended the meeting of the new organization which was held on Sunday, February 6, at Achtel Stetter's Restaurant on Broad street, Newark, N. J. The following new members were received into the organization: Putnam and Jacobs, Paramount theatre; H. Austerman, Playhouse; Arnold Davis, Park theater, J. Boyland, City theater; J. Crawford, Crawford theater; C. J. Straehle, Star theater, John J. Whelan, Central theater, A. J. Besson, Victoria theater; A. and B. Nussbaum, Colonial theater. The following committees were appointed: Legislative committee, Jacobs, Crawford and Putnam; Committee on By-Laws, Boyland, Lebow and Amsterdam; Local Welfare Committee, Amsterdam, Eckstein and Nussbaum.

Louis Blumenthal made an address on the just grievances of the exhibitor. His remarks were followed with close interest and were heartily applauded. The Legislative committee was authorized to take steps toward holding a State convention at Trenton in the near future. The permanent organization and election of officers resulted as follows: President, Joseph Stern; secretary, Philip Bornstein; treasurer Morris Feldman. The next meeting will be held at 11 P. M., Thursday, Feb. 10, in the Paramount theater. There will be regular meetings either once or twice a month. Announcement of date and place will be made later. A vote of thanks was given to the Moving Picture World for its consistent support of the exhibitor.

PITTSBURGH LOCAL GROWING.

The Pittsburgh local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League continues to grow by leaps and bounds, as brought out by the large and enthusiastic gathering held on Tuesday, February 1. Many new applicants for membership were enrolled, as is the case at every meeting. Secretary James Delves, who is also national secretary, states that the affairs of the Pittsburgh branch are in a flourishing condition and that its recent progress has been highly gratifying and profitable to the members. He says, furthermore, that he would like to have reports of the progress of the other locals everywhere, as it is essential that they co-operate more closely than ever in view of the big questions now involving the exhibitors large and small throughout the country.

INDIANA EXHIBITORS TO MEET.

The Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors Association will hold its first annual banquet and convention in Indianapolis at the Hotel Severin, March 3. The committee on arrangements is holding weekly meetings just now to get the program under headway.

F. J. Rembusch is chairman of the general committee. Ernest P. Hunter is secretary, Joseph H. Gavin, treasurer; Fred Sanders, in charge of entertainment and publicity; J. C. Lockwood is chairman of the reception committee; John B. Huber is arranging the ball; Bingham, Crose and Cohen have charge of the program. Hugh O'Donnell is president and general advisor. Already there is word of a number of exhibitors who will make a showing of new apparatus for the benefit of the visiting picture men.

DETROIT EXHIBITORS PROTEST.

The Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors League held a special meeting Monday, January 31, for the purpose of expressing opposition to the proposed new order of the public lighting commission to the effect that all theaters must have electric wires placed in underground conduit. Those theaters erected within the past eighteen months are so constructed and the order, if enforced, would effect particularly the smaller houses built previous to that time, putting them to considerable expense. The Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors League believe such an order is unnecessary and out of reason at this time.

NORTH CAROLINA EXHIBITORS CONVENTION CALLED.

Secretary H. B. Warner of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of North Carolina, has issued a call for a convention of exhibitors of that state to be held at Greensboro, February 13 to 15. The Guilford Hotel has been selected as headquarters and the first session will be held in the Piedmont theater at ten o'clock Monday morning. Questions affecting the trade will be considered and a full attendance is requested.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Pavlowa Acclaimed in "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

THE first presentation of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," at the Colonial, on Sunday, January 30, was viewed by a gathering of moving picture lovers that taxed the capacity of the "theater beautiful" to the utmost. The night was one of the most forbidding of the winter season, as the cold spell had been succeeded by a thaw and the heavy drizzling rain was swept with such penetrating effect as to make umbrellas useless and hermetically closed autos and taxis the only refuge from the storm. But the turnout was a magnificent triumph over all the discomforts, and President Carl Laemmle, who has so much at stake in the great spectacle, had a face that was wreathed in smiles. The talented artiste, Pavlowa, who had succeeded in canceling her operatic engagement at Cleveland for the night, was present in one of the boxes, modest and retiring, and not all the spirited ovations that were extended to her personally could move her to appear on the stage to acknowledge them. She was content to rise in her seat and bow profoundly on several occasions, preferring to let the screen tell its story and the spectators judge her by her artistry before the camera.

This is not a review of the subject, but it is only fitting that the renowned artiste who has fixed a new standard in terpsichorean art should be acclaimed for the success of her first essay before the camera. One is surprised that she succeeds so well in her first attempt as an actress on any stage. The death scene, in which Fenella receives a mortal wound at the hands of her beloved brother, is most affecting and well acted. Another is that where, in her pure maiden simplicity, she succumbs to the wiles of the courtly Alphonso and becomes the cornerstone of the revolution that follows.

In the screened views of the revolutionary mob that attacks the ducal palace we are given a series of the most stirring and awe-inspiring spectacles yet taken by the camera. True, captious criticism may find fault—and with reason—with the too-prolonged run of the mob's violence; but the terrifying atmosphere carries its lesson just the same, and we are taught that the frenzy of a people justly aroused is one of the most fearful forces that can be called into being, that of the earthquake and of the whirlwind not excepted.

With more easily read announcements and a careful pruning of redundant action, this most imposing—and, in many respects, artistic—spectacle will be considerably benefited.

I nearly overlooked to give due credit for a praiseworthy innovation in the leading announcements in this subject. The spectator will notice in an inclosed space at the top of these announcements a flashing picture of an object (or objects) which indicates the main feature of the action in the pictures immediately following. This is really startling in its significance, for it gives the first promise I have ever had brought to my notice of a substitute for typed or written announcements, one that is in complete harmony with moving pictorial art. What a boon and triumph it will be to and for the moving picture if the future will reveal a way to make intelligible the dark places in a screen drama by means of these flash pictures, or something akin to them!

Captain Boening Should Be Elected Alderman for the Twenty-eighth Ward.

Exhibitors in the Twenty-eighth Ward of this city have it in their power to elect Captain Louis A. Boening for Alderman in the coming election. Captain Boening has been connected with the moving picture business in various capacities for a long time, and he is well posted on the opposition in this city to the business by overzealous reformers. It is a good thing to have a friend at court in cases of emergency, and it will be wise to use all justifiable means to elect Captain Boening.

February 29 is primary day, and the election will be held April 4.

On January 27 the following resolutions, favoring the nomination and election of Captain Boening, were drawn up and signed by R. R. Nehls, Richard C. Travers, Wm. J. Sweeney, Watterson R. Rothacker and George Berg, all officials of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago:

WHEREAS, It has come to the notice of the members of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago that several reform or uplift societies are endeavoring to have laws passed which, if put into operation, will seriously interfere not only with the motion picture manufacturers and film exchanges, but with the motion picture theaters of the city of Chicago. These laws if passed will make it almost impossible for an exhibitor to conduct his business at a profit

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, That the board of governors of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, in executive session, do hereby unanimously indorse the candidacy of Captain Louis A. Boening as Republican candidate for Alderman of the Twenty-eighth Ward.

Our great trouble has been that we have had no one to represent the motion picture interests in the City Council, who is thoroughly familiar with all of the requirements of the motion picture industry, and we earnestly request that all theater owners and managers who are operating within the jurisdiction of the Twenty-eighth Ward assist and cooperate in every way possible toward the election of Captain Boening, as we need him in the next City Council.

Kindly assist him by allowing his slides and motion picture films to be operated in your theaters free of charge, as the time has come for us to put a stop to the practice of unqualified officenoiders from using our motion picture business as a football to be kicked around at their pleasure. With a man like Captain Boening in the City Council, we can be assured of intelligent action on the censorship question.

Thrilling Story of Difficulties Encountered in Securing Views for the Selig-Tribune.

The Selig Polyscope Company has just received a letter from E. B. Lockwood, one of the cameramen on the staff of the Selig-Tribune, describing his thrilling experience in getting views of the train wreck on the Great Northern Railroad near Corea, Washington, which was caused by a snowslide. Four lives were lost and three passenger coaches were wrecked by the avalanche. Exclusive pictures of the catastrophe were taken by Mr. Lockwood and will appear in No. 11 of the Selig-Tribune, released February 7. The railroad authorities were opposed to the filming of the scene of the wreck and herded five cameramen in a coach, taking exceptional care that this coach was kept far away from the scene. Mr. Lockwood, however, was wise from previous experiences and contrived to get on the spot. How he did it is told best in his own language.

"I had an idea that the cameramen would not be welcomed with open arms, and when our train reached Skykomish I quietly dropped off the train and cached my camera," writes Mr. Lockwood. "I then went to the hotel and posed as a timber cruiser. There I became acquainted with a poolroom proprietor and through his assistance and that of a Seattle newspaperman I was able to get a guide and two packers.

"Knowing that we would not be allowed to reach the scene of the wreck over the right-of-way, we took the trail overland, leaving Skykomish at four o'clock in the morning. We had only three pairs of snowshoes, and as I was the lightest and carried only the grub I did without them. The snow was about eight feet deep on the level and we expected to make the eleven miles to Scenic, Wash., by three o'clock Monday afternoon. As a matter of fact, we did not reach Scenic until six o'clock, and our grub was all gone. At one place near Scenic we crossed a big slide, and it took us just forty-five minutes to make seventy-five feet.

"Reaching Scenic, I again posed as a lumber cruiser and was able to deceive the railway officials and the detectives who were in the hotel there to prevent cameramen from getting pictures. Tuesday morning we left early for the scene of the wreck, and on the way I struck a bad spot and was carried 250 feet down the mountain before I was able to grab a sapling and stop my progress. Later I fell into a hole in the honeycombed snow and was rescued by the packers.

"We reached the scene of the accident at one o'clock Tuesday afternoon, and I made my first set-up 300 yards from the scene of the accident. Between this point and 200 feet of the wreck I made four pictures, and each time it was necessary to knock down, pack, carry and then set up the machine. The last picture was made about 200 feet from the wreck and just off the right-of-way.

"I am now feeling the effects of my trip. When I slid down the mountains, my leggings were ripped off and the skin was stripped from my legs from the knee to the ankle; but at that I was fortunate, as I secured about 280 feet of film. My belongings are scattered from here to the Coast, my overcoat being at Scenic and my grip at Skykomish, so I have been recuperating in Spokane."

Pacific Coast newspapers describe the fate of the other moving picture cameramen, who were placed in a coach near Skykomish and sent back, being denied the right to walk on the company's property. In view of the fact that the railroad was flanked on one side by a high precipice and on the other by a deep chasm, the cameramen succumbed gracefully and returned to the Coast.

Mme. Marguerite Beriza, the Chicago grand opera soprano who recently joined the Selig forces as a star, has presented the manuscript of a book which details some very interesting incidents in her life to the Selig Polyscope Company. Among these is a story of her husband, Andre Bacque, to whom she was married in France four years ago. "He is not only a great actor but also a talented painter," says Mme. Beriza in her work, "and his productions are bought at Paris by the most critical art lovers. * * * He was honored recently by the French government by the purchase of one of his paintings. Since the beginning of hostilities in Europe, nineteen months ago, he has been in the trenches of France, contributing all the relief in his power to the wounded soldiers."

It is with great regret and sorrow that I announce the sudden death of Nathaniel F. Sawyer, vice-president of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, this city. It was only a few days ago that I paid a visit to the plant of the company on West Erie street, and was conducted throughout it by Mr. Sawyer. He was an enthusiast in his work and thorough in everything. The installment of the machinery had been made under his supervision, and I could not help noticing that he was up to date in every particular. He spoke with high hopes of the opening of the company's new plant at Diversey Parkway, Ward street and Southport avenue, this city, and was already arranging for the transfer of the machinery and its installation there. Mr. Sawyer died on Tuesday morning, February 1. He had complained a little of indisposition on the Saturday previous, but had thought nothing of it. A post-mortem examination showed that death was primarily due to appendicitis, the appendix having suffered rupture shortly before his death, which resulted in peritonitis. Mr. Sawyer was a young man, not yet in the prime of life, which makes his sudden taking off all the more deplorable. He had been vice-president of the company for the past two years, since its last incorporation. The funeral took place Friday morning, February 4, and his remains were laid at rest in Graceland Cemetery.

About four or five thousand feet of negative has been received by the Selig Polyscope Company from the battlefields in Poland. These films are said to show the true war conditions in that unfortunate country. They will be in readiness for release in about two weeks, I am told. The films present almost every aspect of war's devastation. The starving population, largely composed of grief-stricken women and little children; the marching columns of soldiers, and scenes along the lines of battle are vividly pictured. The leaders of Polish societies in the United States, who are working to alleviate the suffering among their helpless countrymen and women in Poland, are taking great interest in these war films.

At the special meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, in their clubrooms at 17 North Wabash avenue, on Wednesday, February 2, the discussion of plans for the year was limited by the fact that the election of officers will take place in March. The members fixed Wednesday, February 16, as the date of their annual beefsteak dinner.

Charlie Chaplin made a short stopover in the city Friday, February 4, on his way from the Pacific Coast, and then left for New York City to join his brother, Syd. When questioned about his future plans, he replied, "To sign up with the film company offering me the most money, unless my brother Syd and I free lance."

It appears that on the last day of the run of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Colonial theater, the Appellate Court handed down an opinion dismissing an appeal taken by the city from an interlocutory decree in the Superior Court, enjoining it from interfering with the exhibition. The city failed to perfect its appeal to the upper court within the period prescribed by statute. It will be remembered that on June 5, last year, Superior Court Judge William Fenimore Cooper granted a petition for an injunction restraining the city from interfering with its exhibition, after which the city took an appeal to the Appellate Court.

A novel use of the moving picture has been made by J. H. Harlow, of this city, who has been engaged since May 9, 1915, in showing the work of tearing down a fourteen-story building on State street and the erection of a nineteen-story structure on the same site. The film is in two reels and required 32,000 exposures in its making, daily exposures being made to show the progress of the work. The last snap was taken on Sunday, January 30. The film bears the title, "Magic, or the Busiest Corner of the Loop."

Out in Evanston the new moving picture censor board is having troubles of its own. The board has thus far taken in $215.90 in fees, while the city has been obliged to pay $482.25 for the censorship of films. It is now intended to increase the inspection fee from 30 to 50 cents, and the moving picture theater managers have come back with the announcement that at least a nickel more for theater tickets will be charged.

E. C. Divine, president of the Strand Theater Company, this city, announces that, beginning Sunday, February 27, Mutual Masterpictures will be used in the Strand theater here and at the Strand, Indianapolis, instead of Paramount programs. John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, arrived in the city Wednesday, February 2, and completed arrangements with Mr. Divine.

The Studebaker will supplant the Triangle program by a Paramount, beginning Monday, February 28. An orchestra of 25 pieces has been engaged to interpret the pictures. Soloists of prominence will also appear during the intermissions. The prices will be: afternoons, 25 cents; nights, 25 and 50 cents.

The La Salle theater, beginning Saturday, February 12, will offer Paramount programs. The opening feature will be Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina."

On Sunday, February 27, Triangle programs will hold the screen at the Colonial and will continue for an indefinite period. S. L. Rothapfel, the Belasco of moving picture presentations, will be in the city one week before that date, and will remain for four weeks, supervising the presentations in his own inimitable way.

W. E. Weinshenker, who has acted as special representative for the General Feature Film Company, this city, for the past three years, has resigned his position to accept that of special traveling adjuster for the Metro Pictures, Inc., working out of the Chicago office, under Harry Weiss. Mr. Weinshenker has a wide acquaintance with exhibitors throughout middle western territory. Previous to his connection with the General Feature Film Company, he was engaged in the exhibiting end of the business, acting as manager for the Ideal theater, this city.

Alfred Hamburger recently completed negotiations with Metro to present one of their features each week at the Ziegfeld theater. The first feature will be "Man and His Soul," in which Francis X. Bushman and Miss Beverly Bayne are featured. The second will be "The Upstart," featuring Marguerite Snow, supported by George Le Guere, James Lackaye and other prominent players.

Aaron A. Jones, one of the biggest heavyweights in the exhibiting end of the moving picture business, is out for the Republican nomination for Alderman in the Sixth Ward. I hope he will get the nomination and win out in the election on April 4. Exhibitors in the Sixth Ward can do a great deal in securing the nomination and election of Mr. Jones. They should get busy right away, as nomination day is February 29.

FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS ON CENSOR BOARD QUESTION.

Opposing Councilmen Agree to Vote for New Ordinance Providing That Proposed Film Commissioner Is Given Power to Overrule National Board.

As stated in these columns last week Los Angeles has decided to abolish the local board of censors and appoint a film commissioner. The ordinance to be drafted on this matter was opposed by some of the councilmen but principally President Betkouski and Councilman Wheeler. The chief opponents have now agreed to vote in favor of the ordinance providing that certain changes are made in the drafting of the same.

As a result of this, the Public Welfare Committee has decided to amend its recent report favoring the abolishment of the motion picture censors, and the creation of a single commissioner to enforce the rulings of the National Board of Censors, and will recommend a new plan.

Under the new plan the film commissioner will have the authority to overrule the National Board of Censors' rulings on films, but in general will be guided by the action of that board. He will also have power to approve a film produced here or elsewhere that had not been passed on by the national board.

In case of doubt or dispute the commissioner will be authorized to call on the council and the police commission as an advisory board. This authority to overrule the national board's rulings will give the moving picture commissioner the power to reject any film that for special reasons is objectionable here, but which the national board might approve.

The commissioner is to be appointed by the Mayor, subject to civil service rules, and is to receive a salary fixed by the council.

By these changes the chief objections of several members of the Council will be met. One of these objections has been that any proposal to make the National Board of Censors supreme will be to delegate Los Angeles police powers to an outside body. The other objection to the first proposal of the committee, it is stated, was that if only pictures passed upon by the national board should be permitted in Los Angeles this might amount to recognition of any combination of motion-picture producers that perhaps would control the national board. This complaint will be eliminated by a provision which says the local commissioner may pass upon and permit the showing of film not submitted to the national board.

The ordinance will be drafted along these lines and submitted to the council some time this week.

There is also a possibility that the controversy over the proposition to abolish the board of moving picture censors may be put up to a vote of the people at the special election to be held next June.

Mayor Sebastian has expressed the opinion that this matter is of so much importance and one upon which there is such a wide difference of opinion that it would be well for the council to obtain an expression from the people themselves before taking action.

MUNICIPAL MOVING PICTURE THEATERS FOR LOS ANGELES.

Mayor Sebastian Proposes Free Film Shows for Children of the Poor—Says It Would Solve Juvenile Problem of the City.

Free municipal moving pictures for the boys and girls of Los Angeles, who are so situated that they cannot enjoy motion pictures under proper guardianship, was suggested by Mayor Sebastian this week. The suggestion was made to a committee of teachers in the public schools, who called on the Mayor to ask his advice, as to methods for exerting a beneficial influence on the children of the city. The Mayor said with reference to the moving picture problem that he believes that a free motion picture theater for children, who are unable to pay their way to procure the amusement and instruction they crave, will go a long ways towards solving the juvenile problems of Los Angeles.

The Mayor's plan, as outlined to the teachers, is to provide moving picture entertainments regularly in various districts of the city where the children may be entertained under chaperonage and guardianship of the city, instead of being allowed the freedom from restraint which often leads to mischief or worse.

"Don't call upon or expect the police to look after the boys and girls any more than is absolutely necessary, but see that the parents are made to assume proper responsibility for the conduct of their children," was the advice given by Mayor Sebastian to the delegation of teachers.

The Mayor said he believes the proper enforcement of the curfew law is dependent upon getting more patrolmen for the residential districts, but that police regulations should not be depended upon so much as home influences. Children, the Mayor said, should be accompanied by parents or responsible guardians when attending picture shows.

RAILWAYS BAR FILMS.

Order Issued by Railroad and Steamship Lines That Films Shall Not Be Carried as Ordinary Baggage.

War between Los Angeles motion picture interests and the railroads become imminent this week when an order was issued by the railroads and steamship lines that films shall not be carried in passenger steamers and trains as ordinary baggage.

The order also prohibited the shipment of films in baggage cars.

The railroads claim that the films are liable to explode and point out a recent accident in Chicago where thirty-eight passengers were burned.

Motion picture men declare the order to be nothing less than a move to benefit the express companies, as under the new order they will be the only concerns qualified to handle the shipment of films.

The Western Pacific, Southern Pacific, Northwestern Pacific, Salt Lake and Santa Fe roads have announced that the order will go into effect at once.

INCE TO START SCHOOL.

But Not for Acting—He Will Instruct and Elevate the Indians Used in Ince Pictures.

The tribe of Redskins employed at the canyon studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation are to be polished and refined, by being sent to a new school at Inceville, according to what Mr. Ince told us the other day.

The initial step toward this plan was taken immediately following Ince's decision, when a corps of men was put to work erecting a two-story building adjacent to the tepees on one of Inceville's hills where the Indians live. This will be used as the instruction hall and will be divided into various departments after the manner of the modern school.

Already the task of grading the redskins has begun. This is being done by W. A. Brooks, showman and student of the West, who is now with the Ince forces. Under the supervision of Brooks, each Indian is being examined with a view to ascertaining just how much he or she knows of elementary subjects. Records are being kept and when the "school" goes into full swing the matter of assigning the aborigines to classes will then be easy.

Among the subjects to be taught the redskins will be reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, spelling, history, and grammar. A number of the Sioux already are adept in these subjects and they will begin their respective courses in the Inceville School as advanced students. The tribe boasts several Carlisle graduates among its bucks and it is not at all unlikely that these young men will be made assistant instructors after they shall have demonstrated their fitness for such positions.

In all, there are one hundred and twenty-one Indians at Inceville and seldom does any of them devote more than three or four hours a day to work before the camera.

The Indians have received the news with jubilation. Old Chief Two-Lance, the ninety-two year old warrior, who is reputed to be worth approximately a quarter million dollars in property holdings, was the first to whom the announcement was made. Brooks declares he executed a tribal dance and then hastened to spread the news to his people in the tepees.

"There is no reason in the world," Ince is quoted as saying, "why these Indians should not be given an education. We are going to provide the facilities for it and hope that in the course of two months a full fledged institution of learning will have begun activities. We don't expect to teach the Indians philosophy and economics, but we do intend to instill into their minds the rudiments of the elementary subjects. Their minds are susceptible to development along these lines and we are going to do our best to bring about the development."

STATIC CLUB BALL.

Los Angeles Cameramen Entertain With Notable Affair—Thomas H. Ince and Anna Held Lead Grand March—Many Stars and Players Present.

The third annual ball of the Static Club of America was held in the beautifully decorated Rutherford Hall on the evening of Friday, January 28, with several hundred moving picture people present. The Static men are to be complimented upon their ability to make a good time for everyone and at the same time engineer the event. The affair was even better than former ones, and the officers and committees deserve much credit.

President Edward G. Uhlman was on duty every minute, greeting the many visitors, superintending the floor and looking after the whole business. He was no busier, however, than Secretary Charles G. Rosher, who flitted about with his big reception committee which was composed of E. G. Uhlman, Harris N. Ensign, Albert E. Cawood, Ira H. Morgan, James A. Crosby and W. F. Alder. The ball committee was made up of Ralph Morello, who was executive director before and during the function; Charles G. Rosher, Harry Gersted, and Harry McGuire. S. S. Norton, treasurer, and William J. Piltz, vice president, were also on the floor. On the committee which ran the dance were J. D. Jennings, George W. Hill, E. J. Vallejo and Fred L. Granville, R. D. Armstrong and K. G. McLean. The man who used his voice to good advantage and who patched up the little things that went wrong, and who was the buff between committee and guests, was the knightly H. L. "Buck" Massie, erstwhile traveler, and who is well known at the Universal studios as the host.

The grand march, with Miss Anna Held and Thomas H. Ince, as leaders, was a line of gorgeous color and finery. The officials of the club participated, as did members of the committees and their ladies. The line was made up of many prominent directors, stars, players and guests of the Statics. Among those who marched were Ella Hall and Daddy Manley, Herbert Rawlinson and Caroline Arnold, Victoria Forde and Tom Mix, Glen Cavender and Mrs. Cavender, Wheeler Oakman and Mrs. Oakman, P.D., and Mrs. Gold, John M. Nickolous and Mrs. Nickolous, Sesseue Hayakawa and Miss Tsura Aoki, Edna Maison and Beverly Griffith, Harold Lloyd and Beebe Daniels, Mabel Condon and Clem Pope, Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, Charles Parrott, Gus Inglis, Gene Lowery, Ray Gallagher, Allen Davey, Rhea Haines, Billie Rhodes, Raymond B. West, Jerry Jerrard and Fred Leroy Granville.

UNIQUE STAGE LIGHTING.

Live Wire Exhibitor Uses Auto Lights When Storm Wrecks Electric Wires.

Mr. H. G. Hyde, manager of the Rink theater in Lindsay, Cal., used a novel system for retaining his house at the same time giving the audience an evening performance, instead of pictures, when the lights went out, caused by the heavy storm last week.

Mr. Hyde ran his automobile into the theater and lit the stage by means of the powerful electric lights of the car. It happened that C. E. Hudson was billed to appear along with the program to do some legitimate entertaining. The manager naturally had to give the show, so he impressed the veteran actor into some character impersonations and the show went on, while the rest of the town was in darkness.

HORKHEIMER LANDS STAR.

Balboa to Feature Lois Meredith.

The petite and girlish Lois Meredith is the latest addition to the galaxy of stars at the Horkheimer beach studio. Upon her arrival at the busy studio she started work on a five reeler under the direction of Harry Harvey.

During the past half year, Miss Meredith has filled a number of screen engagements and now President Horkheimer has a number of specially written feature plays built to her requirements. Lois Meredith is young, pretty, vivacious and an actress naturally endowed.

Third Annual Ball of the Static Club of America, at Los Angeles, January 28, 1916.

How H. M. Horkheimer happened to engage Miss Meredith is a bit out of the ordinary. He saw her in a screen production in which the part she played did not show her to an advantage. But she made such an impression that he arranged for an interview.

Her winsome personality and bright manner impressed the producer as having wonderful possibiltiies, particularly in view of the girl's notable stage career. Miss Meredith is one of the youngest stars, in fact so young that her mother must sign her contracts to make them legal.

When she decided to go on the stage, Miss Meredith obtained a hearing from H. W. Savage and was immediately cast for the part of "Modesty" in the original production of "Everywoman." Next she followed Laurette Taylor in "Peg o' My Heart." Later she was selected for the New York opening of "Help Wanted" to do the feminine lead. In theatrical vernacular, she "got over big" in all three of these parts. For a girl not yet of age, this is certainly a record.

RAOUL WALSH BACK TO COAST.

Former Griffith Director, and Present Feature Producer for Fox Arrives in Los Angeles to Make Pictures.

Manager Robinson of the local Fox exchange met R. A. Walsh at the depot in the rain last Friday morning upon his arrival from New York. Mr. Walsh is to direct some big pictures here with Theda Bara and an all-star cast. While waiting for the rest of his company Mr. Walsh is putting on a true Western picture. He and Mr. Robinson and Mr. Walsh's cameraman were busy discussing plans and locations for this picture when the World man visited the studio this week.

After doing the Western picture he will make a monster feature production using many people and going miles for locations. Walsh is accompanied by his brother, George, his cameraman, George Benoit, and James Marcus, who was seen in many of the releases. Mr. Walsh is the producer who made the Fox version of "Carmen," the "Regeneration," and "The Serpent," Miss Bara's latest success.

PREPAREDNESS AT LASKY'S.

Here is something that ought to come before the War Department. According to the father of Pete Props of the Paramount studio, the Jesse L. Lasky Yachting and Rowing Association has proven such a success during the recent rains that the members are now seriously considering organizing a Naval Reserve, and are having the property department build a couple of battleships and submarines to serve as an auxiliary fleet to the more or less well known United States Navy. The command of a vessel will be given each of the directors and the manoeuvers will commence as soon as stage room is available. During the present downpour the stage has been used exclusively for swimming and fancy diving contests. It was planned to hold the manoeuvers in the lot, but the Admiral decided it was not advisable for the fleet to cruise so far away from its base as without competent pilots the vessels are liable to strike a submerged and unchartered set.

All songs pertaining to "Sunny Southern California" have been barred from the Lasky dressing rooms.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Criticism of a motion picture play was one of the subjects given the pupils of a Los Angeles High School class, last week. Some twenty of our future citizens went to Tally's Broadway and reviewed "The Beloved Vagabond," with the result that young Miss Dorothy Kerr was given the highest mark of the class on her composition. C. Percival Garrett, the organist, was highly edified at the following "boost":

"The man that plays the organ at Tally's is an entertainment in himself and is well worth listening to, especially on a rainy afternoon."

The moving picture as an advertising medium has proved its efficiency to Manager Chester W. Kelley of the Manx hotel, San Francisco. It seems that upwards of one year ago Director Robert Leonard of the Universal Film company came to San Francisco for the purpose of taking scenes for the "Master Key," a four-reel Universal feature. Leonard and his crowd stopped at the Manx, and several hotel scenes required in the production were staged in the lobby of the hotel.

The picture has since been released throughout the United States with the result that a number of former patrons of the Manx have recognized the lobby and Manager Kelley, who was filmed several times during the process of securing scenes. Several communications to this effect from various sections of the country have been received by the management.

Kelley says he believes the moving picture to be an excellent publicity medium.

A fair imitation of the European war broke out in a San Pedro picture theater this week, when fifty or more Italians and Austrians in the audience attempted to emulate the fierceness with which their countrymen were fighting on the screen.

The film first showed Italian soldiers gallantly at war on the Italian-Austrian front. The patriotism of the sons of Italy in the audience was aroused and they applauded so vigorously that the Austrians present took umbrage.

Then followed a battle royal in which the Italians, who were in the majority, forced the Austrians to retreat.

But the Austrians retreated only to gather reinforcements. That accomplished, they returned to the theater. The previous "battle" was nothing to what followed. The glass front of the theater was broken before the police arrived and dispersed the "armies," while the Acting Desk Sergeant stopped the further showing of the film.

No arrests were made and no serious injury was reported.

Recognizing the possibilities of motion pictures as a means of spreading propaganda, the Morals Feature Film Corporation has been organized with headquarters in Los Angeles. W. A. Hoesgens is president and general manager and F. W. Emerson, national committeeman of the Prohibition party of California, is vice-president.

While the active organization is not yet complete, it has been definitely decided to immediately produce a twelve-reel feature, "The Beast," for use in Prohibition campaigns throughout the country, and to follow this up with other features of a moral uplift nature, not necessarily confined to Prohibition propaganda.

Contracts, it is stated, have been signed by a number of prominent film artists to appear in "The Beast," which will be released in May.

For the making of this photoplay one of the studios already established will be leased; but it is the intention of the new company to build its own plant and produce pictures on a large scale.

De Wolf Hopper, ever a story teller (not what you think I mean—real stories) put over a good one the other evening in showing how busy he is acting before the camera.

"I am as busy," he smiled, "as the young man in Washington who hung up his shingle as 'attorney-at-law' and had not yet been overwhelmed with clients. A friend, entering the office one day, observed on the desk a cheap alarm clock.

"Taking it home, eh?" he observed. "Good thing at this time of the year. Everyone is liable to oversleep these mornings."

The lawyer smiled. "I have not purchased that clock for the reason you mentioned. I keep it here to wake me when it's time to go home."

Owing to the set-backs and delays caused by Southern California's recent attack of "unusual" bad weather, the Rolin Film Company has practically completed arrangements for the building of a glass studio measuring eighty by one hundred and twenty feet. Final arrangements are pending decision of the company as to the proper style of electric lights to be installed for night work, and assisting the natural light on dull days.

When it rained the roads went into the surging waters and Cecil B. DeMille, the Lasky director general, at the completion of the picturization of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," who hied himself to his ranch in the southern part of the State, has been there ever since. Owing to the washed out condition of the roads he has been unable to return.

As father used to say:

"Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise." If that is so William Duncan, leading man with the Hollywood Vitagraph forces, is a very strong man physically and morally too, for that matter. He dearly loves a joke and while the company stayed for refreshments in one of the small towns on the way home from Bear Valley, he stopped at the blacksmith's shop and quietly raised a one hundred and eighty pound anvil. He then deliberately yawned and turned away. Soon after he saw several men go to the anvil and one after another try to lift it without success. As his auto left he looked around and the men were still gazing after him wondering who the dickens he was. Bill must go to bed early alright.

Director Billy Cabanne, while filming snow scenes in and around Truckee, California, for use in Lillian Gish's latest Triangle play, "Marja of the Steppe," by W. E. Wing, and his company encountered a terrific snow storm that continued for three consecutive days. Cabanne took advantage of the storm and secured some very picturesque snow scenes. From reports the snow was twenty-two feet deep in spots, and the weather was 12 below zero.

Included in the party who journeyed with Cabanne to Truckee were Lillian Gish and her mother, Mrs. W. C. Cabanne, Walter Long, W. E. Lowery, Cameraman Billy Filden, and a staff of stage carpenters and property boys.

Miss Gish thoroughly enjoyed the trip, it being the first time she had seen snow for three years, since leaving New York.

Raoul Walsh, Fox's big director, who arrived here this week, says he is certainly glad to be back in the West again.

This week at the new Hollywood Vitagraph studio when Nell Shipman was introduced to the man who was to play the part of her father in the Blue Ribbon feature, "God's Country and the Woman," she incidentally met, for the second time in her life, the man who is her god-father. Her first meeting with William Bainbridge was in Victoria, B. C., on that occasion when the baptismal waters were poured upon the head of the baby Nell, and Mr. Bainbridge thereupon undertook the honor and responsibility of being her god-father. And it was a mutual pleasure and a unique circumstance, the bringing of William Bainbridge and Nell Shipman together in the roles of father and daughter in the Curwood drama of the frozen north.

The other day, while visiting the Biograph studio, we overheard a little conversation which illustrates the word "coincidence" better than a dictionary. It is an odd little incident and is worth repeating.

A visitor from the American studio at Santa Barbara was greeted by Albert Russell of the Biograph Company with the inquiry, relative to his brother, William F. Russell.

"Did you see Bill up there?"

"Yes," replied the visitor, "he's got a new car."

"He has?" exclaimed Albert in surprise, and added, "so have I. When did he get his?"

"Yesterday."

"Huh! So did I. What kind?"

"Purgeot."

"So is mine!" came the weak response from Albert, with a limp gesture toward the speaker's newly acquired car.

For the exhibitor life is just one * * * thing after another. Now Japanese of this city have filed a protest against showing Lasky's "The Cheat" with the city council, but sentiment of the public welfare committee is that the council can no nothing, as the film has been passed by the National Board of Censors.

Japanese associations in San Bernardino, Riverside, Santa Monica and other surrounding cities have vigorously protested against this picture play, declaring that the film scene of a Japanese branding an American woman on the back with a branding iron would embitter the American people against Japan.

No action has been taken by the local boards in the cities mentioned.

CHARLES CHAPLIN IN NEW YORK.

The comedian came east to take up business matters and to consult his brother and business confidant, Sid Chaplin, formerly of the Keystone.

Does the Picture Appeal?

Director Taylor Says the Critics Should Answer That Question First.

THAT many of the so-called failures in motion pictures which do not meet the demand from exhibitors which their producers expected, are due to lack of proper care and skill in handling lighting effects, is the opinion of Director S. E. V. Taylor, who is now completing his second picture for the Equitable programme. And he goes further than that in asserting that the stock descriptions in publications pretending to be edited by "experts" fail lamentably in not paying due attention to that very important part of the finished picture.

"Lighting Good," "Lighting only Fair," "Lighting Poor," Mr. Taylor says, convey no information except to the technical reader, and he knows how widely views may vary. His contention is that in a motion picture which appeals to the eye first of all, the way that appeal is presented is fully as important and deserving of as much attention from the critics as any other feature of the production.

"The best efforts of the actors and actresses," he says, "are often and easily nullified by a slight defect or oversight in the proper use of lights. The cameraman may do his best, the artists give all that is in them, the settings be all that they should be, and when the picture turns out to be only mediocre in its drawing power, even though it carry a vital story, the critic will say 'Lighting Poor,' and let it go at that, without either showing wherein the lighting was faulty, or pointing out where it was good. The average critic knows what he likes when he sees a picture, but when it comes to explaining why he likes or dislikes it, that is another story, and the effects of the laws of optics, and the refraction, reflection and diffusion of light, are generally far beyond his ken."

Mr. Taylor won his spurs under David Wark Griffith, and the points he makes seem to be up to the critics to answer. His work in "Her Great Hour," in which Molly McIntyre and others did some exciting business under peculiar light conditions, is cited as an example of what he is driving at, for what everyone else considered a vital point the critics passed over in silence.

Grace Cunard

"I HAVE just one wish," says Grace Cunard, actress-director of the 101 Bison Universal, "and that is that the days were forty hours long, instead of twenty-four. I've pretty nearly succeeded in learning to do without sleep, but even if I stayed up all night long, I should not find time for all that I want to accomplish. You see, I write almost every scenario which is used by Mr. Ford and myself. I play the feminine lead in some of them, and I direct some of them besides!

Grace Cunard.

"Then, I am a great believer in the importance of costuming on the screen, and I spend hours planning and choosing my gowns and trying them on. Besides that, I am a perfect devotee of motoring, and simply must take time for a spin in my Lozier car. No speed is great enough to please me, and I have been severely reprimanded several times already!"

Miss Cunard is a fearless creature, and has taken so many risks in her work that she has been forced several times to succumb to an injury and take some time off in the hospital. She was born in Paris, France, and educated in Columbus, Ohio. She went on the stage at the age of thirteen, in stock, and was starred in 1910 in "College Days." Four years ago she joined the Biograph and since then has played with the Lubin, Republic and Kay Bee companies, finally ending up with the Universal, where her many admirers hope that she will stay for many, many years to come.

Annulment of Service Legal

Texas Supreme Court Says It May Be Done to Enforce Payment of Rental for Pictures.

THE legal right of a local exchange to enforce payment of rentals on contract by annulment of service is established by decision in favor of the Mutual Film Corporation just handed down by the Court of Civil Appeals, of the Second Supreme Judicial Court of Texas, Ft. Worth. Litigation was begun September 5, 1914, when Morris & Daniel brought suit against the Mutual Film Corporation of Texas for $10,600 in the District Court of Taylor County, Texas.

Morris & Daniel conducted a theater at Abileno, Texas. They had a contract with the Mutual Film Corporation for service. The Mutual defended on the ground that Morris & Daniel left C. O. D. shipments in express offices and that after having become delinquent in payment, service was cut off. Further, it was charged by the Mutual that payment was stopped on checks sent in remittance by Morris & Daniel.

In a suit, the exhibitors set up the claim that they had contracted for service from the Mutual to them so long as the theater and the Mutual Film Corporation remained in existence. Mutual responded by a plea that the contract was unilateral and lacked mutuality. On this showing, the case was dismissed. A series of amended complaints was filed by Morris & Daniel and at last in a trial before a jury, they received a verdict for $1,500. The Mutual fought the case and through appeal won the victory of the Ft. Worth decision. This will have an important bearing on film rental and collections in the state of Texas.

Henry King With Knickerbocker

HENRY KING, who starred a hit in the "Who Pays" series, also made himself well liked in "Should a Woman Forgive," and many other big dramas, will be seen in the coming release of the Knickerbocker Star Features, "The Big Brother," a three-part feature, uniting Virginia with a distant Island Kingdom in the Pacific.

Mr. King is a screen star who is making a careful, conscientious study of his work, and with each release, it is seen that he is a little higher up in his art. Besides being a finished actor, Henry King is a capable director, having put on a number of big dramas.

Mr. King is a Southerner, he works with his company, and because of his tact and considerate treatment of his fellow actors, he has been fittingly dubbed, "the gentleman."

Henry King.

In "The Big Brother," Mr. King does some excellent work, which will readily take its place in the front ranks of the General Film Company's releases for the coming week. "The Big Brother" will be released February 11.

Spiegel to Install Service Department

New General Manager of World Film Corporation Plans to Introduce New Ideas in Film Business.

IN a short talk amplifying the statement printed in last week's Moving Picture World, as to the changes in management of the World Film Corporation, Arthur H. Spiegel, the new general manager of the Forty-sixth street concern, intimated that he was not at the moment anxious to add to what had been printed. He said he preferred to work out the plans he had in mind and let the exhibitors and the public judge for themselves. He had no doubt the plans would be made good. He said he had not given up his interests in Chicago, where he is president and general manager of the Spiegel May Stern Company. His organization in that city, he said, was so well perfected he intended to devote but a couple of days each month to matters there.

Mr. Spiegel said he would continue as president and general manager of the Equitable and that the identities of that company and the World Film would be preserved in so far as the producing brands were concerned. He added that the executive offices of the two probably would be consolidated on one floor, not as a measure of economy primarily, but in order to increase efficiency and convenience. It was possible the accounting department might be removed to the first floor, where the shipping room now is. Harry Drum will be assistant general manager, Felix Feist sales manager, Harry Reichbach publicity manager and John Goldfrap advertising manager. Producing and releasing arrangements would be continued practically without change. Each company would have one release each week.

It was brought out in the conversation that one of the innovations would be a service department, on which the officers of the company were strongly banking. Mr. Spiegel was inclined to be reserved as to details, saying that while the plan was thoroughly worked out the executive of the department had not as yet been chosen. It was intimated the annual appropriation for this special service would run to six figures.

When Mr. Spiegel was asked in regard to the status of Lewis J. Selznick he said the former general manager of the World Film Corporation was still a director and member of the executive committee. Asked as to how the formation of the new company of Mr. Selznick in which Clara Kimball Young would be starred, would affect the World Film, Mr. Spiegel said she was under contract with the World Film until August 31 next, and that he expected for the company a goodly number of subjects in which Mrs. Young is featured before the expiration of the agreement.

Paramount Pictographs

Latest Thing in Pictures Is Modeled Along Lines of Popular Magazine—First Issue a Success.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS are not intended to invade the province of news weeklies, any more than newspapers are intended to cover the field of magazines. The daily prints report events as they happen; the weekly and monthly publications, at least the more significant of them, discuss the social problems arising out of these events and act as a guide to public opinion. Such is the function of Pictographs, designed to reflect the big movements of the day as seen through the eyes of leaders of thought in all branches of politics, sociology and science. It is an excellent idea, and judging from the first issue of this novel screen publication, it is destined to be fulfilled in a most interesting fashion.

One is struck by the completeness with which the policy of a progressive, popular, yet thought-provoking magazine is carried out in the contents of this single-reel release. The contributors are men of world-wide fame, such as Frederick Palmer, Henry Reuterdahl, Hugo Munsterberg and Elmer G. Sperry, and the film is composed with a view to providing something to attract all elements in an audience, just as a magazine that goes beyond the million mark aims to reach every class of reader.

Considering the state of the public mind at present, the leading article in the first issue of Pictographs is quite properly devoted to a plea for preparedness, with pictures and text compiled by Frederick Palmer in support of the slogan: "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." In the next issue, Theodore Roosevelt will present his views on this subject. Henry Reuterdahl offers a strong plea for a large navy and Elmer G. Sperry is responsible for a clear and interesting scientific article entitled, "Putting the Gyroscope to Work."

But it remained for Professor Munsterberg to devise the most ingenious contribution to the first number, with his mental test by which he asks the spectator to decide whether or not he is blessed with a constructive imagination. Letters are thrown on the screen from which words may be made, if one is alert enough to transpose the letters in the limited time allowed. The Woman's Home Companion gives the initial installment in a department devoted to the better care of babies, and J. R. Bray supplies an effective cartoon based on the preparedness issue. Then there are some clever trick pictures calculated to please children, also a few glimpses of the latest fashions, without which no popular magazine would be complete.

Universal to do Booth Novel

Famous Prison Reform Story, by Maud Booth, "Was It Murder?" a Timely Subject—Other Adaptations.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has procured the rights to picturize Gen. Maud Ballington Booth's famous novel, "Was It Murder?" which made the Salvation Army head one of the most talked-about writers for some time. Newspapers and magazines the country over spilled column after column of comments on this great work, and its sale reached into the millions. Without a doubt this is the greatest scoop in the line of adaptation that has been scored in many a month, coming as it does right upon the prison reform period which the State of New York is now undergoing. Gen. Booth's great novel was one of the very first published dealing with prison reform, which makes it all the more important today because many of the prophesies and remarks which were made at the time by the writer have become actual facts, according to revelations made in the testimony given at the investigations conducted by the State of New York in regard to the management of the prisons and its so-called reforms. This wonderful novel will undoubtedly be done in pictures by King Baggot under the direction of Henry Otto, immediately following the filming of "The Honorable Peter Stirling." It has also been arranged by the Universal to take scenes for this picture in and around Gen. Booth's home in the Adirondacks.

But great as this scoop may be, the Universal did not stop there, but went to several of the most widely-known writers of the day and purchased their original material for early releases on the Universal program. The first of these great writers whose best works will be seen on the screen, will be Paul West, formerly editor of the New York Sunday World. His first contribution is now being done by Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby being entitled "Object—Matrimony." This is an excellent two-reel comedy, to be followed immediately by another two-reel comedy to be done by Matt Moore and Jane Gail, entitled "The Society Sherlock." Another celebrated writer of the present day whose efforts will be filmed by the Universal is Thomas Hardy, managing editor of Snappy Stories, whose first contribution, "Behind the Curtain," is now being made by Henry Otto with Alan Holubar as the star before Mr. Otto starts directing King Baggot. Seymour Galland, another well-known author, has written a fine society drama which is going to be done in a five-reel feature by the eastern studios, called "The Crucible of Life." These authors will continue to contribute to the Universal program, and some exceptionally fine pictures may be expected from them in the near future.

Among the adaptations from popular magazines, will be a story by Wallace Irwin, "Nags," which appears in the February McClure's, and Norman Duncan has contributed a story of the Labrador ice fields, "Doctor of Afternoon Arm," which is now being made by Director Bob Hill, the story of which will appear in the Ladies Home Journal simultaneously with the release of the pictures.

HOLLISWOOD HALL TO BE SEEN IN PICTURES.

Holliswood Hall, a famous restaurant familiar to Long Island motorists, will soon be shown on the picure screen in a new feature production of the Vitagraph Company. The restaurant stands on the heights above Hillside avenue, Jamaica, and its architecture and interior decorations offer splendid scene settings for motion pictures. Theodore Marston is directing the film for the Vitagraph and will stage a huge ball scene in the dance room.

"Sis Hopkins" Films Here

Kalem Announces "A Flock of Skeletons" as Initial Release in New Comedy Line on March 3d.

SIS HOPKINS is here! "A Flock of Skeletons," the first release in the new line of Kalem comedies featuring Rose Melville, creator of the famous character, is now ready for release and will probably be given its advance showing to the trade papers this week. The initial production is scheduled on the General Film program for March 3d, following which there will be a single reel release every week, taking the Friday date on the Kalem calendar.

Scene from "A Flock of Skeletons" (Kalem).

"A Flock of Skeletons," the initial release in the new line, gives a good idea of the type of work that will be found in the Sis Hopkins comedies. Sis will be seen in the familiar character that made her nationally known a decade ago on the stage. She will be the same gawky girl of the farm, with the same ludicrous pigtails, gingham apron and straw bonnet. The stories vary from exaggerated farce to the quiet comedy of character, and occasionally the quaintly lovable character of Sis is used to bring in a touch of heart interest that is quickly followed by a laugh. Each single reel release tells an entirely distinct story.

The opening scenes of "A Flock of Skeletons" finds Sis at home on the farm. The slavery life tires and she pines for the easy ways of the city. Her arrival in the metropolis isn't very auspicious, for she has Mr. Newlyrich arrested for mashing after he had considerately offered to help her with her bulky green carpet bag. The fun begins when Sis later finds herself the girl-of-all-work in the Newlyrich home. She blunders into a knowledge of the secret escapades of each member of the family and is soon the guardian of the family's skeletons. Their efforts to keep her knowledge from the other members of the household make life a whirl of excitement for Sis. Mother is a would-be song-bird, under the tutelage of a professor who is hard of hearing, daughter is in love with a matinee idol, and the sudden acquisition of wealth hasn't cured the son of the family of his love for the rolling dice. Life on the farm never appealed to Sis as this does.

Kalem believes that the excellence of the supporting cast in the Sis Hopkins Comedies will prove a more than welcome surprise to film followers. Frank Minzey, who played the principal male role in the play "Sis Hopkins" since its first stage presentation, has been secured by Kalem, and will make his screen debut in these subjects. Arthur Albertson, who secured popularity in Kalem multiple reel offerings during the past year, is another member of the company, as is Richard Purdon, the Kalem "Daddy." Olive West and Henry Murdock are two players drafted from the stage who are well known for their character comedy work for many seasons past. Miss West will be remembered for her appearances on Broadway in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and such attractions. Murdock is an acrobatic comedian whose work has delighted the critics of the private projection room. Mary Kennedy, a pretty Jacksonville girl, is another Kalem player added to the Sis Hopkins company. In preparing for the Sis Hopkins Comedies the Kalem officials insisted upon securing the best players obtainable and giving them stories of the finest quality.

Pyramid Pictures Makes Bow

New Producing Company Formed by Arthur Smallwood. Who is President and General Manager.

ARTHUR N. SMALLWOOD, president and general manager of the newly organized Pyramid Pictures, Inc., 220 W. 42d street, New York City, announces it as the policy of the new concern to act as contracting producers in the making of feature productions and serials with possibly an occasional industrial feature. The new company will assume full charge of production including the preparation of script and casting of players when so desired.

Mr. Smallwood has been identified with the film industry as an independent producer since the beginning of the independent movement. Early in 1908 he was associated with the United States Film Company, which began operations in Cincinnati by making Western. Later he operated the business in the same company in New York, establishing an office in the then "film row" on 15th street, where the Champion, Defender, Lux and Yankee offices were located. The company then specialized in industrial, advertising and educational films, in which field Smallwood was one of the earliest pioneers.

When the Smallwood Film Corporation absorbed the United States Film Co., in 1913, Arthur N. Smallwood was made president and general manager of the company. The Smallwoood Corporation made features for Warner's Features, Inc., and later when the United Film Service was inaugurated, the company produced two brands for that program, one featuring Edwin August and Ruth Blair and the other Ethel Grandin.

Helen Greene

IN HELEN GREENE the Lubin Manufacturing Company has a star acknowledged to be one of the most versatile women players on the screen. Miss Greene, being born into a theatrical family, comes by her success naturally. Her father, Clay M. Greene, was one of the old troopers and production manager, a newspaper man and more recently a recognized playwright of no mean ability.

During the past two years Mr. Greene has devoted most of his time to writing photoplays for the Lubin Company, and a short time ago took over the direction of his own features.

Helen Greene.

Following the advice and experience of her father, Miss Greene rapidly rose from one of the lesser lights of the stage and developed her talent to such degree that she was accorded leads in some of the prominent stage productions, during which time she devoted her spare time to study.

About five months ago and just at the time when public recognition was hers, her father induced her to join his company of photoplayers and she made her debut on the screen in Lubin Films. Under the personal direction of Mr. Greene, this pretty and vivacious young lady has won for herself in a very short space of time, a wonderful following. Admirers of versatility have always found Helen Greene to be "just herself," whether playing the vampire, the heroine, a society matron, the fond mother or any of her ingenue parts. She is at home and at her ease on a horse, behind the wheel of a snorting speed car, in the water or on it.

The pictures in which Miss Greene shows herself to advantage are "Heartaches," "Beyond All Is Love," "Her Wayward Sister," "The Uplift," "Revenge" and another four-reel feature which is now in the course of completion.

Among young actresses who have come to the front in pictures, Miss Greene deserves a place by right native ability and hard work.

Essanay Releases for February

Will Have a Number of Good Subjects on the Programs of General Film and V-L-S-E.

ESSANAY offers an exceptionally strong program in February, both through the General Film Co., and the V-L-S-E. Two multiple reel features, five acts each, will be released through the V-L-S-E. These are "Vultures of Society," released February 14, and "The Discard," released February 28. "Vultures of Society" features Lillian Drew, Marguerite Clayton, E. H. Calvert and Ernest Maupain, and is directed by Mr. Calvert. "The Discard" was written by Charles Michelson, war correspondent and former editor of the Chicago American, and features Virginia Hammond, the former Frohman star and for four years leading woman with E. H. Sothern; Ernest Maupain, former leading man for Sarah Bernhardt, and Harry Beaumont.

"The Primitive Strain," on the General Film program, is one of the best north woods stories produced. It ends with a fight that is a fight. In fact, it was so realistic, and the players fought in such dead earnest that a doctor had to be called to treat two of the participants and an innocent bystander. One actor had a rib broken, another broke a blood vessel in the nose and a woman was knocked down and badly bruised by the overturning of a table. The play features Edward Arnold and Nell Craig.

"Beyond the Law," a three-reeler by Henry Oyen, is another strong release. This is a sequel to "The Snow Burner" and was published in Adventure magazine under the title of "The Snow Burner Pays." E. H. Calvert takes the part of the snow burner, Hell Camp Rivers, which he played in "The Snow Burner," while Marguerite Clayton takes the leading feminine role.

The story is of the northwest—a red blooded tale of lumber camp life. Mr. Calvert took a company of players to Virginia, Minn., where the play is being staged in the exact part of the country Mr. Oyen wrote about.

Among the other strong releases are: "The Rough Neck," featuring Harry Beaumont and Alton Goodrich; "The Man in Him," featuring G. M. Anderson; "Golden Lies," featuring Bryant Washburn and Elizabeth Burbridge; "Politeness Pays," featuring John Junior; two of George Ade's fables; a cartoon of Wallace Carlson on "Dreamy Dud Lost at Sea," and a cartoon on Chicago by the famous cartoonist, Vernon Howe Bailey.

Activities of Gaumont Directors

What the Producers of the Mutual Ally Are Doing—Many Productions Under Way.

THE month of February will see unusual activities at the winter studios of the Gaumont company at Jacksonville, Fla. The policy of giving a director time to prepare for a new production is meeting with unqualified success. Three big feature photoplays are always in work, and the fourth director is planning his new production.

The first three February releases have of course been completed in "As a Woman Sows," "The Idol of the Stage," and the first Marguerite Courtot photoplay, "The Dead Alive."

Director William F. Haddock is just filming the last scenes of "I Accuse," the Marjorie Howe story picturized by George D. Proctor, Gaumont scenario editor. It will be released February 21 with Alexander Gaden in the leading role. Miss Helen Marten is playing opposite him.

The first March release Gaumont will make as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, will be "According to the Law." For this production, which will be directed by Richard Garrick, supervising director of Gaumont stock companies, Howard Hall has been secured. Mr. Hall is an actor of forceful personality who has only recently turned to the screen. He has been featured in numerous Broadway productions and has starred at the head of his own company for years. "According to the Law" was written by Paul M. Bryan and Joseph H. Trant.

An East Indian village is now rising on the water front along the St. John's river opposite the city of Jacksonville. Here Director Edwin Middleton is already taking scenes of East Indian life, which is the setting for a story written by O. A. Nelson.

Beautiful Marguerite Courtot will be the star in the next photodrama to be directed by Henry J. Vernot for Gaumont. Paul M. Bryan, who wrote "The Idol of the Stage," has written the new play with Miss Courtot in mind. It is called "Feathertop," and the influence of the story of this name by Nathaniel Hawthorne upon the persons in the photodrama is so strong that they are vitally affected.

"Most Extraordinary"

Story That a Kalem "Ham" Comedy Makes a Dumb Soldier Speak.

FROM England comes one of the most amazing stories of the motion picture in war times that has yet been chronicled. Had it been the creation of a publicity man the story could not have been more startling. It tells of a wounded British soldier, robbed of his speech by a gas bomb, and invalided home. He attended a picture theater where a "Ham and Bud" comedy was being shown and was so amused by the comedians that his speech was suddenly restored. The account of the event as printed was given in a letter from Mr. Arthur Tench, lessee and manager of the Norbury Palais de Luxe.

"'It will interest you to hear of another instance of the usefulness of the picture theater in the stirring times of the present day. Cyclist J. Hopkins, of the 9th Div. Army Cycle Corps, now at the Stamford Road War Hospital, Norbury, was badly gassed at Ypres. He entirely lost his power of speech, and was invalided home. It was feared he would be dumb for life, and things looked pretty black for the poor fellow. A good angel, however, in the form of one of my lady patrons, brought him along one evening to my theater to see the pictures, and he was so affected by the eccentricities of Ham and Bud in a comedy I was then showing that his speech was entirely and at once restored, and although the gallant fellow came into the hall absolutely dumb and had been so since the fateful day in Flanders, he went out, to the astonishment of the hospital authorities, chatting merrily. Additional interest is perhaps lent to this case by the fact that Cyclist Hopkins has had some years' experience of the moving picture profession, his most recent post having been that of chief operator and electrician at the St. George's theater, Kendal. He is now going back to the front, and I am sure carries with him our best wishes.'"
